The Quṣṣāṣ of Early Islam

BY LYALL R. ARMSTRONG

BRILL

The Quṣṣāṣ of Early Islam

Islamic History and Civilization

STUDIES AND TEXTS

Editorial Board

Hinrich Biesterfeldt Sebastian Günther

Honorary Editor

Wadad Kadi

VOLUME 139

The Quṣṣāṣ of Early Islam

Ву

Lyall R. Armstrong

BRILL

LEIDEN | BOSTON

Cover illustration: Scholars in a library in a mosque. Arabic miniature from a work by Al-Hariri, manuscript, 12th Century. © The British Library Board.

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

Names: Armstrong, Lyall R., author.

Title: The qussas of early Islam / by Lyall R. Armstrong.

Description: Leiden ; Boston : Brill,  $\left[\texttt{2017}\right]|$  Series: Islamic history and civilization ; v. 139  $\mid$  Includes bibliographical references and index.

Identifiers: LCCN 2016040236 (print) | LCCN 2016041035 (ebook) | ISBN 9789004335516 (hardback) : alk. paper) | ISBN 9789004335523 (e-book)

Subjects: LCSH: Islamic preaching—History. | Islam—Functionaries—History.

Classification: LCC BP184.25 .A73 2017 (print) | LCC BP184.25 (ebook) | DDC

297.6/1—dc23

LC record available at https://lccn.loc.gov/2016040236

Typeface for the Latin, Greek, and Cyrillic scripts: "Brill". See and download: brill.com/brill-typeface.

ISSN 0929-2403 ISBN 978-90-04-33551-6 (hardback) ISBN 978-90-04-33552-3 (e-book)

Copyright 2017 by Koninklijke Brill NV, Leiden, The Netherlands.

Koninklijke Brill NV incorporates the imprints Brill, Brill Hes & De Graaf, Brill Nijhoff, Brill Rodopi and Hotei Publishing.

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, translated, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic, mechanical, photocopying, recording or otherwise, without prior written permission from the publisher.

Authorization to photocopy items for internal or personal use is granted by Koninklijke Brill NV provided that the appropriate fees are paid directly to The Copyright Clearance Center, 222 Rosewood Drive, Suite 910, Danvers, MA 01923, USA. Fees are subject to change.

This book is printed on acid-free paper and produced in a sustainable manner.

For my wife April

•

Contents

	Acknowledgements XI
	Abbreviations XII
	Introduction 1
1	Qaṣaṣ: Textual Evidence 14
	Religious Qaṣaṣ 15
	Divine Will and Human Responsibility (qadar) 16
	Death, the Final Judgment and the After-life 21
	Exemplars—Pre-Islamic Prophets 33
	The Sunna of the Prophet Muḥammad 39
	Legal Rulings 41
	Religious Knowledge ('ilm) 45
	Martial Qaṣaṣ 49
	The Conquest of Syria 50
	Yazīd b. Shajara al-Rahāwī (d. 58/677) 60
	Sulaymān b. Ṣurad and the Rebellion of the Tawwābūn
	( 65/685 ) 64
	Khārijī Quṣṣāṣ 65
	Religio-political Qaṣaṣ : Abū Dharr al-Ghifārī 71
2	Quṣṣāṣ Associations: With Whom Are the Quṣṣāṣ Associated? 75
	Qur'ān Reciters (qurrā') 76
	Qur'ān Commentators (al-mufassirūn) 80
	Percentages and Reputations 82
	Quṣṣāṣ Representation in Tafsīr 86
	The Tafsīr of 'Abd al-Razzāq al-Ṣan'ānī 86
	The Tafsīr of Ṭabarī 87
	Isrāʾīliyyāt 90
	The Quṣṣāṣ and Isrāʾīliyyāt 92
	The Quṣṣāṣ on Moses 94
	The Quṣṣāṣ on Abraham 95
	The Tafsīr of Muqātil b. Sulaymān: The Merging of Tafsīr with Qaṣaṣ and Isrāʾīliyyāt 97
	The Quṣṣāṣ as Qur'ān Commentators 110
	Ḥadīth Transmitters (muḥaddithūn) 112
	The Critical Image of the Qussas in Hadīth Transmission 112

VIII CONTENTS

```
Statistical Analysis of the Reputations of Quṣṣāṣ in Ḥadīth Conflicting Sentiments on the Reliability of the Qussas in Hadīth 117
             Unidentified Qussās 119
             The Qussās as Hadīth Transmitters 120
       Jurists (Fuqahā') 120
       Judges (Qudāt)
       Orators (Khutabā') 131
       Admonishers (Wu"āz) 133
       Mudhakkirūn
             The Prophet as Qāṣṣ and Mudhakkir 136
            Statistical Analysis and Textual Evidence 137
       Ascetics 146
       The Qāṣṣ as Scholar
3 Qaṣaṣ Sessions: The Skills and Conduct of the Quṣṣāṣ
                                                        153
       Skills
              154
            Ilm
                  155
            Lisān
                    157
            Bayān 159
       Conduct 166
            Decorum 166
            Posture 170
            Location 172
            Time 175
            Malpractices 178
                    Pride: "Know me (i'rifūnī)!" 178
                    Loudness
                              180
                    Raising Hands 181
                    Mixed-gender Meetings 185
                    Swooning
       Qaṣaṣ Sessions
                        189
4 The Quṣṣāṣ: Conformists or Innovators?
       Qaṣaṣ at the Time of the Prophet
             The Prophet as a Qāṣṣ
             The Prophet with a Qāṣṣ
       Qaşaş under the Rāshidūn Caliphs
                                          198
            Abū Bakr "al-Ṣiddīq"
                                 198
             Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb
                                 199
```

CONTENTS

Uthmān b. Affān 206
Alī b. Abī Ṭālib 216
Qaṣaṣ and Religio-political Movements 220
Qaṣaṣ as an Innovation 221
Quṣṣāṣ and the Apocalypse 225
The Quṣṣās as a Beneficial Innovation 229
The Qussās as Conformists or Innovators 231

5 The Quṣṣāṣ during the Umayyad Period 233

Muʻāwiya b. Abī Sufyān (r. 41–60/661–80) 235
The Counter-caliphate of 'Abd Allāh b. al-Zubayr (c. 63–72/682–91) 240
Marwān b. al-Ḥakam (r. 64–5/684–5) 241
'Abd al-Malik b. Marwān (r. 65–86/685–705) 243
Sulaymān b. 'Abd al-Malik (r. 96–9/715–7) 259
'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz (r. 99–101/717–20) 261
Yazīd b. 'Abd al-Malik (r. 101–5/720–4) 266
Hishām b. 'Abd al-Malik (r. 105–25/724–43) 266
Marwān b. Muḥammad (r. 127–32/744–50) and the Fall of the Umayyads 269
The Qussās under the Umayyads 274

6 Conclusion 277

Appendix: Biographical Sketches of the Qussās of Early Islam 285

Bibliography 315 Index of Modern Authors 334 Index of Sources 335 Index of Subjects 336

Acknowledgements

This book could not have been written without the tireless work and support of many teachers and colleagues. I am especially beholden to Prof. Wadād al-Qāḍī whose astute insights and patient guidance have left an indelible mark on this research and whose investment exceeded what could be expected from any advisor or counselor. I would also like to thank Prof. Fred Donner and Prof. Tahera Qutbuddin for their input and encouragement throughout the course of this project. My first exposure to the <code>quṣṣāṣ</code> was under the tutelage of Prof. Merlin Swartz by means of his edition of Ibn al-Jawzī's <code>Kitāb al-quṣṣās wa-l-mudhakkirīn</code>, and I thank him sincerely for the support that he has provided over the years.

The majority of the research for and writing of this book was conducted in Beirut at the American University of Beirut. Both the Center for Arab and Middle East Studies, under the directorship of Prof. John Meloy and Prof. Nadia El-Cheikh, and the Department of History and Archaeology, under the chairmanship of Prof. Samir Seikaly and Prof. Helen Sader, graciously allowed me access to the University and its many resources, and I offer to them my sincerest appreciation.

I am very grateful to Prof. Sebastian Günther and Prof. Hinrich Biesterfeldt, editors of Brill's Islamic History and Civilization series, for accepting this project in the series. They and the staff at Brill have been very helpful throughout the publication of this book. In particular, I want to thank Teddi Dols, Kathy van Vliet and Ester Lels for their patient support as well as Prof. Elizabeth Bishop for her many helpful corrections.

Above all, I am indebted to my wonderful wife April. While I devoted an enormous amount of time to this work, she maintained a home with four children, obtained success in her own field of expertise and achieved a number of other personal accomplishments as well, including completing her own advanced degree; "many women have done well, but you excel them all" (Proverbs 31:29). And to my four wonderful children, thank you for patiently bearing with me through long hours of pre-occupation with my work.

Finally, a host of family and friends, more numerous than can be listed, upheld me and my family, in a variety of ways, throughout this project. We are indebted to you for your unfailing support.

Abbreviations

BSOAS	Bulletin of the School of Oriental and African Studies
EI1	Encyclopaedia of Islam, 1st edition. Edited by M. Th. Houtsma,
	A.J. Wensinck, T.W. Arnold, W. Heffening, and E. Lévi-Provençal.
	Leiden, 1927.
EI2	Encyclopaedia of Islam, 2nd edition. Edited by P. Bearman
	Th. Bianquis, C.E. Bosworth, E. von Donzol, and W.P. Heinrichs.
	Leiden, 1960–2002.
EQ	Encyclopaedia of the Qur'an. Edited by Jane McAuliffe, et al. 6 vols.
	Leiden, 2001–2006.
GAS	Fuat Sezgin, Geschichte des arabischen Schriftums. Leiden,
	1963–2000.
JAOS	Journal of the American Oriental Society
JNES	Journal of Near Eastern Studies
JSAI	Jerusalem Studies in Arabic and Islam
TG	Josef van Ess, Theologie und Gesellschaft im 2. und 3. Jahrhundert
	Hidschra: eine Geschichte des religiösen Denkens im frühen Islam,
	6 vols. Berlin, 1991–7.
ZDMG	Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft

Introduction

Some time during the latter portions of the first Islamic century, the renowned scholar 'Āmir b. Sharāḥīl al-Sha'bī (d.c. 103/721) passed through the Syrian city of Palmyra, as had many caraveneers who traversed the desert before him. During his sojourn in the city he happened upon a man, identified only as a  $q\bar{a}$ , holding a teaching session. Al-Sha'bī reported that this  $q\bar{a}$ , was instructing his audience on aspects of the eschaton, saying: "God has created two trumpets each having two blasts: the blast of death (sa'aqa) and the blast of resurrection ( $qiy\bar{a}ma$ )." Al-Sha'bī, taking issue with this teaching, challenged the  $q\bar{a}$ , informing him that there was only one trumpet with two blasts. The  $q\bar{a}$ , however, insisted that he received his information from reliable sources that he traced to the Prophet himself and, therefore, did not acquiesce to al-Sha'bī's rebuke. Furthermore, his audience rose up and beat al-Sha'bī with their shoes for disagreeing with their teacher. Indeed he reported they did not stop beating him until he "swore to them that God created thirty trumpets each having but a single blast."

This story illustrates the general perception of the early Islamic qussas (sg.  $q\bar{a}ss$ ). It is one in a number of traditions that depict them as second-rate religious figures lingering on the fringes of Islamic orthodoxy and even, at times, contributing directly to the corruption of the faith, and this general perception has been reiterated in most modern studies of their class. Additionally, and stemming from the lexical meaning of qassa as "to tell stories," the qussas have largely been associated with storytelling, and, thus, have been identified by most scholars as "storytellers." It is believed that they drew most of their stories, or, worse yet, fabricated them, from accounts of the ancient prophets (qisasal-anbiyasal-an independent judgment on the trumpet blasts of the end of times. As a result, they are often set in opposition to the "orthodox" teachers of the Islamic community and are believed to have told their stories to the uneducated and gullible masses, who, to al-Sha'bī's ill fortune, seem to have been loyal and vigorous supporters of their qussas; thus, they have at times been identified specifically as "popular" preachers. This image, however, was not as ubiquitous as previously believed.

<sup>1</sup> Ibn al-Jawzī, Kitāb al-quṣṣāṣ wa-l-mudhakkirīn, ed. and trans. Merlin Swartz (Beirut, 1971), 97–98 (translation taken from Swartz, 177–178); al-Suyūṭī, Taḥdhār al-khawāṣṣ min akādhāb al-quṣṣāṣ, ed. Muḥammad b. Luṭfī al-Ṣabbāgh (Beirut, 1972), 152–154; al-Qārī al-Harawī, al-Asrār al-marfūʿa fī-l-akhbār al-mawḍūʿa, ed. Muḥammad b. Luṭfī al-Sabbāgh (Beirut, 1971), 57. See also Ignaz Goldziher, Muslim Studies II, ed. S.M. Stern and trans. C.R. Barber and S.M. Stern (London, 1971), 156–158; Adam Mez, The Renaissance of Islam, translated by S. Khuda Bukhsh and D.S. Margoliouth (London, 1937), 350–351.

Much of the confusion surrounding the qussās is a result of the sources themselves, giving varying reports about them and painting a complex, and at times contradictory, image of them. An essential contributing factor to this dilemma is the large number and many types of Islamic sources addressing the quṣṣāṣ. In fact, no genre of Islamic literature can be overlooked when researching them. References to them abound in chronicles (both universal and local), hadīth compilations, biographical dictionaries and Qur'an commentaries. In addition, more specialized works, like those on Sufism and asceticism, such as Abū Ṭālib al-Makkī's (d. 386/998) Qūt al-qulūb or Abū Nu'aym al-Isfahānī's (d. 430/1038) Hilyat al-awliyā', as well as literary works, such as al-Jāḥiz's (d. 255/869) al-Bayān wa-l-tabyīn, are also important sources for our knowledge of the qussās. Naturally, each of these works tends to approach the qussās from the angle of the conceptual framework of their genre. Consequently, we learn of their involvement in military expeditions from chronicles and works on the conquests (futūh). Ḥadīth works and biographical dictionaries often emphasize the scholarly reputations of the  $quss\bar{a}s$ , casting light, in particular, on their role in hadīth transmission. While works on Sufism and asceticism highlight the piety of the qussās, they also can be critical of them, in order to distinguish Sufi sessions from those of the quṣṣāṣ.² This diversity of literary genres indicates that the quṣṣāṣ were, themselves, a diverse group with interests and affiliations in many segments of early Islamic society. It is not surprising then that the sources present multiple images of them. For the researcher, the breadth of the information on them is a boon, because of its quantity, as well as an obstacle, because of its range.

Three works written by prolific and distinguished Islamic scholars of the medieval period focused specifically on the quṣṣāṣ and were largely critical of them. These works impacted modern scholars' evaluation of the quṣṣāṣ. The earliest and most important by far is 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. 'Alī b. al-Jawzī's (d. 597/1200) Kitāb al-quṣṣāṣ wa-l-mudhakkirīn, "The Book of the Quṣṣāṣ and the Admonishers." A second treatise,  $Ah\bar{a}d\bar{\imath}th$  al- $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ , "The Hadith Transmissions of the  $Quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ ," was written by the famous medieval  $Hanbal\bar{\imath}$  scholar Ahmad b. Taymiyya (d. 728/1328) who argued that the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  fabricated and misused  $had\bar{\imath}th$ . And lastly, the prolific 'Abd al-Rahman b. Ab $\bar{\imath}$  Bakr al-Suy $\bar{\imath}t\bar{\imath}$  (d. 911/1505) wrote a extensive critique of the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  entitled  $Tahdh\bar{\imath}r$  al- $khaw\bar{a}ṣṣ min ak\bar{\imath}dh\bar{\imath}b$  al- $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ , "Warning the educated about the lies of the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ "; he began his work with numerous citations of the famous and widely-circulated Prophetic  $had\bar{\imath}th$  damning those who lie about the Prophet to hell-fire and, thus, not too subtly revealing his thoughts on the final abode of the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ . While the latter two works are certainly important, Ibn al-Jawz $\bar{\imath}$ 's  $Kit\bar{a}b$  al- $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  has proven to be the most influential of all.

<sup>2</sup> Johannes Pedersen noted this especially with regard to Abū Ṭālib al-Makkī's Qūt al-qulūb; see his "Islamic Preacher: Wā'iz, Mudhakkir, Qāṣṣ," Ignace Goldziher Memorial Volume I, eds. S. Löwinger and J. Somogyi (Budapest, 1948), 233, 243–249.

Merlin Swartz published the first modern critical edition of the Kitāb al-quṣṣāṣ, along with an English translation of the work, in 1971. In spite of the lateness of this edition, Ibn al-Jawzī's work already exerted a profound influence on the modern study of the quṣṣāṣ since the work of the inimitable Ignaz Goldziher, who read it in manuscript form and depended heavily on it, with approximately one-quarter of his citations in his analysis of the quṣṣāṣ in his  $Muslim\ Studies\ II\ coming\ from\ it.^6\ This\ Kitāb\ al-quṣṣāṣ\ is\ the\ most\ comprehensive\ compendium\ of\ traditions\ about\ the\ quṣṣāṣ\ compiled\ by\ any\ Muslim\ writer. In it, Ibn\ al-Jawzī, according\ to\ Swartz, set\ out\ to\ refute\ those\ who\ categorically\ condemn\ all\ <math>quṣṣāṣ$  ("preachers") and wu``āz ("sermonizers"), to\ criticize\ certain\ aberrant\ tendencies\ among\ the\ quṣṣāṣ and wu``āz and to\ provide\ directives\ for\ the\ quṣṣāṣ and wu``āz in the conduct of their meetings; he did not, however, censure\ them\ outright. Indeed, Ibn\ al-Jawzi—a\ public\ preacher\ and\ teacher\ in\ his\ own\ right—often\ defended\ them.

Ibn al-Jawzī defended the legitimacy of qaṣaṣ ("preaching") when properly exercised by listing among the ranks of his quṣṣāṣ and the mudhakkirūn a number of luminaries of early Islam, including the Prophet Muḥammad, Abū Bakr, 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb, and 'Alī b. Abī Ṭālib.<sup>9</sup> With this list, Ibn al-Jawzī seems to

<sup>3</sup> Ibn Taymiyya, Aḥādīth al-quṣṣāṣ, ed. Muḥammad b. Luṭfī al-Ṣabbāgh (Beirut, 1972).

<sup>4</sup> Al-Suyūṭī, Taḥdhīr, 8-65.

<sup>5</sup> Since Swartz's publication, two other editions of the Kitāb al-quṣṣāṣ have been published; one by Muḥammad b. Luṭfī al-Ṣabbāgh (Beirut, 1983) and another by Qāsim al-Sāmarrā'ī (Riyadh, 1983).

<sup>6</sup> See Goldziher's footnotes in Muslim Studies II, 149-159.

<sup>7</sup> See Swartz's introduction to the Kitāb al-quṣṣāṣ, 52–55.

<sup>8</sup> See Swartz's introduction to the Kitāb al-quṣṣāṣ, 55-61.

<sup>9</sup> He also defended the legitimacy of qaṣaṣ by recording traditions which speak of it in a favorable light, such as a handful of sayings from Aḥmad b. Ḥanbal praising reputable quṣṣāṣ; see Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 19–20.

argue that with such distinguished personalities as these, qaṣaṣ cannot be all that bad. However, his list presents one chief problem. It is often not possible to know whether the person in question was a  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ, a mudhakkir or a  $w\bar{a}$ ʿiz. In fact, while Ibn al-Jawzī begins his treatise with definitions of each, he also notes that "the term  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ has come to embrace all three" and often uses the terms synonymously. This appears to be the case with the term  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ for, while the designation mudhakkir and  $w\bar{a}$ ʿiz never came to be viewed critically in the community, the  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ eventually was associated with charlatanism and buffoonery. Obviously, the terms were not completely synonymous.

This generally critical perception of the Islamic  $q\bar{a}ss$  has held sway in modern scholarship since the work of Goldziher who described them as primarily embellishers and fabricators of religious stories attempting to interpret the Qur'an and promote religious devotion among the masses, often with the subsidiary intent of lining their own pockets with largesse from their audiences. 12 He also noted, however, that while the quṣṣāṣ were generally an unorthodox, if not unruly, bunch, they did have in their number reputable scholars, specifically in the early period of Islamic history, and that they were religious teachers and also active in encouraging the soldiers of the Muslim armies to fight valiantly.<sup>13</sup> Indeed, the renowned scholar Charles Pellat, following Goldziher, who he claimed provided "the most thorough study of this social group," may best sum up the prevailing view of the quṣṣāṣ; he said that they related "fabulous deeds and marvelous stories which the credulous masses took for gospel truth, thus placing the authentic Islamic tradition in real jeopardy. Because of this conduct, they incurred the theoretical and practical condemnation of the religious authorities." 14 This association between the  $quss\bar{a}s$  and fanciful stories led to their being identified by some scholars as a primary source for the fabrication both of the predominantly narrative-style exegetical material

<sup>10</sup> Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 11 (translation taken from Swartz, 98). See also Pedersen, "Islamic Preacher," 226–232.

<sup>11</sup> S.D. Goitein, "Individualism and Conformity in Classical Islam," Individualism and Conformity in Classical Islam, eds. Aman Banani and Speros Vryonis, Jr. (Wiesbaden, 1977), 5.

<sup>12</sup> Ignaz Goldziher, Schools of Koranic Commentators, ed. and trans. Wolfgang H. Behn (Wiesbaden, 2006), 36–38; idem, Muslim Studies II, 149–159.

<sup>13</sup> Goldziher, Muslim Studies II, 149–159.

<sup>14</sup> Charles Pellat, "Ķāṣṣ," EI2, 4:733–735. See also his discussion of the quṣṣāṣ in his Le milieu basrien (Paris, 1953), 108ff. For similar analyses, see Duncan Black MacDonald, "Ķiṣṣa," EI1, 2:1042–1044; Louis Massignon, Essai sur les origines du lexique technique de la mystique musulmane (Paris, 1922), 144.

on the Qur'ān and of Prophetic  $had\bar{\iota}th.^{15}$  Some scholars, based on the assumption that the  $quss\bar{a}s$  were primarily storytellers, proposed that their stories laid the groundwork for the literary works of later ages, such as Alf layla wa-layla, "A Thousand and One Nights". Indeed, even when it was admitted that not everything related to the  $quss\bar{a}s$  was gloomy—that some  $quss\bar{a}s$ , in fact, possessed the requisite knowledge to be judges, for example—these researchers were often drawn back to this basic image. qussalass

While the qussas seem to have been primarily men of religious interests, there are a number of traditions describing their political affiliations and the role that they played in the political movements of the early period. Exactly when these affiliations began to form is unclear, although some believe that they exerted political influence by the time of the first Civil War (fitna), or even earlier. Jamāl Jūda argues that once the previously reputable preachers became tainted by the political trends of the early period they descended into fabrications and falsehoods. In fact, the majority of the qussas, according to

On their role in Qurʾānic interpretation, see John Wansbrough, Qurʾānic Studies (Oxford, 1977), 122ff; Patricia Crone, Meccan Trade and the Rise of Islam (Princeton, 1987), 213–216. On ḥadīth in particular, see Muḥammad b. Luṭfī al-Sabbāgh, in his introduction to his edition of Ibn al-Jawzī's Kitāb al-quṣṣāṣ, 77; and James Robson who follows Goldziher in his article, "Ḥadīth," EI2, 3:24.

<sup>16</sup> Wadīʿa Ṭāhā al-Najm, "al-Qaṣaṣ: Nashaʾtuhu fī-l-Islām wa taṭawwaruhu," Majallat Kulliyat al-Ādāb Jāmiʿat Baghdād, 1967, 166–178 (henceforth "Qaṣaṣ"); idem, al-Qaṣaṣ wa-l-quṣṣāṣ fī-l-adab al-islāmī (Kuwait, 1972) (henceforth Quṣṣāṣ). For her discussion of the growth of stories from oral to literary, see "Qaṣaṣ," 177–178 and Quṣṣāṣ, 87–152. Pellat, who seems to have not been familiar with al-Najm's work since he fails to cite her in his El2 article "Ķāṣṣ," proposed the same evolutionary development also mentioning Alf layla wa-layla as an example of the culmination of the process; see "Kāṣṣ," 4:735.

Goldziher, Muslim Studies II, 152–153, Johannes Pedersen is a good example of this. In his "Islamic Preacher," he noted a number of positive attributes of the quṣṣāṣ; see 233, 237, 237, 243–249. Then, in a later article, he notes the Sufi tendency to criticize the excesses of the preachers; see his "The Criticism of the Islamic Preacher," Die Welt des Islams 2 (1953), 215–231. Jamāl Jūda, "al-Qaṣaṣ wa-l-quṣṣāṣ fī ṣadr al-Islām: bayna al-wāqi' al-tārīkhī wa-l-naẓra al-fiqhiyya," Dirāsāt tārīkhiyya 33/34 (Damascus, 1989), 105–141. See also Jonathan Berkey's excellent monograph on the medieval preacher, Popular preaching and religious authority in the medieval Islamic Near East (Seattle, 2001), 21.

<sup>18</sup> Al-Najm, "Qaşaş," 170–1; idem, Quşşāş, 32–33; Jūda, "Qaşaş," 127; Khalil 'Athamina, "al-Qaşaş: Its emergence, religious origin and its socio-political impact on early Muslim society," Studia Islamica, 76 (1992), 59–74. See also Malak Abyad, al-Tarbiya wa-l-thaqāfa al-ʿarabiyya-islāmiyya fī-l-Shām wa-l-Jazīra khilāl al-qurūn al-thalātha al-ūlā li-l-hijra (Beirut, 1980), 307–314.

<sup>19</sup> Jūda, "Qaṣaṣ," 126-128.

my research, maintained solid reputations throughout the Umayyad period. Furthermore, in light of the highly politically charged nature of many of the traditions pertaining to the fitna, whether they are from qussas, traditionists (muhhadithun) or historians (akhbaris), the proposal that it was the defining point in the decline of the reliability of the qussas, must be reconsidered.

In spite of the significant contributions of the scholars mentioned above to our perception of the qussās in early Islam, two basic assumptions permeate these studies and have contributed to what I believe are essential misunderstandings of the character and role of the early qussās. First, as I have mentioned above, the qussās are assumed to have been storytellers in that they related stories of a narrative kind. While on its surface this assumption seems logical, considering the accepted meaning of qassa as "to tell stories," it is not entirely accurate. An important example of this assumption is John Wansbrough's and Patricia Crone's argument that the historical-exegetical material on the Qur'an came from the stories of the qussas, although they are by no means alone in this assumption. <sup>20</sup> In essence, this concept of the  $quss\bar{q}s$ as tellers of stories has been discernible in modern studies since Goldziher's studies on the qussās in both Qur'ān commentary and ḥadīth.<sup>21</sup> In fact, while it is true that some Islamic sources, as will be seen below, also depicted the  $quss\bar{a}s$  as tellers of stories, the statements of the early  $quss\bar{a}s$  reveal thematic and stylistic interests broader than simply narrative.

Second, and on the other side of the spectrum, lies the equally problematic tendency, evident in some modern studies, of defining  $qa\bar{s}a\bar{s}$  and the  $qu\bar{s}s\bar{a}\bar{s}$  too broadly to the point of almost denuding the terms of any independent meaning. To be sure, part of the problem stems from the sources themselves. A "preacher" was a  $w\bar{a}$  'iz, a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$ , or a mudhakkir, yet it is not clear what distinguished one from the other. Furthermore, some studies considered sayings of a preacher to be  $qa\bar{s}a\bar{s}$  ("storytelling" in this sense) even if there was no textual evidence that this was the case. However, because of the often-imprecise designations of the genre of a particular tradition or statement in the Islamic sources, either an assumption that whenever a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  spoke, his statement was a story ( $qis\bar{s}a$ ), or, even more importantly, that anyone who told a story was a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$ , would not be valid.<sup>22</sup> As a matter of fact, this was rarely the case. Since a

<sup>20</sup> Wansbrough, Qur'ānic Studies, 122ff; Crone, Meccan Trade, 213–216.

<sup>21</sup> See n. 1. As mentioned above, Pellat also maintained that the quṣṣāṣ were basically tellers of "fabulous deeds and marvelous stories." See his "Kāṣṣ," El2, 4:734-735.

Malak Abyad, for example, stated that the famous Companion of the Prophet Abū al-Dardā' (d. 32/652) stood on the steps of the Umayyad mosque telling stories, when in fact the text she used does not indicate that he was giving a qiṣṣa but that he was merely large number of the qussas held other positions and engaged in other activities in the community, their statements were equally indicative of their roles as judge  $(q\bar{a}d\bar{\iota})$ , legist  $(faq\bar{\iota}h)$  or Qur'ān interpreter (mufassir), and not, primarily, as a  $q\bar{a}ss$ .

This lack of specificity seems to have contributed to a very general definition of the role of the qussas. Khalil 'Athamina gives an accurate summation of the widely held view of the qass as someone who was involved in a number of religious matters "from interpretation of the Qur'an; through traditions of the Prophet (hadath), stories of ancient prophets, and moral preaching; to admonition against the evil of sin and transgression." This definition, however, describes almost any Islamic religious teacher; and although the definition may not be entirely inaccurate even when applied to the qass, it is still unclear exactly what qass was and what role a qass played in the early community of Muslims.

23

addressing a crowd; Compare Abyad's Tarbiya, 309, with Ibn 'Asākir,  $T\bar{a}r\bar{i}kh$   $Mad\bar{i}nat$  Dimashq, ed. 'Umar b. Gharāma al-'Amrawī (Beirut, 1995), 47:132–133. See also Jamāl Jūda who based much of his description of the topics of the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  on selected narratives ascribed to various  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ . While this may account for the general themes in which a particular  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  showed interest, it does not give any indication of what comprised a qiṣṣa or what a scholar was doing when he was giving qaṣaṣ. Thus, Jūda gave forty-five examples of topics related by al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī. While these were statements allegedly made by al-Ḥasan, it is uncertain how many of them were identified by the sources as qaṣaṣ statements; see Jūda, "Qaṣaṣ," 110–5. In fact, I was able to find only one statement made by al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī that was identified explicitly as a qiṣṣa; see Chapter One, 23.

wu" $\bar{a}z$ , they were never identified directly by the Islamic sources as qussas or as having given qasas.24

I restricted the source material to a direct connection to the term qassa and its derivatives in order to deal with some of the more problematic aspects of this material. Among the most cogent are the overlap, and therefore confusion, in terminology. The distinction between a  $q\bar{a}ss$  and a mudhakkir or a  $ma^iss$ , as noted above, is not always entirely clear. This is most evident in Ibn al-Jawzī, and this lack of clarity has extended into modern works on the  $qussa^iss$ , due, in part, to the pull of Ibn al-Jawzī. This is also evident in the varied descriptions of certain reports on qassas and the qussas. Indeed, an identical report can be identified as a hadith,  $ma^issas$  or dhikr in some sources and in another as a qissas—these forms of overlap will be noted throughout the present study. On its surface this overlap indicates that these terms are synonymous. However, the terms cannot have been entirely congruous because only one, qassas, eventually developed a negative connotation.

Secondly, since my interest lies in the qussas of early Islam, I have set the chronological parameters of the present study at the end of the Umayyad period. This is not intended to imply that at the end of the Umayyad period there was a discernible change in the nature of qasas. Indeed, one of the objectives of my research is to clarify the nature of early qasas in order to lay a foundation for determining why the qussas were eventually perceived as mediocre scholars, even charlatans. This transformation, like much in intellectual history, is not necessarily bound by the political movements of the day. However, since I have not yet been able to establish precisely when this transition occurred, though it appears to have bridged the Umayyad and 'Abbāsid periods, I have chosen to limit the project to the Umayyad period. Hopefully, future research will build on this current work and illuminate our understanding of the qussas of the post-Umayyad periods and establish a more firm time period for the transformation of their reputations.<sup>25</sup> As a result, I have restricted the pool of information to people living and events occurring prior to 132/750. Some

It is worth noting that Ibn al-Jawzī includes 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb among the quṣṣāṣ and mudhakkirīn. He noted, for example, in his introduction that the quṣṣāṣ related inauthentic stories of ancient peoples, namely those of ancient Israel. He condemned this by citing a tradition in which the Prophet told 'Umar to avoid such stories; see his Quṣṣāṣ, 10. The fact that Ibn al-Jawzī rarely explicitly identifies a man in his list as either a qāṣṣ or a mudhakkir made it impossible to simply integrate every name into my research as a qāṣṣ.

For studies on preaching in the medieval period, see Jonathan Berkey Popular preaching and religious authority in the medieval Islamic Near East (Seattle, 2001) and Linda Gale Jones The power of oratory in the medieval Muslim world (Cambridge, 2012).

 $quṣṣ\bar{a}$ ş who died after the year 132/750 have been included in the research because they acted as  $quṣṣ\bar{a}$ ş prior to 132/750.

This periodization reveals another problem in the material on the qussas of the early period. The basic questions surrounding the qussas are not solely connected to the meaning of qasas or to the identification of the role of the qussas. In addition to these important matters are a number of salient issues relating to chronology, such as the origins of the qussas, the development in their function over time, especially in their affiliations with religio-political movements of the early period. For example, traditions proposing to give the origins of qasas and those that connect qasas or specific qussas to Umayyad caliphs and administrators purportedly provide insight into historical progressions as well as meaning and identification. This raw material provided the foundation for the exploration of these issues of chronology in the latter portions of the present study.

Lastly, because of the lack of clarity in the precise meaning of the term qa\$a\$ as it pertains to early Islam, a direct translation of the term is fundamentally problematic. The term is not reserved only for narratives, as will be demonstrated in Chapter One. As a result, a  $q\bar{a}\$\$$  was not, in the most precise sense, a "storyteller." In addition, many qu\$\$a\$\$ of early Islam were considered by the Islamic community to have been reputable scholars and were numbered among the scholarly class, who were later subsumed under the title ' $ulam\bar{a}$ '. Likewise, the qu\$\$a\$\$ were not necessarily "popular" preachers, if the intended meaning of "popular" is to be understood as a teacher of frivolous learning interacting essentially with the uneducated masses. Consequently, the qu\$\$a\$\$ were, as it appears, simply "preachers". They taught on a number of religious and even political themes by means of an equally diverse array of styles defying, therefore, easy categorization.

However, the translation of  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  as "preacher" comes with its own problems manifested most clearly in the definitions of cognates of the verb  $qas\bar{s}a$ . If a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  is a "preacher" as opposed to a "storyteller," then what is a  $qis\bar{s}a$  or  $qas\bar{s}s$ ? Herein lies the complexity of designations.  $Qas\bar{s}a$ , translatable as "preaching," refers to the act of conveying some form of instruction from the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}s$ . The term  $qis\bar{s}a$  (pl.  $qis\bar{s}a\bar{s}s$ ) is more problematic; "story" does not adequately encompass the breadth of the term in the early Islamic period. In addition, while "sermon" is an appropriate rendering under certain circumstances, it seems better reserved for the term  $wa\bar{s}s$ . As a result, a  $qis\bar{s}sa$ , during the period of time in question, seems to indicate any general piece of instruction given by a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}sa$  when acting as a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}sa$ , as opposed to a particular genre of statement, such as narratives. The term incorporates a number of different types of instruction, including actual stories, verses of poetry, legal rulings,  $had\bar{t}ta$ , as well as martial statements given on the field of battle. This representative list of forms of instruction suggests that "to tell stories" is not an adequate translation of qassa, at least when applied to the early period. As a result, I have opted to not translate the various derivatives of the verb qassa so as to preserve the broader meanings of the terms that were active in the early period of Islam.

These three basic criteria yielded an entirely new pool of information on which my present study of the early  $quss\bar{a}s$  is based. The novelty of this information may be grasped best by comparing it to the only other generally comprehensive list of  $quss\bar{a}s$  available to us, that of Ibn al-Jawzī.

Ibn al-Jawzī's list of  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  and  $mudhakkir\bar{u}n$  includes names from the beginning of Islam until his own time. In general, he arranges his names according to geographical regions of the empire, although his first eighteen names, including the Prophet and seventeen of his Companions  $(al-ṣaḥ\bar{a}ba)$ , have no regional affiliations. In all, Ibn al-Jawzī names forty-five men who were  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  or  $mudhakkir\bar{u}n$  prior to the year  $132/750.^{26}$

Alternatively, using the criteria listed above, I have identified one hundred and nine people mentioned in the sources as  $quss\bar{a}s$  in the same time period. This group of qussās provided the primary pool of information for the current research. I assembled this pool through a number of means. These included the searchable database al-Jāmi' al-kabīr, my own reading of a broad array of Islamic sources and secondary literature on the qussās. 27 The names of these quṣṣāṣ, their primary regions of operation and a brief biography of each, focusing primarily on their connections to qaṣaṣ, can be found in the Appendix. When this list is compared to that of Ibn al-Jawzī's, surprisingly, only twentyseven names, or 25% of the names found in the Appendix, are common to both. Consequently, when Ibn al-Jawzī's list is matched against the rest of the Islamic sources only sixty percent of his list (27 out of 45 quṣṣāṣ) is independently verified from another Islamic source as having been considered among the quṣṣāṣ. This appears to indicate that Ibn al-Jawzī either considered the remaining eighteen of the forty-five as mudhakkirūn or that his criteria for designating someone as a  $q\bar{a}ss$  as opposed to a mudhakkir were fluid.<sup>28</sup>

To be sure, Ibn al-Jawzī included a number of other quṣṣāṣ who died after 132/750, many of whom were active during the 'Abbāsid era and were located in Iraq and the eastern regions of the empire—regions with which the Baghdādī Ibn al-Jawzī would certainly have been more familiar—though these have not been considered in this research.

<sup>27</sup> The database al-Jāmi<sup>c</sup> al-kabīr is produced by the al-Turāth company; see www .turath.com.

<sup>28</sup> It must be noted that my inability to independently confirm all forty-five men named by Ibn al-Jawzī could very well be the result of the limitations of our sources. Certainly many

In addition, the geographical distribution of the quṣṣāṣ in both my list and Ibn al-Jawzī's list is noteworthy. In order to compile an accurate geographical distribution from Ibn al-Jawzī's list, I assembled the first eighteen names, which, as I mentioned above, Ibn al-Jawzī did not categorize geographically, according to their regions, contrary to his practice with the rest of the men on the list. I arranged these eighteen names according to their associated regions, placing, for example, the Prophet, Abū Bakr and Tamīm al-Dārī in Medina and al-Aswad b. Sarī' in Basra.

The resulting breakdown of the qussas according to number and region can be seen in Table 1. This breakdown includes the number of qussas in our current list, the number of qussas in Ibn al-Jawzī's list and the number of qussas common to both lists. The actual names of the men in Ibn al-Jawzī's Kitab al-qussas as well as the names of the qussas common to both my list and his have been provided in footnotes; I have not provided a footnote for the qussas in my list since this information is given in the Appendix.

The distributions are noteworthy, especially regarding the significant difference between my list and Ibn al-Jawzī's list in the regions of Syria, Kufa and Egypt. Indeed, Ibn al-Jawzī apparently possessed no information on the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  of Umayyad Egypt since he only mentions one  $q\bar{a}ṣs$  who lived there, Dhū al-Nūn (d. 246/861).<sup>29</sup> Consequently, it is not surprising that Goldziher, who depended heavily on Ibn al-Jawzī, was led to believe that the majority of the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  were in the east.<sup>30</sup> He, furthermore, noted that there were few  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  in Medina, a situation that he attributed to Mālik b. Anas's (d. 179/796) dislike for them.<sup>31</sup> In fact, my research indicates that Medina during the Umayyad period contained a rather significant number of  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ , sixteen to be exact. Ján Pauliny followed Goldziher's assessment by alleging that the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  were not spread evenly across the empire; my current list of  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  does not support this position.<sup>32</sup>

This new list of one hundred and nine qu, qu, in tandem with the compilation of a number of qu, qu, texts, has provided an essential pool of information sources that might have confirmed the others' affiliation to qasas may be lost. Regardless of this possibility, the fact that Ibn al-Jawzī combines the two terms  $q\bar{a}$ ss and mudhakkir and fails to distinguish with any precision the difference between the two would suggest that he himself did not demand that those in his list be directly connected to the term qassa.

<sup>29</sup> Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 85.

<sup>30</sup> Goldziher, Muslim Studies II, 158.

<sup>31</sup> Ibid.

Ján Pauliny, "Zur Rolle der Quṣṣāṣ bei der Entstehung und Überlieferung der populären Prophetenlegenden," Asian and African Studies 10 (1974), 126.

	List from the Appendix	Ibn al-Jawzī's List	Names in Common
Medina	16	10 <sup>a</sup>	7 <sup>b</sup>
Mecca	5	$3^{c}$	$2^{d}$
Syria	24	8e	$6^{f}$
Kufa	25	8g	$4^{\rm h}$
Basra	22	15 <sup>i</sup>	$7^{\mathrm{j}}$
Yemen	2	$1^k$	$1^{l}$
Egypt	11	0	O
Khurasan	4	О	О
Totals	109	45	27

- a They are the Prophet Muḥammad, Abū Bakr, 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb, 'Abd Allāh b. Rawāḥa, Abū Hurayra, Tamīm al-Dārī, Muḥammad b. Ka'b, al-Agharr al-Muzanī, Muḥammad b. Munkadir, and Abū Ḥāzim al-A'rāj.
- b They are the Prophet Muḥammad, Abū Bakr, 'Abd Allāh b. Rawāḥa, Abū Hurayra, Tamīm al-Dārī, Muḥammad b. Ka'b and Abū Ḥāzim al-A'raj.
- c They are Abū Mūsā al-Ash'arī, 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr and Mujāhid b. Jabr.
- d They are 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr and Mujāhid b. Jabr.
- e They are Ibn Mas'ūd, Mu'ādh b. Jabal, Abū Dharr, Abū al-Dardā', Shaddād b. Aws, Ka'b al-Aḥbār, Khālid b. Ma'dān and Bilāl b. Sa'd.
- f They are Ibn Masʿūd, Muʿādh b. Jabal, Abū Dharr, Abū al-Dardāʾ, Kaʿb al-Aḥbār and Bilāl b. Saʿd.
- g They are ʿAlī b. Abī Ṭālib, Salmān al-Fārisī, Ḥudhayfa, ʿAlqama b. Qays, Ibrāhīm al-Taymī, Saʿīd b. Jubayr, ʿAwn b. ʿAbd Allāh and ʿUmar b. Dharr.
- h They are Ibrāhīm al-Taymī, Saʿīd b. Jubayr, 'Awn b. 'Abd Allāh and 'Umar b. Dharr.
- i They are 'Utba b. Ghazwān, al-Aswad b. Sarī', Ibn 'Abbās, Muṭarrif b. 'Abd Allāh, al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, Bakr b. 'Abd Allāh, Qatāda b. Di'āma, Thābit al-Bunānī, Abū 'Imrān al-Jawnī, Muḥammad b. Wāsi', Farqad al-Sabakhī, Mālik b. Dīnār, Yazīd al-Raqāshī, Ayyūb al-Sakhtīyānī and Sulaymān al-Taymī.
- j They are al-Aswad b. Sarī', Muṭarrif b. 'Abd Allāh, al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, Bakr b. 'Abd Allāh, Qatāda b. Di'āma, Thābit al-Bunānī and Yazīd al-Raqāshī.
- k He is Wahb b. Munabbih.
- l He is Wahb b. Munabbih.

to re-examine the qussās of early Islam. The present book, based on this new group of qussās, seeks to reexamine the content, nature, reputations, conduct and political affiliations of the early Islamic qass. By restricting this research to statements and personalities who were directly connected to the term qassa, I argue that the early Islamic  $q\bar{a}ss$  was, for the most part, a reputable religious scholar who made statements on a wide range of topics (Chapter 1), who engaged in a number of religious disciplines (Chapter 2) and who distinguished himself, ideally, by three primary character traits of knowledge ('ilm), linguistic abilities ( $lis\bar{a}n$ ) and rhetorical skills ( $bay\bar{a}n$ ) (Chapters 3). These factors challenge aspects of the prevailing opinion of the early Islamic qussās and help clarify the hitherto murky view of his role in the community. This image accords with some traditions implying that the  $quss\bar{a}s$  were conformist scholars who trace their origins back to the earliest periods of the community, arriving ultimately at the Prophet himself. This image, however, stands in contrast to a second group of traditions alleging that qaṣaṣ was a negative innovation (bid'a) whose origins can be found in the religio-political divisions of the community at the end of the period of the Rāshidūn caliphs, the terminus ad quem for Chapter Four. Undergirding this tension are the issues of precedence in the community and political affiliations—two issues that impact the reputation of the  $quss\bar{a}s$  as either conformist scholars or innovators. These political associations and the reputations that the quṣṣāṣ developed as a result of their affiliations with the governing elite extend throughout the Umayyad period and reveal that the  $quss\bar{a}s$  found themselves embroiled in the growing political divisions, as both pro- and anti-government supporters (Chapter 5). Indeed, this evolution in function and reputation, as well as the tendency of the scholarly circles to find themselves involved in the political movements of the day, are not specific to the quṣṣāṣ and suggest that the early Islamic quṣṣāṣ were in essence mainstream scholars and not merely the mediocre charlatans they were often held to be during the medieval period.

Qaşaş: Textual Evidence

The Islamic sources broach the issue of qaṣaṣ and the quṣṣāṣ in three ways. First, they simply identify a named person as a  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  or as having given qaṣaṣ. They will report, for instance, that al-Aswad b. Sarīʻ was the  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  in Basra or that Ibn Masʿūd used to give qaṣaṣ ( $k\bar{a}na$  yaquṣṣu) every Monday and Thursday.¹ Second, the sources give reports about qaṣaṣ and  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  identified by the position they occupy rather than by name, such as stating that qaṣaṣ was given by the  $am\bar{i}r$ , the one appointed by the governmental authorities ( $ma'm\bar{u}r$ ) or the deceiver ( $mur\bar{a}$ ').² These types of reports are important for determining attitudes towards the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ , although they can also be tendentious. Thirdly, the sources give reports that purportedly preserve actual qaṣaṣ statements.

This last category of reports on qaṣaṣ and the quṣṣāṣ provides information on the content of qaṣaṣ and is, therefore, a fundamental source in establishing the nature of qaşaş.<sup>3</sup> As will be shown below, these qaşaş sayings fall under three rubrics: those given in a religious context, those given in a military context and a single religio-political qissa which, in spite of many similarities between it and other qişas, especially martial qişas, has specific features and will hence be treated separately. For the purposes of this research, only those statements textually identified as qaṣaṣ, will be examined. Therefore, in order for a statement to be considered here as qaṣaṣ, in either a religious, a martial or a religio-political context, it has to have been identified in the sources as gasas and not merely to have been attributed to a gass. In so doing, I seek to avoid the tendency to consider all statements reportedly said by quṣṣāṣ as qaṣaṣ-material, for each time a  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ spoke he was not necessarily giving qaṣaṣ. The use of this criterion in approaching qasas-material led to the identification of forty-three qasas texts: thirty-four religious texts, eight martial texts and one religio-political text.

<sup>1</sup> For al-Aswad, see Ibn Sa'd, Kitāb al-ṭabaqāt al-kubrā, ed. 'Alī Muḥammad 'Umar (Cairo, 2001), 9:41. For Ibn Mas'ūd, see Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 33:180.

<sup>2</sup> Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, eds. Shuʻayb al-Arnāʾūṭ and ʿĀdil Murshid (Beirut, 1999), 2:183. This tradition is found in many variants and will be analyzed in Chapter Four.

<sup>3</sup> Heretofore, modern studies have largely overlooked this category of qaṣaṣ reports. 'Athamina even alleged that we do not have examples of the content of the earliest preachers; see his "Qaṣaṣ," 6o.

While these texts have been included because of their direct connection to the verb gassa, this does not mean that the statements themselves are necessarily authentic to the attributed author. While it is certain that authentication of these statements provides even further clarification on the exact nature of gasas statements, this requires in-depth analysis of each text and would make the current project unmanageable. Indeed whole articles have been devoted to single hadīth, sermons or literary texts, and future work on these current texts will prove quite beneficial to our understanding of the transmission of religious knowledge in the early period. For my part, I have accepted the attribution of the statement as a qişşa recognizing that this, in itself, reveals the viewpoint of what constitutes a qiṣṣa in the mind of the author of the specific source text, if not of the Islamic community in general at the time of the compilation of the source, preserving an even earlier view of the features of qaşaş.4 Lastly, I have included the Arabic text of most of the gasas statements; only one long qissa (# 3) and those qisas that included only Our'ānic verses have been left without the Arabic text.

Religious Qasas

The thirty-four qaṣaṣ statements of religious orientation cover a broad spectrum of themes that utilize a number of methods of presentation with the common aim of inspiring faith and piety in the listener. The quṣṣāṣ sought to foster piety by addressing six topics: 1. the complex relationship between divine will and human responsibility (qadar); 2. the imminence of death, the final judgment and the afterlife; 3. the lives of earlier prophets who provide an example of faith and piety (exemplars); 4. the practices of the Prophet Muḥammad (sunna); 5. legal issues; 6. the general promotion of religious knowledge in the community. This categorization does not imply that the themes are entirely independent. On the contrary, there is certainly a degree of overlap amongst them, exemplified most clearly by the subject of qadar, so that some texts discussing God's forgiveness also address the question of one's eternal fate and God's role in determining it. In such cases, my best judgment as to the primary function of the statement guided my classifications.

<sup>4</sup> Indeed, the skepticism that is rife towards the sources seems overstated, and thus the need for authenticating each statement is untenable. For an astute critique of this critical approach to the sources, see Aziz al Azmeh, The Arabs and Islam in Late Antiquity: A Critique of Approaches to Arabic Sources (Berlin, 2014).

16 CHAPTER 1

It will become clear, in spite of the variety of categories, that all religious qa\$a\$ statements are woven together by a concern for both faith and practice. The texts reveal a definite sense that the  $q\bar{a}\$\$$  is attempting to affect a response in his listener, both to right belief and right behavior. In this regard, the six topics emphasized by the qu\$\$a\$ extend from exhortations to piety, to be internalized and the texts of which focus, therefore, on the personal spiritual condition of the individual believer, to instruction in Prophetic  $had\bar{u}th$  on topics of an essentially legal nature to be applied community-wide. In each case, even in those qa\$a\$ texts concentrating on legal matters, devotion to the tenets of the faith and to moral rectitude indeed remain the foremost intents of the  $q\bar{a}\$ss$ .

Divine Will and Human Responsibility (qadar)

In the qaṣaṣ sayings of the early quṣṣāṣ, we observe the theological tension surrounding the debate on qadar. This debate focused on the question of God's predetermination of events as opposed to man's freedom to act according to his own will. Though the term qadar means "fate" or "destiny," and therefore should likely have been applied to those who emphasized God's predetermination of events, it in fact came to denote those who underscored man's free will. The debate over this theological issue is discernible in multiple statements of the quṣṣāṣ. In truth, it is not surprising to find the quṣṣāṣ engaged in this debate as it was a fundamental theological issue for the early community. Their involvement in the debate indicates undeniably that they were just as invested in the theological questions of the faith as any other group of scholars.

The Basran  $q\bar{a}$ s $\bar{s}$  al-Fadl b. 'Īsā al-Radashī (d.c. mid-second/eighth century), for example, described God's relationship to man in terms of the creation itself, emphasizing that all of creation is dependent upon its Creator and, by its very nature, obedient to the will of God. In his qisas (fiqisasihi) he said:

(1) Ask the earth and say, "Who divided your days and planted your trees and harvested your fruit?" If it does not answer you by speech, it has already answered by example.

<sup>5</sup> For an overview of qadar, see J. van Ess, "Kadariyya," *EI*2, 4:368–372; William Montgomery Watt, The Formative Period of Islamic Thought (Oxford, 2002), 82–118.

<sup>6</sup> Al-Jāḥiz, al-Bayān wa-l-tabyīn, ed. 'Abd al-Salām Muḥammad Hārūn (Cairo, 1968), 1:308.

Al-Faḍl's qissa uses the natural order of creation, unable to express itself audibly, as a testament to mankind of God's supremacy. The natural order simply obeys the command of God, and in so doing it shows the goodness of God's creation. On its surface, the text suggests that al-Faḍl is advocating an anti- $qadar\bar{\iota}$  position by emphasizing creation's obedience to the sovereignty of God. However, the belief in the initial state of the goodness of God's creation (and the subsequent introduction of evil into the world by mankind and Satan) is a characteristic of what J. van Ess has described as an early "moderate"  $qadar\bar{\iota}$  ideology. This qasas statement may incorporate aspects of that ideology. If this is the case, then it is not surprising that such a sentiment emanated from al-Faḍl who himself was known to have held  $qadar\bar{\iota}$  beliefs and to have also been a missionary for the cause.

A similar emphasis on the sovereignty of God in the affairs of His creation was expressed by the early Syrian  $q\bar{a}ss$  Rabī'a b. 'Amr al-Jurashī (d. 64/684).<sup>9</sup>

(2) He used to say in his qiṣaṣ, "Verily God, most high, has placed the good in relation to you like the lace of his shoe, and has made the evil in relation to him as far as his eye can see."

Here Rabī'a appears to emphasize God's sovereignty by claiming that He brings the good close to mankind and therefore within his sphere of control ("like the lace of his shoe"), despite making evil pervasive ("as far as his eye can see") and hardly within man's control. Thus, even though God is indeed the prime mover in human affairs, He enables the believer to control a measure of the good within the pervasive evil that swirls around him. In this regard, this qissa seems to advocate a position, emphasizing that man's good deeds (hasanat) ultimately emanate from God, a belief later associated with qadarism.<sup>11</sup>

The debate surrounding qadar was closely tied to the issue of man's accountability for his actions—if God predetermined mans's actions, then

<sup>7</sup> Van Ess, "Kadariyya," EI2, 4:369.

<sup>8</sup> For al-Fadl, see the Appendix # 90.

<sup>9</sup> For Rabīʿa, see the Appendix # 21.

<sup>10</sup> Abū Zur'a al-Dimashqī, Tārīkh, ed. Shukr Allāh b. Ni'mat Allāh al-Qawjānī (Damascus, 1980), 1:234.

<sup>11</sup> Watt, Formative, 94.

18 CHAPTER 1

what accountability did man have for his behavior? Two qisas from 'Ubayd b. Umayr (d. 68/688), the alleged first  $q\bar{a}ss$  of Mecca, exemplify this debate by asserting simultaneously God's sovereign beneficence towards man and man's responsibility to sincerely recognize the work of God and, therefore, to not behave hypocritically towards Him.<sup>12</sup> In the longest qasas statement of this early period (3), which happens to also be one of the few narratives told by a qāss, 'Ubayd related a Prophetic hadīth recounting the plight of three men of the children of Israel: one leprous, one bald and one blind, whom God wanted to test and thus sent an angel to each of them.<sup>13</sup> Each was asked by the angel what they desired and each replied that he wanted his condition remedied. After granting them these wishes, along with prosperity in herds of various species, the angel returned to each of them in the form of a man suffering from their previous conditions. The once-leprous and once-bald man both refused to help their poor leprous and bald counterparts. When the beggars/angels exposed these men as having previously suffered from the same defects and as having received their prosperity through the generosity of God, both men denied that to be true and claimed that they received their prosperity from their ancestors. Only the blind man recalled God's provisions and helped the poor blind man who asked of him charity. To the blind man the angel replied:

Keep your property with you. You all have been tested, and God is pleased with you and is angry with your two companions.

The report suggests that the hypocrisy of man, epitomized by the two Israelites who claimed that their prosperity came as a result of their own efforts, not through divine beneficence, will be judged by God, while the honest recognition of God's provision, exemplified in the blind man, will be blessed. This theme of man's hypocrisy surfaced in another of 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr's qiṣaṣ (4) citing a Prophetic tradition analogizing the hypocrite to a sheep roaming between two flocks.

<sup>12</sup> For 'Ubayd, see the Appendix # 25.

<sup>13</sup> According to al-'Uqaylī, 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr used to relate this qiṣṣa; see his al-Du'afā' al-kabīr, ed. 'Abd al-Mu'ṭī Amīn Qal'ajī (Beirut, 1984), 4:369–370. Other sources identify it only as a ḥadīth, see al-Wāqidī, Futūḥ al-Shām (Beirut, n.d.), 2:85–86; Bukhārī, Ṣaḥīḥ, ed. Muṣṭafā Dīb al-Bughā (Beirut, 1987) 3:1276; Muslim, Ṣaḥīḥ, ed. Muḥammad Fu'ād 'Abd al-Bāqī (Cairo, 1956), 4:2275–2276; Ibn Ḥibbān, Ṣaḥīḥ, ed. Shu'ayb al-Arnā'ūṭ (Beirut, 1993), 2:13–16; al-Sahmī, Tārīkh Jurjān, ed. Muḥammad 'Abd al-Mu'īd Khān (Beirut, 1981), 465–466.

يعفر بن روذي قال: سمعت عبيد بن عمير و هو يقصّ، يقول: قال رسول الله: مثل المنافق كمثل الشاة الرابضة بين الغنمين. 14

The imagery displayed here is that of a person who aimlessly, yet somewhat purposefully, wanders from one thing to another with no definitive commitment to either.

While these qisas of 'Ubayd focus specifically on man's hypocrisy, they affirm the general interest of the qussas in explicating man's responsibility to respond in gratefulness to God's goodness and in commitment to Him. Likewise, the early Medinan  $q\bar{a}$ ss 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Abī 'Amra (d. 37/657) emphasized that as long as man confessed his sin and therefore avoided hypocrisy towards God, God was willing to forgive even in the face of repeated sin. According to al-Ṭabarānī's al-Du'ā':

(5) Isḥāq b. 'Abd Allāh b. Abī Ṭalḥa (d. 132/750)¹⁵ said, "There was a qāṣṣ in Medina who was named 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Abī 'Amra. I heard him say, "I heard Abū Hurayra say, "I heard the Messenger of God say, "There was a man who sinned and he said, "O Lord, I have sinned, forgive me." And his Lord said, "My servant knows that he has a Lord who forgives sin and who holds him to account for it." So he forgave him. Then the man sinned again and said, "O Lord, I have sinned, forgive me." And his Lord said, "My servant knows that he has a Lord who forgives sin and who holds him to account for it." Then he continued to do what God desired until he committed another sin. He said, "O Lord, I have sinned, forgive me." And his Lord said, "My servant knows that he has a Lord who forgives sin and who holds him to account for it. I have forgiven my servant, so let him do what he desires."

إسحاق بن عبد الله ابن أبي طلحة، قال: كان قاص بالمدينة يقال له عبد الرحمن بن أبي عمرة فسمعته يقول: سمعت أبا هريرة رضي الله عنه يقول:

&#x27;Abd al-Razzāq al-Ṣan'ānī, al-Muṣannaf, ed. Ḥabīb al-Raḥmān al-A'ṭamī (Beirut, 1971), 11:435–436; Muslim, al-Tamyīz, ed. Muḥammad Muṣṭafā al-A'ṭamī (Riyadh, 1975), 173. The same tradition is recorded in Muslim's Ṣaḥīḥ though with no mention of 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr; see 4:2146.

On him, see Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb al-tahdhīb, eds. Ibrāhīm al-Zaybaq and ʿĀdil Murshid (Beirut, 2001), 1:122–123.

20 CHAPTER 1

سمعت رسول الله صلى الله عليه وسلم يقول: أن عبدًا أذنب فقال يا رب أذنب ذنبًا فاغفر في، فقال ربه عز وجل: علم عبدي أن له ربًا يغفر الذنب ويأخذ به فغفر له، ثم أذنب ذنبًا آخر فقال: يا رب أذنبت ذنبًا فاغفر في، فقال ربه عز وجل: علم عبدي أن له ربًا يغفر الذنب ويأخذ به ثم مكث ما شاء الله، ثم أذنب ذنبًا آخر فقال: يا رب أذنبت ذنبًا فاغفر في، فقال ربه عز وجل: علم عبدي أن له ربًا يغفر الذنب ويأخذ فاغفر في، فقال ربه عز وجل: علم عبدي أن له ربًا يغفر الذنب ويأخذ به قد غفرتُ لعبدي فليعمل ما شاء. 16

The stipulation for God's forgiveness in this qiṣṣa is His confidence in the servant's constant awareness of three truths: his sin, his accountability to God for his sin and God's willingness to forgive His servants.

Man's awareness of God's sovereign right to forgive and judge sin as He so desires undergirds a strong anti- $qadar\bar{\iota}$  qissa from one of the most celebrated  $quss\bar{a}s$  of the Umayyad period, Bilāl b. Sa'd, known as the "al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī of Syria." Bilāl pronounced woe upon the unwitting unbelievers who live their lives for themselves unaware that they have already been doomed by God to hell-fire. He said in his qisas:

(6) Many a happy person is deceived! Woe to him who is afflicted yet does not sense it. He eats and drinks while it has already been pronounced upon him by the fore-knowledge of God that he is one of the people of hell-fire.

Bilāl related his anti-qadarī position precisely because he was accused of being a Qadarī—hence refuting this accusation. In this case, God's will and judgment were said to have been pronounced on some men, and these men have no recourse. Furthermore, it is certainly noteworthy that the one qissa attributed to Bilāl, the scholar who possessed the character traits of the ideal  $q\bar{a}ss$ , as will be seen in Chapter 3, addresses the issue of qadar. In addition, the fact that the sources preserve more qasas texts dealing with this controversial theological topic than any other issue may shed light on the eventual disparagement of the qussas as a scholarly class. Undoubtedly, engagement in discussions on qadar served to divide the scholarly community and thus may have contributed to the progressive degeneration of the reputation of the qussas.

<sup>16</sup> Al-Ṭabarānī, al-Du'ā', ed. Muṣṭafā 'Abd al-Qādir 'Aṭā (Beirut, 1992), 503. See also Muslim, Ṣaḥīḥ, 4:2113.

<sup>17</sup> For Bilāl, see the Appendix # 60.

<sup>18</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 10:505.

Death, the Final Judgment and the After-life

Exhortations to piety have as their goal right belief and behavior in the hereand-now, and also in the preparations for the hereafter. The qussas, therefore, drew upon themes of an eternal nature in their qasas by emphasizing the imminence of death, the coming judgment and the eternal abodes. Indeed, the association between qasas and these themes of eternal consequence has a precedent in the Qur'ān, stating, "O you assembly of jinn and mankind! Came there not unto you messengers of your own who recounted unto you My tokens (yaqussanas alaykum ayati) and warned you of the meeting of this your Day? (Sūrat al-An'ām [6]:130)." Furthermore, the story of God's judgment of Pharaoh was recounted in the Qur'ān (naqussas alaykum) as a warning to all who reject the revelation of God (Sūrat Hūd [11]:100). Considering this Qur'ānic precedent, it is of little surprise then that these themes are peppered throughout the sayings of the qussas sas in the early period.19

Undergirding any statement about God's judgment or the hereafter is the subject of death and its imminence. The foreboding prospect of death and the grave were the wells from which the pious, qusparentarian and others, drew inspiration. Abū Bakr, in a khuṭba of his, described death as pursuing mankind. Abū Bakr, in a khuṭba of his, described death as pursuing mankind. Abū Bakr, in a khuṭba of his, described death as pursuing mankind. Abu bakar bakar

<sup>19</sup> For references to these themes and their presence in the Qur'ān and in the sayings of the quṣṣāṣ, see Pedersen, "Criticism," 215; Pauliny, "Quṣṣāṣ," 127.

<sup>20</sup> Dimitri Frolov, Classical Arabic Verse: History and Theory of 'Arūḍ (Leiden, 2000), 122.

<sup>21</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 47:70.

For Yazīd, see the Appendix # 63.

22 CHAPTER 1

(7) said in his qiṣaṣ (addressing himself), "Woe to you, O Yazīd! Who is going to reconcile you with your Lord? Who is going to fast for you and pray for you?" Then he said, "O my brothers, those for whom the grave is home and death is appointed, how is it that you do not weep?" And he wept until his eyelashes fell out.

كان يزيد يقول في قصصه: ويحك يا يزيد! من يترضى عنك ربك؟ و من يصوم لك أو يصلى لك؟ ثم يقول: يا معشر (إخواني) من القبر بيته و الموت موعده ألا تبكون؟ فبكى حتى سقطت أشفار عينيه. 23

For Yazīd, death's imminence reminded him that he would soon be gone and forgotten. He opines that he will have no one to bring his case before God—"who is going to reconcile you with your Lord?"—nor will he have anyone to fast or pray for him when he is gone. Eventually he will indeed be in the grave and simply a memory, and a fading one at that. He uses this fact to remind himself—suggesting that the audience of the  $q\bar{a}ss$  was at times limited to himself—and his "brothers"/listeners that death is also their appointed destiny and that they should weep, as he had, over this prospect.

As we noted above, the imminence of death was a concern of many in early Islam. Van Ess noted that this type of piety, characterized by despondency over the evil among mankind and the inauspiciousness of one's eventual demise, was also found among early  $qadar\bar{\imath}s$ , especially among the circle of al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, who was, as a matter of fact, a teacher of Yazīd al-Raqāshī and, furthermore, allowed Yazīd to teach theology in his sessions. <sup>24</sup> This statement accords with that of Yazīd's nephew al-Faḍl (text number 1) and implies the perpetuation of  $qadar\bar{\imath}$  tendencies among this Basran cluster of  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ . In these statements, we have indeed an example of these Basran  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ 's theology and a snap-shot of what they emphasized in their qaṣaṣ sessions.

Physical death, however, was not always portrayed by the quṣṣāṣ, nor by al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī himself, as the most disconcerting condition facing mankind, even though the subject of death was still used as a means for encouraging devotion and piety in the temporal world. Thus, while al-Ḥasan's student Yazīd sought to inspire faith by portraying death as a menacing image to be feared, al-Ḥasan, on at least one occasion, sought to draw his listeners' attention away from physical death and towards a worse form of death, the spiritual type of death characterizing some of the living.<sup>25</sup>

Abū Nu'aym al-Iṣfahānī, Ḥilyat al-awliyā', ed. Muṣṭafā 'Abd al-Qādir 'Aṭā (Beirut, 1997), 3:59–60. See also Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 75.

Jāḥiz, Bayān, 1:308. See also van Ess, "Ķadariyya," EI2, 4:369.

(8) He said in his qiṣaṣ, "believe the one who says: [The dead one is] not the one who dies and finds rest in death. Rather, the dead one is the dead among the living."

Here, al-Ḥasan depicts physical death as, in fact, a state of rest for which the soul longs. The more ominous form of death is the moral one, characterizing some of the physically alive as spiritually dead. This image carries some similarity to that expressed by Bilāl b. Saʻd in his qaṣaṣ, mentioned above, bemoaning the condition of those who walk the earth unaware that their fate has already been sealed—the living dead. According to al-Ḥasan this is the worst type of death.

It is clear that the above qaṣaṣ sayings about death are intended to promote in the listener a greater concern for what lies beyond that veil of death and for the judgment that awaits all mankind. In the only qiṣṣa found thus far that has been attributed to the Prophet, he, while allegedly giving qaṣaṣ from the pulpit of the mosque (wa-huwa yaquṣṣu ʿalā-l-minbar), expounded upon Sūrat al-Raḥmān (55):46 stating:

(9) For he who fears the time of standing [in judgment] before his Lord there are two gardens.

Even though the only portion of the qiṣṣa that has been preserved is the Qurʾānic verse, the theme of the verse as well as the discussion that reportedly ensued indicates that the Prophet was addressing the topic of eternal judgment and paradise. And indeed, the report goes on to say that Abū al-Dardāʾ, the distinguished Companion of the Prophet, raised the following question to the Prophet: "What about the one who commits adultery or steals, O Messenger of God?" The Prophet responded by reciting the verse again. Twice more Abū al-Dardā' asked the same question, and twice more the Prophet repeated the verse, adding after the third time, in a rather frustrated state because of Abū al-Dardā''s constant rebuttal: "Yes, in spite of Abū al-Dardā''s objection (in raghima anf Abū al-Dardā')."<sup>27</sup> This exchange with the Prophet left such an impact upon Abū al-Dardā' that he included the addendum "even if he commits adultery or steals" in his recitation of this verse when he gave qaṣaṣ from the Prophet's pulpit.<sup>28</sup>

<sup>25</sup> For al-Ḥasan, see the Appendix # 66.

<sup>26 &#</sup>x27;Abd al-Razzāq, Muṣannaf, 3:220.

Later, the Kufan  $q\bar{a}ss$  Kurdūs b. al-'Abbās explained that paradise was only to be obtained by performing good deeds.<sup>29</sup> He said in his qisas:

(10) Paradise is only obtained by virtue of [good] deeds. Combine desire [for God] with fear [of God], persist in doing good deeds and meet God with pure hearts and sincere deeds.

28

Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 14:311–312, 45:483; al-Nasā'ī, al-Sunan al-kubrā, eds. 'Abd al-Ghaffār Sulaymān al-Bandārī and Sayyid Kisrawī Ḥasan (Beirut, 1991), 6:478; al-Ṭabarī, Tafsīr (Cairo, 1954–1968), 27:146–147; al-Ṭaḥāwī, Sharḥ mushkil al-āthār, ed. Shu'ayb al-Arnā'ūṭ (Beirut, 1994), 10:167; al-Khaṭīb al-Tabrīzī, Mishkāt al-maṣābīḥ, ed. Muḥammad Nāṣir al-Dīn al-Albānī (Beirut, 1985), 2:734; Ibn Kathīr, Tafsīr (Beirut, 1981), 4:280. For other variants of this tradition, see Ibn al-Mubārak, al-Zuhd, ed. Ḥabīb al-Raḥmān al-Aʻzamī (Beirut, 1971), 1:325; Abū Yūsuf Yaʻqūb b. Ibrāhīm al-Anṣārī, Kitāb al-āthār, ed. Abū al-Wafā' al-Afghānī (Hyderabad, 1936), 197; Ibn Fuḍayl al-Dabbī, al-Duʻā', ed. 'Abd al-ʿAzīz b. Sulaymān b. Ibrāhīm al-Baʿīmī (Riyadh, 1999), 173–174.

Ibn Abī 'Āṣim, al-Sunna, ed. Muḥammad Nāṣir al-Dīn al-Albānī (Beirut, 1980), 2:472; Al-Suyūṭī, al-Durr al-manthūr (Beirut, 1993), 7:707. Not only did Abū al-Dardā' recite it this way but he apparently influenced others to do likewise. Muḥammad b. Sa'd b. Abī Waqqāṣ (d. 83/702), the son of the famous Companion Sa'd b. Abī Waqqāṣ (d. 50s/670s) recited this verse with Abū al-Dardā"s addition and when challenged on this recitation he responded by saying, "I heard the Messenger of God recite it like that and I will recite it that way until I die." See Suyūṭī, Durr, 7:707. However, according to Mizzī, Muḥammad never met the Prophet; see his Tahdhūb al-kamāl fī asmā' al-rijāl, ed. Bashshār 'Awwād Ma'rūf (Beirut, 1980–1992), 25:259. This reading persisted until the time of the caliph Hishām b. 'Abd al-Malik (r. 105–125/724–743) when the famous ḥadīth scholar Ibn Shihāb al-Zuhrī (d. 124/741–742) claimed that this addendum was only necessary in the absence of any explicit statements against adultery and theft, but that once these requirements (farā'iḍ) had been revealed the addendum became moot and should be left off; see Suyūṭī, Durr, 7:707. On Kurdūs, see the Appendix # 46.

On Kurdūs, see the Appendix # 46.
 Abū Nuʿaym, Hilya, 4:199; Ibn al-Jawzī, Şifat al-şafwa, eds. Maḥmūd Fākhūrī and Muḥammad Rawwās Qalʿajī (Beirut, 1979), 3:72.

Kurdūs calls his listeners to "desire" and "fear" God and to approach Him "with pure hearts and sincere deeds." This pursuit of God was to be combined with the consistent performance of good deeds. Only under these circumstances was paradise to be obtained. As for Kurdūs, he sought to inspire righteous behavior by promoting its eternal benefits. Other quṣṣāṣ, however, revealed an anxiety about eternity that they expressed in qiṣaṣ on eternal damnation and hell-fire.

Hell-fire was a salient topic for the qussas. Ostensibly from shortly after the time of the Prophet, a qass in Mecca, who converted to Islam from Christianity, related in a qissa the account of a man who circumambulated the Kaʻba moaning ([11] fa-jaʻala awwah) about hell-fire. This unnamed Meccan qass said that when the Companion of the Prophet Abū Dharr al-Ghifārī (d. 32/652-3) heard the man moaning he complained to the Prophet who replied simply: "He is a moaner." While this particular qass does not seem to have used hell-fire to terrorize his audience, he certainly intended to convey its ominousness by speaking of one who moaned when thinking of it. Furthermore, the tradition communicates a sense of uncertainty about one's destiny upon death, similar to the qissa of Yazīd b. Abān. 32

Another  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  expressed the same tension though in a somewhat less dramatic fashion than the above-referenced unidentified  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$ . The purported first  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  of Basra, al-Aswad b. Sarī' (d.c. 36/656), allegedly stated in his  $qas\bar{s}s\bar{s}$ , expressed in verse:

(12) If you are saved from it [hell-fire] then you are saved from a great disaster

And if not, then I do not consider you to be saved

While al-Aswad seems to indicate that the prospect of hell-fire was apparently real indeed for the believers, other qaṣaṣ statements indicate that hell-fire was the certain final destination for the unbeliever. Against them God will bring <sup>31</sup> The qāṣṣ related the account of the man circumambulating the Kaʿba. Other variants do not specify that the report came from this Meccan qāṣṣ although they reveal that the reason for the man's moaning was that he was thinking about hell-fire (idhā dhakara al-nār qāla awwāh min al-nār); see Ṭabarī, Tafsīr, 11:50–51.

<sup>32</sup> See qiṣṣa # 7 above, 22.

<sup>33</sup> Jāḥiz, Bayān, 1:367. On al-Aswad, see the Appendix # 14.

witnesses, including the Prophet, whose testimony will seal their fate, as predicted in Sūrat al-Nisā' (4):41, "But how (will it be with them) when We bring of every people a witness, and We bring you (O Muhammad) a witness against these?" It was based on this prospect that the pious scholar 'Abd Allāh b. 'Umar (d. 73/693),<sup>34</sup> while listening to 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr give qaṣaṣ on this verse (13), was brought to tears.<sup>35</sup>

While the possibility of judgment in hell-fire was a common subject among the pious, including the qussas, one unidentified qass took his exposition of the horrors of hell-fire further than the distinguished Companion Ibn Mas'ūd condoned. Ibn Mas'ūd is reported to have entered a mosque and found there

(14) a qāṣṣ engaged in qaṣaṣ during which he recalled hell-fire and the fetters. So he [Ibn Mas'ūd] came and stood over the man and said, "O warner (mudhakkir), why do you discourage the people?" Then he quoted [the Qur'ān], "O my servants, who have been prodigal to their own hurt! Despair not of the mercy of God, who forgives all sins. Lo! He is the Forgiving, the Merciful (Sūrat al-Zumar [39]:53)."

دخل عبد الله بن مسعود المسجد فإذا قاص يقص وهو يذكر النار والأغلال بفاء حتى قام على رأسه وقال: يا مذكّر لِمَ تقنط الناس، ثم قرأ ، قل ياعبادي الذين أسرفوا على أنفسهم لاتقنطوا من رحمة الله 36

Ibn Mas'ūd sought to temper the tendency of the  $q\bar{a}$ ss to emphasize the terrors of hell-fire by encouraging a proportionate emphasis on God as a giver of mercy and as one "who forgives all sin." <sup>37</sup>

On him, see L. Veccia-Vaglieri, "Abd Allāh b. 'Umar b. al-Khatṭāb," El2, 1:53-54.

<sup>35</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 31:126.

<sup>36</sup> Al-Thaʻlabī, al-Kashf wa-l-bayān, ed. 'Abū Muḥammad b. 'Āshūr (Beirut, 2002), 8:242–243; al-Baghawī, Maʻālim al-tanzīl fi-l-tafsīr wa-l-ta'wīl (Tafsīr), ed. Khālid 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-ʻIkk (Beirut, 1986) 4:83. Ṭabarī gives a variant of this tradition in which he identifies the man as a qāṣṣ but then describes his saying as dhikr. His variant reads, "There was a qāṣṣ recalling (yudhakkir) hell-fire and the fetters." See Ṭabarī, Tafsīr, 24:16. Both variants suggest a close connection between a qāṣṣ and a mudhakkir as Ibn al-Jawzī affirmed in his work, noted in the introduction.

<sup>37</sup> This point is made again in a report from Zayd b. Aslam (d. 136/753), a student of the qāṣṣ 'Aṭā' b. Yasār, a man about whom Zayd said, "He used to tell us qiṣaṣ until we would cry, and then he would tell us more beautiful qiṣaṣ until we would laugh." See Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 40:449; Chapter Three, 201. It may be that 'Aṭā''s levity in his sessions influenced

The quṣṣās were not only interested in identifying those who would be consigned to either paradise or hell-fire, they also took up the matter of the events surrounding the end of days, the eschaton. In one qiṣṣa, the famous Qurʾān interpreter and scholar Qatāda b. Diʿāma expounded on a Prophetic ḥadūth about the duration of the world.³8 The Prophet said: "When I was sent (with the revelation of God), I and the hour were like these two (meaning his index and middle finger)." In explaining this tradition, Qatāda said

(15) in his qiṣaṣ, "like the excess of the one over the other."

Qatāda thus interpreted the Prophet's words as a comparison between the length of the middle finger to that of the index finger with the first indicating the beginning of Islam, and the second indicating the day of judgment. By so doing, he was emphasizing the brevity of this world and its approaching end after the emergence of Islam.<sup>40</sup>

Nu'aym b. Ḥammād (d. 229/844) in his Kitāb al-fitan, an early work on the internecine strife putatively prophesied to arise among the Muslims signaling the arrival of the eschaton, recorded an eschatological qissa told by an unnamed  $q\bar{a}ss$  in Medina. In his qissa, this  $q\bar{a}ss$  allegedly transmitted a tradition from Anas b. Mālik predicting the signs of the end times:

Zayd for he transmitted a report about a man from the nations of old who was pious, devout and would discourage the people about God's mercy, apparently by speaking too often and ominously of God's judgment. When he died, God consigned him to hell, much to the man's surprise, and told him, "You used to discourage the people about my mercy while on earth, so I will discourage you today about my mercy." See Tha'labī, Kashf, 8:243. On Zayd, see Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 7:507; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:658–659.

<sup>38</sup> On Qatāda, see the Appendix # 71.

<sup>39</sup> Al-Ṭabarī, Tārīkh al-rusul wa-l-mulūk, ed. M.J. De Goeje (Leiden, 1879–1901), 1:11.

Franz Rosenthal noted the meaning attributed to Qatāda but also mentioned an alternate interpretation found in Ibn Ḥajar's Fatḥ al-bārī in which the closeness of the two fingers together was the intended meaning. See Rosenthal, The History of al-Ṭabarī Volume 1: General Introduction and From the Creation to the Flood (Albany, 1989), 176, n. 76; 177, n. 88. See also Ibn Ḥajar, Fatḥ al-bārī, ed. Muḥibb al-Dīn al-Khaṭīb (Beirut, n.d.), 14:134–138.

Because the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  is not named by Nu'aym, it is not possible to date the tradition precisely. The text states that this  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  was relating a tradition from his father, who heard it from Anas b. Mālik (d. 91–93/709–711). This would place the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  close to the first half of the second/eighth century, close enough to our period of interest for inclusion as a text.

(16) "The hour will be close when [precious] metals will appear [from the earth], rain will increase, vegetation will decrease, a man walks with dirhams (bi-l-wuqiyya wa-l-wuqiyyatayn)<sup>42</sup> but finds no one to take them in order to become richer. And they [the people] on that day would have been struggling with each other over the goods of their world, because of the appearance of certain signs, so that the rich take refuge with the poor." He says, "What will I do with this [the money] when it is the last days?" So that a man will have only a piece of bread to his name and will find no one to take it from him. That day, "it will not benefit any soul to believe that had not believed before or had earned through his faith some good (Sūrat al-Anʿām [6]:158)."

من اقتراب الساعة: ظهور المعادن، وكثرة المطر، وقلة النبات، ويمشي الرجل بالوقية والوقيتين لا يجد أحداً يقبله، حتى يستغني كل أحد، وهم يومئذ أشد ماكانوا تنافساً على دنياهم: وذلك لآيات تظهر، فيفزع الغني إلى الفقير. فيقول: ما أصنع بهذا وهذه الساعة تقوم؟ حتى إن الرجل ليذهب بالرغيف ما يملك غيره، يجول به، فلا يجد من يأخذه، وذلك يوم لأ ينفع نفساً إيمانها لم تكن آمنت من قبل أوكسبت في إيمانها خيراً للأنعام: 58(1)38

According to this <code>qiṣṣa/ḥadīth</code> of Anas b. Mālik, the sign of the end of times will be the proliferation of precious metals along with a complete transmutation in the ordinary processes of life. Rain will increase; instead of vegetation increasing as expected, vegetation will decrease, as if the entire world order is reversed. Likewise, contrary to normal experience, the one who carries money or bread with him will find no one to take it from him so as to add to their own coffers. This will be the case because at that hour the goods of this world will provide no benefit for mankind; man will say, "What will I do with this [money] when it is the last days?" Finally, instead of the rich shunning the poor and living separated from them, they will seek safety and security under their wings. This is, thus, a qissa predicting a toppling of the natural order of life. According to this qissa, the eschaton will alight when the present world turns topsy-turvy. The qissa intends to encourage the establishment of correct priorities, especially faith, as indicated in the use of Sūrat al-An'ām (6):158, in contrast to the ultimately fruitless pursuit of this world's goods.

The exact value of a wuqiyya is unclear since, as Murtaḍā al-Zabīdī noted in his Tāj al-ʿarūs, the value changed depending on the region (wa-yakhtalifu bi-ikhtilāfi iṣṭilāḥi al-bilād). One report valued a wuqiyya at the weight of ten and five-sevenths dirhams while another listed it at forty dirhams; in either case, it was a small amount of money considering that ṣadaqa did not have to be paid on anything less than 200 dirhams; see Murtaḍā al-Zabīdī, Tāj al-ʿarūs, ed. Dāḥī ʿAbd al-Bāqī et al. (Kuwait, 1965–2001), w-q-y (• (• ), 40:231.

<sup>43</sup> Nuʻaym b. Ḥammād, Kitāb al-fitan, ed. Samīr b. Amīn al-Zuhayrī (Cairo, 1991), 2:646–647.

The tyranny and tribulation that will befall the world at the end of times was also connected, in Islamic thought, to the appearance of the Antichrist (al-dajjāl) responsible for the multiple trials inflicted on mankind.<sup>44</sup> In a second qiṣṣa attributed to Qatāda b. Diʿāma, he addressed the issue of the Antichrist by relating a formula for warding off the tribulations brought by him. When relating this qiṣṣa, Qatāda incorporated a Prophetic ḥadūth, transmitted by Abū al-Dardāʾ, stating:

(17) He who memorizes the first ten verses of Sūrat al-Kahf (18) will be protected from the trials of the Antichrist.

In this case, the  $q\bar{a}ss$  emphasized that divine protection came from the power of the Qur'ān.

According to some qussassins, similar spiritual power was found in repeating other religious and devotional sayings. One unnamed qasssins from Jordan at the time of Muʻawiya b. Abī Sufyan claimed that a handful of well-known statements of faith and religious maxims shook "the throne of God and the trees of paradise." With his listeners' rapt attention, he related to them the sayings:

(18) There is no god but God alone. He has no partners. Blessings come from His hand and He is able to do all things...God be praised and lauded. There is no power nor strength save in God, the most High, the Great. I seek refuge in God, the Generous, from His painful torments.

<sup>44</sup> A. Abel, "al-Dadjdjāl," EI2, 2:75-77.

<sup>45</sup> Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 45:526-528.

ألا أخبركم بكلم يهتزلها عرش الرحمن و شجر الجنة قلنا: بلي، قال: لا إله إلا الله وحده، لا شريك له، بيده الخير، وهو على كل شيء قدير، يهتزلها عرش الرحمن و شجر الجنة، ثم قال في أثر ذلك: سبحان الله و بحمده، ولا حول ولا قوة إلا بالله العلي الكبير، أعوذ بوجه الله الكريم من عذابه الألم مه هم الم

An unnamed  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  also encouraged the repetition of dhikr phrases, such as (19) "Praise be to God  $(sabbih\bar{u})$ " and "There is no god but God  $(hallil\bar{u})$ ," ten times each.<sup>47</sup> These qisas which focused on the memorization of Qur'ān, the articulation of short religious and devotional statements and the repetition of dhikr sayings enhanced piety among the listener by offering to them special access points to greater spiritual strength.

In addition to the above signs of the end of time, the coming of the eschaton will be signaled by trumpet blasts announcing death and resurrection. As we encountered in the introduction, an unidentified  $q\bar{a}ssigma$

(20) God has created two trumpets each having two blasts: the blast of death  $(\underline{s}a'aqa)$  and the blast of resurrection  $(qiy\bar{a}ma)$ .

The tradition is of interest for the perception that it conveys about the qussas, as well as for the content that interested them. While this tradition was certainly recorded in the Islamic sources as an example of the fabrications of the qussas, it also confirms the early qassas interest in the signs of the eschaton and perhaps also their going beyond the usual in describing them—presumably in order to frighten their audiences of them.

<sup>46</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 68:128.

The text in Arabic reads: سبحوا عشرا وهللوا عشرا see Ibn Waḍḍāḥ, al-Bidaʿ, ed. M. Isabel Fierro (Madrid, 1988), 162–163.

<sup>48</sup> Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 97–98 (translation taken from Swartz, 177–8); Suyūṭī, Taḥḍhūr, 152–154; al-Qārī al-Harawī, al-Asrār al-marfū'a, 57. See also Goldziher, Muslim Studies II, 156–158; Mez, Renaissance, 350–351.

Another unidentified  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$ , this time from Kufa, expounded the details of the eschaton in his interpretation of the "smoke" ( $dukhkh\bar{a}n$ ) mentioned in Sūrat al-Dukhkhān (44):10. The report can be found in many variants throughout the sources. According to a report in Ṭabarī's  $Tafs\bar{\iota}r$ , the Kufan scholar Masrūq b. al-Ajda' (d. 63/682)<sup>49</sup> heard a man giving qasas at the mosque. This  $q\bar{a}ss$  said:

(21) "A day when the sky will produce visible smoke (Sūrat al-Dukhān [44]:10)." Do you know what that smoke is? That smoke will come on the Day of Resurrection and it will take away the hearing and sight of the hypocrites and will afflict the believers with something like nasal congestion.

مسروق قال دخلنا المسجد فإذا رجل يقص على أصحابه ويقول پوم تأتي السماء بدخان مبين تدرون ما ذلك الدخان ؟ذلك دخان يأتي يوم القيامة فيأخذ بأسماع المنافقين وأبصارهم ويأخذ المؤمنين منه شبه الزُكام. 50

Masrūq informed Ibn Mas'ūd of the  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ's words, and the Companion responded in anger calling on his listeners to speak only of things that they know. He then informed them of the correct meaning of the smoke: the smoke referred to past events of Quraysh's rejection of the Prophet and the judgments that came upon them as a result and, thus, it was not a sign of the end of times. Other variants identify the alleged  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ differently. He was either a  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ giving qaṣaṣ, a man relating stories  $|had\bar{a}th|$   $|had\bar{a}$

<sup>49</sup> On Masrūq see Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:197–205; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:59–60.

<sup>50</sup> Țabarī, Tafsīr, 25:111.

<sup>51</sup> Ibid.

<sup>52</sup> Abū Khaythama al-Nasā'ī, Kitāb al-ʿilm, ed. Muḥammad Nāṣir al-Dīn al-Albānī (Beirut, 1983), 19; Muslim, Ṣaḥīḥ, 4:2155; al-Tirmidhī, Sunan, ed. Ibrāhīm ʿAṭwah ʿAwḍ (Cairo, 1975), 5:379; Ṭabarī, Tafsīr, 25:111.

Ibn Abī Shayba, Musnad, eds. ʿĀdil b. Yūsuf al-Ghazzāwī and Aḥmad Farīd al-Mazyadī (Riyadh, 1997), 1:177; Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 7:179; Ibn Ḥibbān, Ṣaḥīḥ, 14:548.

<sup>54</sup> Ibn Hanbal, Musnad, 6:106.

 $yaq\bar{u}lu$ ).<sup>55</sup> The use of these expressions for the description of the activity of the  $q\bar{a}ss$  indicates the extent of the overlap between the terms qassa, haddatha, fassara, and even  $q\bar{a}la$ . Furthermore, other variants reveal that a number of reputable Companions, such as 'Alī b. Abī Ṭālib, Ḥudhayfa b. al-Yamān, and Ibn 'Umar, concurred with the unnamed  $q\bar{a}ss$ 's interpretation of the smoke, in contrast to Ibn Mas'ūd.<sup>56</sup> Indeed, Ibn Ḥajar speculated, based on these latter variants, that Ḥudhayfa b. al-Yamān may have actually been the unnamed  $q\bar{a}ss$ .<sup>57</sup>

These qiṣas of the coming eschaton and the judgments to be meted out at that time reveal that these topics captured the interest of the quṣṣāṣ. From the authoritative pronouncements of the Prophet to the fanciful musings of an unidentified Palmyran qāṣṣ, these topics seem to have been ready sources in the repertoire of the quṣṣāṣ. Jāḥiẓ, for example, recorded a report that the Basran hadīth scholar Dāwūd b. Abī Hind (d.c. 140/757)<sup>58</sup> rebuked al-Faḍl b. 'Īsā, one of the city's quṣṣāṣ, saying:

If it were not that you interpret the Qur'ān according to your own opinions, we would join your session. [al-Faḍl] said, "Do you think that I am forbidding the permissible and permitting the forbidden?!" [Jāḥiẓ noted that al-Faḍl responded this way because] he was reciting the verses which mention heaven and hell, death and resurrection, and similar topics."

لولا أنّك تفسّر القرآن برأيك لأتيناك في مجلسك. قال: فهل تراني أحرّم حلالاً، أو أُحلُّ حراماً؟ وإنّماكان يتلو الآية التي فيها ذكر الجنة والنار، والموت والحشر، وأشباهُ ذلك. 59

Thus, while this report may not strictly provide textual evidence, it corroborates the qussas's involvement in transmitting reports on these subjects. Yet it

<sup>55 &#</sup>x27;Abd al-Razzāq al-Ṣanʿānī, Tafsīr, ed. Maḥmūd Muḥammad ʿAbduh (Beirut, 1999), 3:206; al-Bazzār, al-Baḥr al-zakhkhār (al-Musnad), ed. Maḥfūz al-Raḥmān Zayn Allāh (Medina, 2003—2009), 5:339. See also al-Ṭayālisī, Musnad (Hyderabad, 1903), 38, 143; al-Ḥumaydī, Musnad, ed. Ḥabīb al-Raḥmān al-Aʻzamī (Karachi, 1963), 63; Bukhārī, Ṣaḥīḥ, 4:1785, 1791, 1809, 1823—1824; Ṭaḥāwī, Sharḥ, 2:421.

<sup>56</sup> Ṭabarī, Tafsūr, 25:112–115. See also 'Abd al-Razzāq, Tafsūr, 3:206; Ibn Abī Ḥātim, Tafsūr, ed. As 'ad Muḥammad al-Ṭayyib (Sidon, n.d), 10:3288.

<sup>57</sup> Ibn Ḥajar, Fatḥ, 8:572.

<sup>58</sup> Abū Bakr Dāwūd b. Abī Hind al-Qushayrī (d.c. 140/757). He was a reputable ḥadīth scholar, muftī and Qurʾān reciter; see Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:204–205.

<sup>59</sup> Jāḥiz, Bayān, 1:291.

must be emphasized that interest in these topics was not at all restricted to the qussas. Since these themes are mentioned often in the Qur'an, it is not unusual to find them represented throughout the literature of the community.<sup>60</sup>

Exemplars—Pre-Islamic Prophets

One method by which the quṣṣāṣ encouraged piety was through framing their qiṣaṣ around the inspirational sayings or virtuous actions of prophets who, therefore, became exemplars of devotion to God. While it is true that no human was able to fully attain the level of piety attained by a prophet specially-chosen by God, the quṣṣāṣ drew lessons from their lives in order to promote greater sincerity of faith among their listeners.<sup>61</sup> Indeed the efficacy of appealing to prophets as examples of pious belief and behavior can be found in the teaching of the Qurʾān itself, where the messengers of God narrate to their people the signs of God (yaquṣṣūn ʿalaykum āyāt; Sūrat al-Aʿrāf [7]:35), they are upheld as examples to be followed (Sūrat Hūd [11]:120; Sūrat al-Kahf [18]:13; Sūrat Ghāfir [40]:78) and the Prophet Muḥammad is commanded to relate the stories of the people of old (f'uqṣuṣ al-qaṣaṣ) as a warning to those who reject God's revelations (Sūrat al-Aʿrāf [7]:176).<sup>62</sup>

Possibly the most significant Qur'ānic passage using the term qa;a; in relating the stories of pre-Islamic prophets is the one in Sūrat Yūsuf (12):1–3:

These are verses of the Scripture that make plain. (2) Lo! We have revealed it, a Lecture in Arabic, that you may understand. (3) We narrate unto you (Muḥammad) the best of narratives (naquṣṣu ʿalayka aḥsan al-qaṣaṣ) in that We have inspired in you this Qurʾān, though aforetime you were of the heedless.<sup>63</sup>

<sup>60</sup> These themes can be found throughout the sources, dating from sermons of the Prophet himself. See Tahera Qutbuddin, "Khuṭba: The Evolution of Early Arabic Oration," Classical Arabic Humanities in Their Own Terms, ed. Beatrice Gruendler (Leiden, 2008), 200; Jane I. Smith and Yvonne Y. Haddad, The Islamic Understanding of Death and Resurrection (Albany, NY, 1981); David Cook, Studies in Muslim Apocalyptic (Princeton, 2002); Nerina Rustomji, The Garden and the Fire: Heaven and Hell in Islamic Culture (New York, 2009).

This fact is most evident in the role of the sunna of the Prophet Muḥammad. While no believer could ever completely emulate the life of the Prophet, his practices serve as the model of right belief and behavior for each individual in the community.

<sup>62</sup> On qaṣaṣ in the Qur'ān, see also Pedersen, "Criticism," 215.

<sup>63</sup> Translation adapted from M.M. Pickthall, The Meaning of the Glorious Qur'an (New York, 2003).

This passage suggests that the term qa$a$, in its Qur'ānic sense, does not simply refer to sayings about the Qur'ān, the religion or even pre-Islamic prophets, rather that qa$a$ was, in some broader way, part of the Qur'ān. In particular, the identification here of God's revelation to the Prophet as qa$a$ is instructive since Sūrat Yūsuf, at the beginning of which these verses occur, is a long narrative passage about a pre-Islamic prophet. Certainly the association of qa$a$ with this Sūra suggests that qa$a$ was a term used to describe narratives about earlier prophets who provided a model of faith for the believers. As we have seen above, this image of qa$a$ seems to have been the dominant image since at least Ibn al-Jawzī, who described the qu$a$a$ as tellers of stories of the earlier prophets.

Precisely how the connection of gasas of the earlier prophets and the Qur'an was to be interpreted became an issue for later exegetes of this passage. According to reports attributed to either Ibn 'Abbās or 'Amr b. Qays, these verses were revealed in response to a wish of certain Companions of the Prophet, who said to him: "If only you had given qaşaş to us (law qaşaşta 'alaynā)!"65 An expanded variant of this report was transmitted by the scholar and  $q\bar{a}ss$ 'Awn b. 'Abd Allāh (d. 110-120/728-738).66 He claimed that the Prophet was asked by a group of his Companions: "Relate something to us (haddithnā)!" In response to this request, God revealed Sūrat al-Zumar (39):23 "God revealed the best hadīth (Allāh nazzala aḥsan al-ḥadīth)." 'Awn then noted that a second group asked the Prophet to "relate to us something above the hadīth but below the Qur'an (ḥaddithnā fawq al-ḥadīth wa-dūn al-Qur'an)." 'Awn glossed this request with the statement: "They meant al-qaṣaṣ;" and so God revealed Sūrat Yūsuf (12):1–3. 'Awn ends the report by asserting: "So, if they wanted hadīth, he [the Prophet] pointed them to "the best hadīth," and if they wanted gasas, he pointed them to "the best qaṣaṣ" (fa-arādū al-ḥadīth fa-dallahum 'alā aḥsan al-ḥadīth wa-arādū al-qaṣaṣ fa-dallahum 'alā aḥsan al-qaṣaṣ)."67

<sup>64</sup> Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 9–10.

Al-Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, ed. Hāshim al-Nadwī (Beirut, n.d.), 6:374; Bazzār, Musnad, 3:352; Abū Ya¹lā al-Mawṣilī, al-Muʿjam, ed. Irshād al-Ḥaqq al-Atharī (Faysalabad, 1986), 139; idem, al-Musnad, ed. Ḥusayn Salīm Asad (Damascus, 1984), 2:87; Ṭabarī, Tafsīr, 12:150; Ṭaḥāwī, Sharḥ, 3:196; Ibn Abī Ḥātim, Tafsīr, 7:2100; Ibn Ḥibbān, Ṣaḥīḥ, 14:92; Tha¹labī, Kashf, 5:196, 9:240.

<sup>66</sup> On him, see the Appendix # 65.

<sup>67</sup> Ṭabarī, Tafsīr, 12:150. The confluence of these reports about qaṣaṣ and ḥadīth is epitomized in Ṭabarī's use of the exact same report as the occasion for the revelation (sabab al-nuzūl) of both passages. At Sūrat Yūsuf (Tafsīr, 12:150), he gives the reports from Ibn 'Abbās and 'Amr b. Qays with the Companions saying: "If only you had given qaṣaṣ to us

This report is curious for its obvious creation of a hierarchy of expression: the Qur'an comes first, then qaṣaṣ, and finally hadīth. Of the three forms of expression, the last, hadīth, seems to be the most opaque. Its use in Sūrat al-Zumar does not help in defining parameters for its meaning since the verses surrounding verse 23 cover many topics, including God as Creator (vv. 4-6, 38), the preferred position of the faithful believer to the unbeliever (vv. 9–12), multiple references to the eternal abodes (vv. 15-19, 24-26, 31-37) and examples of belief and unbelief (v. 27). Thus, while Sūrat Yūsuf, described as gasas, is clearly a passage about a pre-Islamic exemplar of faith, Sūrat al-Zumar, described as hadīth, contains multiple themes and is less easily categorized. Furthermore, even if we were to posit that this hierarchy is anachronistic, projecting later technical meanings of these terms back onto the Qur'an, the order made even less sense, since it alleged that qaṣaṣ was above ḥadīth—a prospect that would certainly not be readily supported by later generations, and maybe not even by 'Awn himself, who, even though a  $q\bar{a}ss$ , was widely respected as a transmitter of Prophetic hadīth. 'Awn's report, then, remains odd. Exactly what he meant by glossing qaṣaṣ "above the ḥadīth but below the Qur'ān" is unclear. What seems to be clear, however, is that, at least in 'Awn's view, qaşaş was an honorable form of expression associated, in this instance, with Qur'anic narratives about the pre-Islamic prophet Joseph. This same interest in pre-Islamic prophets as models for the believers persisted throughout the Umayyad period as revealed in a number of sayings of the quṣṣāṣ.

The Qur'ānic foundation for the retelling of the stories of the prophets can be seen in a qissa of the Meccan  $q\bar{a}ss$  'Ubayd b. 'Umayr, who simply recited three verses from Sūrat Maryam (19) recalling the lives of the earlier prophets, although they are not consecutive in the Sūra:

(22) "mention in the book of Abraham that he was a friend and prophet," "and mention in the book of Ismāʿīl," "and mention in the book of Idrīs." 68

In spite of the fact that this qiṣṣa was composed purely of Qur'ān, the esteemed Ibn ʿAbbās appears to have taken issue with ʿUbayd and his cursory, or perhaps random, selection of verses. When Ibn ʿAbbās heard the qiṣṣa, he encouraged ʿUbayd to expand his praise to each of the prophets. Basing his admonition on Sūrat Ibrāhīm (14):5 stating, "Remind them of the days of God," he said: "Praise those whom God praises."<sup>69</sup> In a variant of the report, Ibn 'Abbās augmented this rebuke to 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr with an admonition to avoid negative innovations; he said: "Recite the Book of God, O Ibn 'Umayr! Mention the recollection of God, and woe to you about innovation in the religion of God."<sup>70</sup> Indeed, Ibn 'Abbās's warning to 'Ubayd to avoid innovation seems odd since 'Ubayd allegedly only recited Qur'ān. It may be that Ibn 'Abbās felt 'Ubayd was showing a preference for certain prophets, interpreting this as an innovation, and thus he advised him to consider all of the prophets, "Praise those whom God praises." Furthermore, reports that fail to connect Ibn 'Abbās's admonition directly to 'Ubayd's reputation as a  $q\bar{a}ss$  merit note.

(law qaṣaṣta ʿalaynā)!" While at Sūrat al-Zumar (Tafsūr, 23:211) the same report became: "If only you had related to us (law ḥaddathtanā)!".

<sup>68</sup> The qiṣṣa itself is recorded in Suyūṭī, Durr, 5:525. 'Ubayd cited Sūrat Maryam (19):42, 54, 56.

Another  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$ , Ibrāhīm b. Yazīd al-Taymī also used Qur'ān in his qasas, as had 'Ubayd.' Ibrāhīm turned to Qur'ānic passages about his prophetic namesake when he sought to convey the inevitability of trials and obstacles in the life of the believers. He emphasized that although Abraham was tempted to worship idols, he was preserved from doing so. Ibrāhīm said in his qasas:

(23) Who is safe from affliction after the friend of God Abraham when he said, "Preserve me and my sons from serving idols (Sūrat Ibrāhīm [14]:35)"?

For Ibrāhīm and his audience, then, Abraham provided an example of God's protection of his prophets from idolatry, as well as a reminder of the destructive effects of idol worship—they lead mankind astray, as mentioned in the next portion of the verse.

In a statement addressing similar themes as that of Ibrāhīm al-Taymī, Ibn 'Abbās told his student Sa'īd b. Jubayr of God's protection of Moses in the face of multiple trials. According to Ibn 'Abbās, Moses's life revealed how God tries the believer and saves him from troubles in order to make him stronger in his faith, like gold refined by fire.<sup>73</sup> This qiṣṣa emphasizes the sovereign will of God

<sup>69</sup> Suyūṭī, Durr, 5:525.

<sup>70</sup> Ibn Waḍḍāḥ, Bida', 176.

<sup>71</sup> On Ibrāhīm, see the Appendix # 38.

<sup>72</sup> Țabarī, Tafsīr, 13:228.

<sup>73</sup> Baghawī, Tafsūr, 3:218. Ṭabarī, when referring to Ibn 'Abbās's telling of the story of Moses, described it as a "long story," using the phrase hadūthan tāwūlan; see his Tafsūr, 16:164. Only to try the believers while also encouraging them with the prospect that they, too, can withstand these trials as their faith is strengthened, as exemplified in the life of Moses.

In addition to idolatry and various troubles allowed by God, the many attractions of this world damaged believers' faith and drew them away from devotion to God. As a result, the anti-qadarī qāṣṣ Abū Idrīs al-Khawlānī upheld Yaḥyā b. Zakariyyā (John the Baptist) as an exemplar who actively avoided the corrupting effects of worldly pleasures.<sup>74</sup> In his qiṣṣa, he asked the crowd:

(24) "Shall I tell you who was the best man in terms of the food [he ate]?"...He said, "John was the best man in terms of food. He ate with the wild animals in order not to mix with people in their pursuit of their livelihoods."

According to Abū Idrīs, John's rustic, ascetic lifestyle of isolation from humanity illustrated righteous rejection of the attractions of this world. Thus, while Abū Idrīs suggests that no other human ever attained, or apparently was in later sources, like Baghawī (d. 516/1122) and Ibn al-Jawzī (d. 597/1200), is the term qissa associated with Ibn 'Abbās and the story of Moses. See Baghawī,  $Tafs\bar{\imath}r$ , 3:218; Ibn al-Jawzī,  $Z\bar{a}d$  al- $mas\bar{\imath}rf\bar{\imath}$  'ilm al- $tafs\bar{\imath}r$  (Beirut, 1983), 5:286. Therefore, as in the case of Ibn Taymiyya's reference to the Prophet's affinity for this qissa, the attribution of the qissa of Moses to Ibn 'Abbās indirectly substantiates the types of subjects affiliated with qasas more than providing definitive proof that either the Prophet or Ibn 'Abbās were qussas's; see Ibn Taymiyya,  $Majm\bar{u}$ ' fatāwa Shaykh al-Islām Ahmad ibn Taymiyya, ed. 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Muḥammad b. Qāsim al-'Āṣimī al-Najdī (Riyadh, 1961–1966). The association of the Prophet with the origins of qasas will be explored in Chapter Four based on other reports connecting him to it.

For Abū Idrīs's anti- $qadar\bar{\imath}$  tendencies, see van Ess, TG, 1:72. On Abū Idrīs, see the Appendix # 31.

<sup>75</sup> Ibn Abī Shayba, al-Kitāb al-muṣannaf fī-l-aḥādīth wa-l-āthār, ed. Kamāl Yūsuf al-Ḥūt (Beirut, 1989), 7:74; al-Fasawī, al-Maʿrifa wa-l-tārīkh, ed. Akram Þiyāʾ al-ʿUmarī (Baghdad, 1974–1976), 2:185; Abū Nuʿaym, Ḥilya, 5:141.

capable of attaining, an equivalent ability to resist the draw of this world as had John (he was, after all, "the best man in terms of food"), he clearly intended to endorse John as an example of pious, if not ascetic, behavior.

Indeed, even the Prophet Muḥammad reportedly found succor in the tales of the lives of the prophets and fulfilled the Qurʾānic command in Sūrat al-Aʿrāf (7):176 to relate their stories to others. Ibn Taymiyya (d. 728/1328) claimed that the Prophet related the "qiṣṣa" of Moses and Pharaoh to his Companions in the evening and that the Prophet found personal comfort in the life of Moses on many points. As a result, Ibn Taymiyya stated: "The qiṣṣa of Moses and Pharaoh became the greatest qiṣṣa in terms of providing an example for the believers and the unbelievers." While Ibn Taymiyya may not have been pleased with the quṣṣāṣ' ability to transmit hadīth, as indicated in his work Ahādīth al-quṣṣāṣ criticizing them for this, he obviously did not object to qiṣaṣ in general since some found their roots firmly planted in the Book of God.

While most examples of piety and faith included in the sayings of the qussas were drawn from the Qur'ānic prophets, a non-Qur'ānic source was used in one instance as a model of wisdom. In the only example of a caliph relating qasas, Abū Bakr, the first caliph of the community, gave qasas purportedly drawing on the proverbial wisdom of the pre-Islamic orator Quss b. Sā'ida al-Iyādī. Teven though we don't know which of Quss's sayings Abū Bakr related, the fact that this famous orator was used as a source for qasas illustrates the diversity of sources in exemplar-oriented qasas-sayings.

The stories of the prophets emphasized in the Qur'ān and by the early believers, including the Prophet himself according to Ibn Taymiyya, eventually developed into a separate genre of Islamic literature, the qiṣaṣ al-anbiya', whose emergence has often been directly connected to the quṣṣāṣ. This generalization, while true in part, does not account for the many other themes the quṣṣāṣ addressed or for the presence of non-quṣṣāṣ as transmitters of these stories. Certainly the stories of the earlier prophets, while undoubtedly comprising a portion of the sayings of the quṣṣāṣ, were not a domain exclusive to them. As a result, evaluations of the qiṣaṣ al-anbiya' literature must consider the interest in the prophets by the broader religious community without ascribing too much influence to the quṣṣāṣ as its source.

<sup>76</sup> Ibn Taymiyya, Majmū' fatāwā, 12:9.

Ibn Qutayba, al-Ma'ārif, ed. Tharwat 'Ukāsha (Cairo, 1969), 1:61.

This assumption is most clearly expressed by Tilman Nagel who wrote, "They are the result of the imaginative art of story-telling cultivated by the popular narrators (quṣṣāṣ), and they are an abundant source for the study of the religious feeling and thinking of the average mediaeval Muslim." See "Ķiṣaṣ al-anbiyā," EI2, 4:180.

The Sunna of the Prophet Muḥammad

When laying before the community examples for emulation, it is natural that the Islamic  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  found inspiration in the Prophet Muḥammad himself. In some of the texts we've encountered, the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  used Prophetic  $had\bar{t}h$  as part of his  $qasa\bar{s}$ . At other times, the Prophet himself became the example. In one instance, the eminent Companion Abū Hurayra is reported to have recited three verses originally composed by 'Abd Allāh b. Rawāḥa. Abū Hurayra said,

(25) in his qaṣaṣ, while he was mentioning the Messenger of God: Verily you have a brother who does not speak indecently; he was referring to 'Abd Allāh b. Rawāḥa [who said]:

We have the Messenger of God who recites His Scripture At the luminous light of dawn.

He revealed to us the correct path while we were blind, so that our hearts

Are assured that all which he said would transpire.

He passed the night next to his bed (in worship?) While the unbelievers slept soundly.

In this poem within a qiṣṣa, the Prophet is portrayed as a source of enlightenment for the believers, for he is the one from whom they received the word of

<sup>79</sup> Bukhārī, Ṣaḥīḥ, 1:387, 5:2278; idem, al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 8:212; al-Dāraquṭnī, Sunan, ed. 'Abd Allāh Hāshim Yamānī al-Madanī (Beirut, 1966), 1:120; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 28:105. See also Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 25:13.

God, by whom they are rightly guided, in whom they can trust and through whom they find the inspiration to discipline themselves in worshiping God.

However, the clearly pious intent of Abū Hurayra in transmitting these honorable traits of the Prophet must be filtered through the alleged provenance of these verses suggesting that it originated as a rather humorous, if not irreverent, statement given in the midst of a marital squabble between Ibn Rawāḥa and his wife. Ibn Rawāḥa ostensibly composed these verses and pawned them off on his unwitting wife as Qurʾān. Apparently, the verses were then picked up by others, such as Abū Hurayra, who related them in praise of the Prophet although without any reference to the story purportedly laying behind them. Consequently, we have here a poem that was originally a portion of a story about Ibn Rawāḥa that became a part of a qiṣṣa of Abū Hurayra, who used it to extol the virtues of the Prophet. Not only does this progression indicate how stories were reappropriated for other purposes, it further reveals the complexity in determining exactly how the Islamic sources defined a "qiṣṣa."

The ability of the community to trust the guidance and wisdom of the Prophet is expressed in a second qissa, in the form of a  $had\bar{u}th$ . It is a rather long tradition recounting the Prophet's choice between guaranteeing paradise for only a fixed number of his followers, seventy thousand to be exact, or being privy to a divine secret  $(khab\bar{u}a)$ . The tradition was transmitted as part of a qissa by the  $q\bar{a}ss$  Abū Ruhm (26).<sup>82</sup> It upholds the Prophet as an exemplar because of his wise choice of the latter option, which the Companion Abū Ayyūb al-Anṣārī later revealed to be entry into paradise for all those who say the  $shah\bar{u}a$  in full belief—a decision affording paradise to numbers much greater than seventy thousand.<sup>83</sup> By retelling this tradition, the  $q\bar{a}ss$  Abū Ruhm extolled the wisdom of the Prophet. And while the the individual believer could not replicate the Prophet's choice, a qissa of this type affirmed the image

The account states that Ibn Rawāḥa left his wife at night to have sexual relations with his handmaiden. When his wife awoke in the night, she found him with her, grabbed a knife and set off after him. He, however, claimed that he did not have relations with her and stated that, according to a ruling by the Prophet, he could not recite Qur'ān if he was in a state of impurity, as would be his condition if he had had sexual relations with the handmaiden. When his wife then challenged him to recite, he composed these verses extemporaneously and ostensibly pawned them off on his ignorant wife as Qur'ān. His ruse worked and caused the Prophet to laugh when he heard the story. See al-Dāraquṭnī, Sunan, ed. 'Abd Allāh Hāshim Yamānī al-Madanī (Beirut, 1966), 1:120; and Ze'ev Maghen, "The Merry Men of Medina," Der Islam 83:2 (2006); 337–338.

<sup>81</sup> Note the lack of context in the variants recorded by Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 25:13; Bukhārī, Şahīḥ, 1:387, 5:2278; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 28:105.

<sup>82</sup> On Abū Ruhm, see the Appendix # 53.

<sup>83</sup> Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 38:491.

of the Prophet and, by extension, encouraged in the believer greater trust in him as the prime exemplar for the community. Indeed, reference to the life of the Prophet in the sayings of the qussas is noteworthy since the qussas are most often associated with stories of pre-Islamic prophets. This and the previous report indicate that traditions concerning the life of the Prophet of Islam also garnered the attention of the qussas.

Legal Rulings

The Islamic community upheld the example of the Prophet Muḥammad through a number of ways. In fact, while the stories of the pre-Islamic prophets continued to educate the community about the faith and to promote piety in it, the primary model for the community was certainly the Prophet himself insofar that his words and actions (the sunna) became the supreme standard of belief and conduct for the faithful. It is not surprising, then, that the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  of early Islam showed an interest in stories about the Prophet and also engaged in the transmission of qaṣaṣ expounding upon how his words and actions were to be adopted for reasons of practical piety. The sources preserve a handful of qaṣaṣ texts indicating that the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  addressed issues of legal relevance (fiqh) in their qaṣaṣ by recounting the example of the Prophet. Although the issues dealt with in these statements are related to legal rulings, they remain, nevertheless, issues of piety, since questions related to fiqh are ultimately questions of right faith and conduct and, consequently, are still matters of piety.

Sham'ūn Abū Rayḥāna, a Companion of the Prophet, a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  in Jerusalem and a fighter on the frontier ( $thug\bar{u}r$ ), related in a  $qis\bar{s}a$  of his a list of ten activities forbidden by the Prophet.<sup>84</sup> They are,

(27) Filing teeth, tattoos, hair removal, a man sleeping next to another man without wearing his undergarments, a woman sleeping next to another woman without wearing her undergarments, a man putting silk on the hem of his clothes as the Persians do, a man putting [silk] on his shoulders as the Persians do, plunder, riding on tigers, and wearing a ring unless he is in charge.

نهى رسول ألله عن عشرة: عن الوَشْرِ، والوَشْم، والنتف، و عن مُكامعة الرجل الرجل بغير شِعار، ومُكامعة المرأة المرة بغير شِعار، وأن يجعل

<sup>84</sup> On Sham'ūn Abū Rayḥāna, see the Appendix # 50.

This qissa may be the clearest example of the early qussās's interest in issues of practical pious behavior. On the surface, the list looks like a hodge-podge of unrelated prohibitions. However, it may well be a series of responses to questions of practical relevance, some reflecting Abū Rayḥāna's own connection to the thughūr; for we know that he lived for a time in the military garrison city of Mayyāfāriqīn, in the region of the upper Tigris.<sup>86</sup> If the list is viewed as the exposition of a religious teacher and soldier living among other soldiers in a peripheral area on the border of the empire, then some of the more unusual prohibitions may yield to clarification. It is not difficult to imagine, for instance, that soldiers would raise questions on topics such as how to sleep next to one another without sin, how plunder was to be allocated, and the legitimacy of wearing rings when one is not in authority.87 Furthermore, references to the dress of the Persians and the riding of tigers may be a product of the location of the thughūr and the subsequent exposure of the Muslims to new and unusual cultures. As for the first three items on the list, these are issues of grooming and may simply be here to address common issues of daily living. When looked at from this perspective, the seemingly strange mix of prohibitions may be understandable. However, regardless of the context of the qissa, it still reveals that the quṣṣāṣ addressed issues of practical piety in their qaṣaṣ.

A second qiṣṣa, given by an unknown  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ dealt with a legal question that appears to have also been of particular importance to soldiers. Ibn 'Awf al-A'rābī said:

(28) A sheikh who was giving qaṣaṣ to us related to us in a session before the events of Ibn al-Ashʻath (80-3/699-702), saying, "I learned that the Companions of the Prophet were traveling and they came to a stream which had a cadaver on its bank. So they stayed away from it until the

<sup>85</sup> Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 28:441–442; Abū Dāwūd, Sunan, ed. Muḥammad Muḥyī al-Dīn 'Abd al-Ḥamīd (Cairo, 1950–1951), 4:48; Fasawī, Maʿrifa, 1:302, 2:299; Nasāʾī, Sunan, 5:426; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 23:194–195. See also Jūda, "Qaṣaṣ," 109.

<sup>86</sup> See the Appendix # 50.

<sup>87</sup> One may argue that this does not explain the ruling on women sleeping next to each other in a military context. It seems possible to me that if the statement about the men was a reply to a question on the topic, then a natural follow up question would be to ask if the same applied to women. This, however, must remain speculation.

Messenger of God came. Then they said, "O Messenger of God, there is a cadaver in it." He said, "Use it for watering and drinking because the water makes it permissible not forbidden."

حدثنا في مجلس الأشياخ قبل وقعة ابن الأشعث شيخٌ فكان يقص علينا قال: بلغني أن أصحاب رسول الله كانوا في مسير لهم فانتهوا الى غدير في ناحية منه جيفة فامسكوا عنه حتى أتاهم رسول الله فقالوا: يا رسول الله هذه الجيفة في ناحيته فقال: اسقوا واستقوا فإن الماء يحل ولا يحرم. 88

That the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  related the Prophetic tradition prior to the events of Ibn al-Ash'ath seems to indicate that the legal predicament expressed here possessed particular relevance in a military context. The obvious intent of the  $qi\bar{s}s$  was to teach that the Prophet allowed drinking water from a stream when a cadaver was in it because the continual flow of the water made the cadaver ritually pure.

Other qaṣaṣ addressed issues of legal import as they pertained to subjects related to the ritual pillars of the faith. There may be, for instance, no other more persistent reminder for the Muslim of pious belief and practice than the obligatory daily prayers (al-salāt). The importance of the correct performance of those prayers, as well as that of other supererogatory prayers, became a major concern for the community such that references to it are found extensively throughout the Islamic sources, including in qaṣaṣ statements. 'Ubayd b. Umayr (29) reportedly gave a qissa discussing the proper implementation of the required daily prayers by noting that he personally witnessed the Prophet having once forgotten to pray the correct number of rak'as in the afternoon prayer ('aṣr): he did two while the required were four. When the Prophet's attention was drawn to that, he returned and did the remaining two rak'as.89 The intent of the qiṣṣa may be interpreted in a number of ways, including identifying the correct number of prescribed prostrations in the afternoon prayer. However, there is a strong sense that the qissa is intended to offer the Prophet as an example to the community of not only what to do when one forgets aspects of devotional practices—return and correct the mistake—but also, perhaps, as a consolation to those who also forgot, as the Prophet himself forgot on at least one occasion. Therefore, while the statement is, on its surface, a qissa related to the proper performance of salāt, it is equally an illustration of the pious humility—and humanity—of the Prophet in correcting his mistake and, thus, of his worth as an exemplar.

<sup>88</sup> Ibn Abī Shayba, Muşannaf, 1:131.

<sup>89 &#</sup>x27;Abd al-Razzāq, Muṣannaf, 2:298.

This overlap in function of the qaṣaṣ statements is evident in other sayings of a legal nature. Zayd b. Thābit, for example (30), gave a qiṣṣa stating, if a man did not ejaculate during sexual intercourse, he did not have to perform the major ablutions; he only needed to wash himself and perform the standard ablutions ( $wud\bar{u}$ ).

This statement led to a confrontation between Zayd and 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb, who disagreed with Zayd. Ultimately, after seeking the opinion of 'Alī b. Abī Ṭālib and Ḥafṣa bt. 'Umar, the Prophet's wife, neither of whom were able to provide an answer, the matter was presented to 'Ā'isha, who stated that the question surrounding major ablution did not center on ejaculation rather on the degree of penetration.<sup>92</sup>

A second qiṣṣa, this time from Abū Ḥurayra, addressed another aspect of sexually-related defilements and how they affect the implementation of religious practices, namely fasting. Abū Ḥurayra said in his qiṣṣa:

(31) Anyone who finds himself in a state of major ritual impurity at the time of the dawn prayer, let him not fast.

Some of Abū Ḥurayra's listeners disagreed with him, and the issue was brought before 'Ā'isha and Umm Salama, the wives of the Prophet. They stated that the issue depended upon the reason for the impurity: "When the Prophet used to wake at the dawn prayer in a state of major ritual impurity not because of

<sup>90</sup> On Zayd, see the Appendix # 18.

<sup>91</sup> Al-Ṭabarānī,  $al-Mu'jam\;al-kab\bar{u}r,$ ed. Ḥamdī b. 'Abd al-Majīd al-Salafī (Mosul, 1984), 5:42.

<sup>92</sup> She stated that if the circumcised part of the penis penetrates the woman, then the man is obligated to perform a major ablution. The text continues by noting that her answer raised the question of circumcision among the discussants. See Ṭabarānī, *al-Muʿjam al-kabū*r, 5:42.

<sup>93 &#</sup>x27;Abd al-Razzāq, Muṣannaf, 4:180; Muslim, Ṣaḥīḥ, 2:779.

nocturnal emissions from a dream, he would fast." Upon hearing this, Abū Ḥurayra acquiesced and alleged his judgment derived from al-Faḍl b. 'Abbās (d. 18/639) and not from the Prophet.<sup>94</sup>

Both of these statements reveal that qaṣaṣ in early Islam incorporated pronouncements on fiqh based on the Prophet's sunna. While these statements certainly intend to foster pious behavior in the believers, they addressed specific legal issues rather than called in general to greater piety based on religious positions about the nature of God, death or the hereafter, for example. It is evident from these two statements, as well as those on the prohibitions, cadavers-in-water, and prayer, that the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  were equally comfortable with incorporating legal rulings in their qiṣaṣ as they were with expositions of the hereafter or the stories of the prophets.

Religious Knowledge ('ilm)

All of the above suggests that the qussas of early Islam were genuinely interested in promoting the religious knowledge of the Islamic community from multiple angles. Indeed, the general concern of the qussas with the religious education of the community was expressed in a final handful of qasas statements addressing the issue of religious knowledge ('ilm) and its importance to the community.

<sup>94</sup> Muslim, Ṣaḥiḥ, 2:779-780. On al-Faḍl b. ʿAbbās, see Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:392.

These reports will be analyzed in Chapter Four. On Tamīm, see the Appendix # 16.

<sup>96</sup> Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 32–33 (translation taken from Swartz, 117). See also Ibn al-Mubārak, Zuhd, 1:508; al-Bayhaqī, al-Madkhal ilā al-sunan al-kubrā, ed. Muḥammad Diyāʾ al-Raḥman al-Aʻzamī (Kuwait, 1983), 445; al-Khaṭīb al-Baghdādī, al-Jāmiʿ li-akhlāq al-rāwī wa-ādāb al-sāmiʿ, ed. Maḥmūd al-Ṭaḥḥān (Riyadh, 1982), 1:211; Ibn ʿAsākir, Dimashq, 11:81. The same phrase has been attributed to at least three other people: the Prophet (Ibn ʿAdī, al-Kāmil fī ḍuʿafāʾ al-rijāl, [Beirut, 1984], 6:60; al-Bayhaqī, al-Sunan al-kubrā, ed. Muḥammad ʿAbd al-Qādir ʿAṭā [Mecca, 1994], 10:211; Ibn al-Qaysarānī, Dhakhīrat al-ḥuffāz, ed. ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. ʿAbd al-Jabbār al-Faryawāʾī [Riyadh, 1996], 1:231); Ibn Masʿūd (Ibn ʿAsākir, Dimashq, 65:340); and Ibrāhīm al-Nakhaʿī (Abū Ṭālib al-Makkī, Qūt al-qulūb, eds. ʿAbd

Ibn 'Abbās, two influential leaders of the community, were attending his session. When the two distinguished Companions asked Tamīm what he meant by his comment, he explained: "The learned man commits sins before the people and the people imitate him in this. The learned man might, perhaps, repent of an evil, but the people will go on imitating his sin." In this qiṣṣa, Tamīm conveys the idea that the scholar was a living exemplar; it was his responsibility to teach the people correctly and also, perhaps more importantly, to be a model of right faith and conduct for the community.

Even here, according to another qissa, while the community was in danger, it was not necessarily because of the failures of its scholars, rather on account of the steady loss of its scholars as a result of death. Ibn Masʿūd warned his audience of this danger in a proclamation/qissa that he gave in Damascus on a Thursday, his regular day for giving qasas. He said:

(33) Oh people, you must gain knowledge before it is taken away, for it is being taken as those who possess it pass on! So beware of innovation and of excessive speculation into meanings, but rather keep the long-standing traditions, for there will come at the end of this umma groups who will allege that they are calling others to the Book of God, when in fact they have forsaken it (lit. "threw it behind their backs" [wa qad nabadhūhu warā' zuhūrihim]).

يا أيها الناس عليكم بالعلم قبل أن يُرفع، فإنّ من رفعه أن يُقبضَ أصحابه، وإيّاكم والتبدّع والتنظع، وعليكم بالعتيق، فإنه سيكون في آخر هذه الأمة أقوام يزعمون أنهم يدعون إلى كتاب الله، وقد نبذوه وراء ظهورهم. 98

Ibn Mas'ūd offered a solution to this problem: the people themselves should "gain [correct] knowledge" (ayyuhā al-nās 'alaykum bi-l-'ilm), one that does not include innovations and speculative interpretations of religious issues yet that maintains the tried and true traditions of the faith. He allegedly conveyed the same conviction in another Thursday statement (qaṣaṣ?) in Damascus:

al-Ḥamīd Madkūr and ʿĀmir al-Najjār [Cairo, 2005–2007], 4:310; al-Ghazālī, Iḥyā' ʿulūm al-dīn [Beirut, 1982], 2:183).

<sup>97</sup> Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 32–33 (translation taken from Swartz, 117).

<sup>98</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 33:52.

"Learn, for knowledge is beneficial ( $ta'allam\bar{u}$  fa'l-'ilm yanfa'u)."99 In a third pronouncement, whose attribution to Ibn Mas'ūd and identification as a qi, is uncertain, Ibn Mas'ūd expounded broadly on the beliefs and practices of the faith using a series of more than seventy aphorisms. $^{100}$

If, indeed, the qussas were interested in promoting the religious knowledge of the community, then it came as little surprise that the Kufan qass Kurdūs highlighted the benefits of the qasas sessions:

(34) He used to give qasas and say, "A man from the people who fought at Badr related to me that the Prophet said, "Sitting in this session (meaning that of qasas) is preferable to me than freeing four slaves."

Arguably, this qissa was merely an attempt at professional self-validation, whereby a  $q\bar{a}$ ss extols the virtues of his type of gatherings.  $^{102}$

The above thirty-four qaṣaṣ statements are quite tame and a far cry from what has normally been associated with the quṣṣāṣ by reputation. In fact, in spite of the diverse array of themes represented in these statements, from those

<sup>99</sup> Ibid.

Variations of the statement can be found throughout the sources. A shorter version, 100 containing approximately thirty-three proverbs, was attributed to the Prophet by Abū Ḥayyān al-Tawḥīdī; see his al-Baṣā'ir wa-l-dhakā'ir, ed. Wadād al-Qāḍī (Beirut, 1988), 7:10-12. Al-Mas'ūdī claimed that the sayings should be attributed to the Prophet, arguing that these aphorisms are repeated often and the speakers rarely know that they originated with the Prophet; see his Murūj al-dhahab, ed. Charles Pellat (Beirut, 1965) 3:35. Other variants of the statement have been attributed to Ibn Mas'ūd and are often identified as a khuṭba or even as simply "a saying (qāla ʿAbd Allāh b. Mas ʿūd)." See Jāḥiẓ, Bayān, 2:56-57; Ibn Waḍḍāḥ, Bida', 172; al-Bāqillānī, I'jāz al-Qur'ān, ed. al-Sayyid Aḥmad Şaqr (Cairo, 1997), 147; Abū Nu'aym, Hilya, 1:188; al-Ābī, Nathr al-durar, ed. Khālid 'Abd al-Ghanī Maḥfūz (Beirut, 2004), 2:49; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 33:179-180. In only one variant is the pronouncement identified as a qissa; see Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 33:180. However, even here, the precise identification of the statement is uncertain since Ibn Mas'ūd is said to have either given  $qa\bar{s}a\bar{s}$  or given an oration  $(k\bar{a}na\ yakhtubun\bar{a})$ . For a discussion of the attribution of the statement to both the Prophet and Ibn Mas'ūd, see the comments of Qadī in her edition of Tawhīdī's Baṣā'ir, 7:10; 9:246-248.

<sup>101</sup> Ibn Abī Shayba, Musnad, 2:417.

The relevance of this tradition to the question of qaṣaṣ at the time of the Prophet will be explored in Chapter Four.

on qadar to legal pronouncements, the message of some of these qiṣaṣ is rather unclear. While this analysis has shown that the term qaṣṣa was applied to a number of topics, precisely what the term indicates is still elusive. It may be helpful to note, in this regard, that virtually every statement presented above is only a portion of what seems to have been a larger statement or teaching session. Indeed, only one statement, that qiṣṣa about the three men of the children of Israel (# 3), may be complete, although even this is not entirely certain.

The sources often indicate that these statements were delivered in a broader context by mentioning that the saying came "in" the qissa of the speaker. This is most obvious in a qissa attributed to Abū Hurayra introduced by the following statement: "in his qasas, while he was mentioning the Messenger of God." The portion of the qasas statement preserved by the sources is, therefore, a sub-set of the qissa, if not a second sub-set: qissa -> "mentioning the Messenger of God" -> poetic verse about the Prophet. The sources only preserve the last statement—the verse.

Clearly this makes any definitive statements about the precise meaning of  $qa\bar{s}\bar{s}a$  difficult. At this juncture, a  $qi\bar{s}\bar{s}a$  was taken in multiple directions—this, in itself, however, is not surprising. What appears to be unusual, though, is the extent of its applicability; it led to statements about the nature of God, incorporated examples of the Prophet Muḥammad and other prophets, yielded legal judgments, as well as other functions. Indeed, it suggests that the term  $qa\bar{s}a\bar{s}$  is not to be defined simply on content; other factors seem to be at play when distinguishing it from other disciplines and functions. This breadth of association is, in fact, reflected in the types of religious associations  $qu\bar{s}a\bar{s}$  held throughout the Umayyad period to be addressed in Chapter Two.

The above evaluation also sheds light on the sources that the qussas used for their qasas. The majority of the qasas sayings, 17 of the 34, were original statements of the qussas. These qisas reveal that the qussas were not averse to giving their own opinions, even on matters of legal import, such as the qisas-legal rulings of Zayd b. Thabit and Abū Hurayra; in these instances, only when the correctness of their opinion was challenged did they seek out assistance in establishing the sunna of the Prophet. The second most common source was the sunna of the Prophet, with eleven sayings based on a Prophetic hadith

<sup>103</sup> See above, 39.

One criterion for distinguishing between different sessions may be the way qaṣaṣ sessions were conducted. See Chapter Three.

<sup>105</sup> These are numbers 1, 2, 6, 7, 8, 10, 12, 14, 18, 19, 20, 24, 25, 30, 31, 32 and 33.

<sup>106</sup> These are numbers 30 and 31.

Martial Qaşaş

<sup>107</sup> These are numbers 3, 4, 5, 11, 15, 17, 26, 27, 28, 29 and 34.

<sup>108</sup> These are numbers 9, 13, 21, 22 and 23.

This is number 16. One could add to this the qaṣaṣ of Abū Bakr based on Quss b. Sā'ida although we have no specific example of the caliph's use of the sayings of the legendary orator.

<sup>110</sup> Goldziher, Muslim Studies II, 152–153; Pedersen, "Islamic Preacher," 231–232; 'Athamina, "Qaṣaṣ," 57–58.

Goldziher, Muslim Studies II, 152; Pedersen, "Islamic Preacher," 232; T. Fahd, "Shā'ir," *EI*2, 9:226–227. It should be noted that the reciters of poetry in the battlefields prior to Islam as well as during the Islamic period were often tribal leaders and renowned warriors in their own right. Certainly the image of the pre-Islamic legendary warrior-poet 'Antara is applicable here; see R. Blachère, " 'Antara," *EI*2, 1:521–522; B. Heller, "Sīrat 'Antara," *EI*2, 1:518–521. However, examples can also be found in the Islamic period; see Naṣr b. Muzāḥim, Waq'at Şiff'in, ed. 'Abd al-Salām Muḥammad 'Hārūn (Cairo, 1962), 484, 547; Ibn Abī al-Ḥadīd, Sharh nahj al-balāgha, ed. Muḥammad 'Abd al-Karīm al-Namarī (Beirut, 1998), 2:130.

Furthermore, the identification of the following texts as martial texts does not imply that they were devoid of religious themes, since the martial qussas relied heavily on those themes in their exhortations. In fact, some of the following qasas statements expanded their emphasis into explications of religiopolitical ideologies, revealing an even broader spectrum for subject material. Conversely, other martial qasas sayings narrowed their focus to deal only with military strategy. It is evident, therefore, that qasas, even in a martial context, was a medium applicable to a number of needs in the community.

The Conquest of Syria

The sources for the conquest of Syria tell of five men who engaged in martial gaṣaṣ: Saʿīd b. Zayd, Abū ʿUbayda b. al-Jarrāḥ, Muʿādh b. Jabal, ʿAmr b. al-ʿĀṣ and Abū Sufyān b. Ḥarb. As the names indicate, these men were Companions of the Prophet and major figures in the early Islamic community. According to both al-Azdī's Futūḥ al-Shām and al-Ṭabarī's Tārīkh, they were all military leaders who, by their qiṣaṣ, sought to exhort their soldiers to bravery in battle. In this regard, they played dual roles, first as military leaders, and second as morale officers. Even though the sources identify five martial qussās in the conquest of Syria, only four qaṣaṣ sayings have been preserved. For the fifth, Azdī states that Saʿīd b. Zayd, who died in the conquest of Damascus, purportedly in the year 15/636, led the right flank of the Muslims' army; when the Byzantines attacked he "called out in supplication to God and gave qasas to them (i.e., the soldiers), (yad'ū Allāh wa-yaquṣṣu 'alayhim)."112 While the content of this particular qissa is not given, the association of yaqussu and supplication to God suggests that the phenomenon was, at least in part, religious in nature, in spite of the military environment of its delivery.

The merging of religious and martial themes only hinted at in the previous text was expressed overtly in other martial qa, a, sayings. In a later battle at Fihl, Abu ʿUbayda b. al-Jarrāh (d. 18/639), one of the ten leading Companions to whom paradise was allegedly promised (al-ʿashara al-mubashshara), delivered a qi, a to his soldiers. a

Al-Azdī, Futūḥ al-Shām, eds. ʿIṣām Muṣṭafa ʿUqla and Yūsuf Aḥmad Banī Yāsīn (Irbid, 2005), 181. For an excellent historiographical analysis of al-Azdī's Futūḥ, see Lawrence Conrad, "Al-Azdī's History of the Arab Conquests in Bilād al-Shām: Some Historiographical Observations," in Proceedings of the Second Symposium on the History of Bilād al-Shām during the Early Islamic Period up to 40 A.H./640 A.D., ed. Muḥammad Adnan Bakhit (Amman, 1987), 1:28–62. For Saʿīd b. Zayd, see the Appendix # 4.

<sup>113</sup> For Abū ʿUbayda b. al-Jarrāḥ, see the Appendix # 5.

(1) He rode and surveyed the lines from front to back and stopped at each tribal flag and gave qaṣaṣ to the people and incited them, saying, "Servants of God, you are deserving of the victory from God through patience, for "God is with the patient" (Sūrat al-Baqara [2]:153). Servants of God, I bring you good tidings: he among you who is killed will have died as a martyr and he who survives does so in victory and booty. But prepare yourselves for battle, for being pierced by lances, struck by swords, hit by arrows, and seized upon by the enemy; for one only knows what God has prepared for him by obedience to Him, by patience while in loathsome situations, and by petitioning [God] for his good favor. You will never attain these except through God['s help]."

وركب أبو عبيدة بن الجراح، واستعرض الصف من أوله إلى آخره، يقف على كل راية وكل قبيلة يقص على الناس ويحرّضهم، و يقول: عباد الله، استوجبوا من الله النصر بالصبر، فإن الله مع الصابرين عباد الله، أنا أبشركم، مَن قُتِلَ منكم بالشهادة، ومَن بقي منكم بالنصر والغنيمة، ولكن وطنوا أنفسكم على القتال، والطعن بالرماح، والضرب بالسيوف، والرمي بالنبل، ومعانقة الأقران، فإنه والله ما يدرك ما عند الله إلا بطاعته، والصبر في المواطن المكروهة والتماس رضوانه، ولن تبلغواذلك إلا بالله. 114

This text connects qaṣaṣ directly to inciting the soldiers. Here, Abū 'Ubayda instructed the soldiers in both religious and military matters as to how to fight the coming battle; and, for the most part, the two areas of emphasis are intertwined throughout the text. First, certain features of the qiṣṣa emphasize a religious line of argumentation. Abū 'Ubayda, for example, affirmed the rectitude of the soldiers' cause by twice noting their privileged relationship to God by identifying them as "servants of God." He also insisted that they must patiently trust in God, even in the midst of "loathsome situations," doing so by virtue of a Qur'ānic passage, Sūrat al-Baqara (2):153. Moreover, he encouraged them to pray to God for His blessings and His assistance.<sup>115</sup>

<sup>114</sup> Azdī, Futūḥ, 221–222. See also Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 2:148. Al-Kalā'ī recorded a variant of Abū 'Ubayda's qiṣṣa; see his al-Iktifā', ed. Muḥammad Kamāl al-Dīn 'Izz al-Dīn 'Alī (Beirut, 1997), 3:203.

Abū 'Ubayda's qiṣṣa, while steeped in religious terminology, remains, however, a statement primarily intended to bolster the martial awareness of the soldiers. The most obvious example of this aim is his description of the potential horrors of battle awaiting his soldiers: "But prepare yourselves for battle, for being pierced by lances, struck by swords, hit by arrows, and seized upon by the enemy." He compounded this foreboding description with an exposition of the uncertainties of battle couched in religious terminology. He informed his soldiers that no one can know exactly what was going to happen in the coming battle and that the only way to find out was to commit oneself to it by obedience, by patience, and by invocation: "For one only knows what God has prepared for him by obedience to Him, by patience while in loathsome situations, and by petitioning [God] for his good favor."

This stark image could make the knees of even the strongest soldier quiver, and so Abū 'Ubayda surrounded this explication of the harsh reality of battle with words of encouragement: "Servants of God, I bring you good tidings." In the beginning, he told them that they will either die as martyrs (i.e., the death of those who are in the right) or they will survive the day victoriously and enjoy booty from the battle: "He among you who is killed will have died as a martyr and he who survives does so in victory and booty." In the end, he assured them of the help of God: "you will never attain these [meaning God's good favors] except through God['s help]." Even the multiple references to the need for patience ("you are deserving of the victory from God through patience, for God is with the patient ... by patience while in loathsome situations"), though they are presented as religious arguments, reveal a military commander's concern for his soldiers' ability to persevere and to remain level-headed in battle. Abū 'Ubayda appears to have been an effective orator for his soldiers were "energized to meet their foes, dashing towards them (wa-l-muslimūn nushshāṭ ilā liqā' 'aduwwihim surrā' ilayhim)."116

A martial qasas statement attributed to Muʻadh b. Jabal, the eminent Companion of the Prophet, also joins together religious and martial themes. $^{117}$

The use of religious themes in a martial context can be found in other works, such as Ṭabarī's Tārīkh, as will be seen below, but it is particularly evident in Azdī's Futūḥ which, as Lawrence Conrad, has noted, is keen on portraying the conquest as a divine plan. Thus, as Conrad has phrased it, Azdī's presentation of the conquest of Syria, "while certainly a triumph of arms, should primarily be seen as an expression of the divine will and plan of God at work in the domain of human affairs;" see his "al-Azdī," 39–40, 46–47.

<sup>116</sup> Azdī, Futūḥ, 222.

<sup>117</sup> For Muʿādh, see the Appendix # 6.

Mu'ādh allegedly delivered this qiṣṣa before the soldiers at the battle of al-Yarmūk. He said:

(2) O reciters of the Qur'ān, memorizers of the Book, defenders of the true religion, protectors of the truth! Verily God's mercy, by God, cannot be obtained nor can His paradise be entered by simply wishing it so (bi-l-amānī). Nor does He grant forgiveness and great mercy except to the faithful who believe in what God has promised them. Did you not hear the saying of God, "God has promised those of you who believe and do good work that He will surely make them to succeed (the present rulers) in the earth even as He caused those who were before them to succeed (others) (Sūrat al-Nūr (24):55)?" You, God willing, are the victorious ones "And obey God and His Messenger, and dispute not one with another lest you falter and your strength depart from you; but be steadfast! Lo! God is with the steadfast (Sūrat al-Anfāl (8):46)." Be ashamed before your Lord who sees you fleeing from your enemies though you are in His grasp and have His mercy. There is neither sanctuary for you nor refuge other than with Him. Nor can one be strengthened by anyone other than God.

يا قراء القرآن ومستحفظي الكتاب و أنصار الهدى و أولياء الحق، إن رحمة الله لا تُنال، و جنته لا تُدخل بالأماني و لا يؤتي الله المغفرة والرحمة الواسعة إلا للصادقين المصدّقين بما وعدهم الله عز و جل، ألم تسمعوا لقول الله عز و جل: ﴿ وَعَدَ الله الذينَ آمنوا منكم وعَمَلوا الصالحات ليستَخَلِفَنَهُم في الأرض كما استَخْلَفَ الذين مِن قبّلهم ﴿ أنتم، إن شاء الله، منصورون ﴿ وأطيعُوا الله ورسوله ولا تنازعوا فتَفْشَلوا وتَذْهَبَ رِيحُكم واصبروا إنَّ الله مع الصابرين ﴿ واستحيوا من ربكم أن يراكم فُرارًا من عدوكم، وأنتم في قبضته و رحمته، وليس لأحد منكم مَلجأ ولا مُلتَجأ من دونه، ولا متعزز بغير الله. ١١٤

<sup>118</sup> Azdī, Futūḥ, 323–324; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 2:148–149; Kalā'ī, Iktifā', 3:263. For a parallel verse to Sūrat al-Nūr (24):55, see Sūrat al-Mā'ida (5):9.

In similar fashion to Abū 'Ubayda, who called his soldiers "servants of God," Mu'ādh identified his soldiers as "reciters of the Qur'ān (yā qurrā' al-Qur'ān), memorizers of the Book, defenders of the true religion, protectors of the truth," apparently with the intent of fostering in them feelings of honor, in addition to faith. These are appellations of piety, and these types of religious sentiments can be found throughout the statement. The dominant theme of the qiṣṣa centers on the relationship between faith and works and is presented in three stages: the principle, the Qur'ānic defense of the principle and the application of the principle. Although this subject matter is presented in religious terminology, it, like Abū 'Ubayda's saying above, contains a very definite martial objective.

First, the principle of the qiṣṣa is that the blessings of God can only be obtained through faith followed by actions. His mercy and paradise, for example, cannot be obtained by simply wishing for them; and the wishing described here is not simply hoping that one will eventually merit entry into paradise; in fact, it is indicative of those who lack belief, and even of Satan himself.<sup>119</sup> Thus, God's forgiveness and mercy are reserved for the faithful who believe his promises. Secondly, the qiṣṣa supports the principle with two Qur'ānic verses.<sup>120</sup> The first verse, a citation of Sūrat al-Nūr (24):55, emphasizes that God will grant the honor of succeeding the current powers of the earth only to those who believe and do good works; the Byzantines, who once enjoyed the favor of God and were therefore allowed to rule, have lost that favor, and the Muslims have been raised to take over the mantle of earthly authority.<sup>121</sup> The second Qur'ānic citation combines the need for obedience to God with a call for communal unity ("dispute not with one another")—clearly an important factor for a military force. Thirdly, the principle is applied to a martial context by discouraging desertion in battle: "Be ashamed before your Lord who sees you fleeing from your enemies though you are in His grasp and have His mercy." Since the intent of desertion is to seek refuge from the battle, Muʿādh declared that the only sanctuary, refuge or strength that soldiers found was with God, and, in this instance, that meant on the battlefield.

The Qur'an uses al-amānī, and its derivatives, to describe the actions of Satan in stirring up "desires" against God (Sūrat al-Nisā' [4]:119–123, Sūrat al-Ḥajj [22]:52–53), the Jews and Christians who wrongly believe they will enter heaven—they are merely wishing, or desiring, this to be true (Sūrat al-Baqara [2]:78,111)—and the wishful thinking of the hypocrites (Sūrat al-Ḥadīd [57]:14).

In only five speeches delivered during the conquest of Syria and recorded by Azdī is the Qurʾān used, and two of these are referred to as qiṣaṣ: that of Abū ʿUbayda above and this statement by Muʿādh. For the other examples, see Azdī, Futūḥ, 230, 337, 342. According to this source, the Qurʾān was cited in letters exchanged between leaders of the Islamic forces such as from caliphs to generals or vice-versa (139, 144, 259, 281–283). While these letters were not directed expressly to the soldiery, they could have been read publicly and have acted as a form of encouragement to the armies. Also, the Qurʾān was used apologetically in meetings with the Byzantines (206–207, 296–297), in prayers (316), and the sermon of ʿUmar at al-Jābiya (363). For other uses, see Futūḥ, 85, 373, 382. As Conrad has shown, there are a host of Qurʾānic expressions throughout the work that are not cited as direct quotations; see his "al-Azdī," 47–48.

The previous two <code>qaṣaṣ</code> statements reveal a definite merging of religious and martial themes with the objective of inciting the soldiers to valiant conduct in battle. The military focus of each has been distinct, although the terminology and the approach in emphasizing the martial objective relied heavily on religious phraseology and imagery. This is not the case in a third <code>qaṣaṣ</code> saying allegedly delivered during the conquest of Syria. Azdī attributed it to the famous general and future conqueror of Egypt 'Amr b. al-'Āṣ and, aside from reference to God in an oath, contains no religious sentiments whatsoever. It was purportedly given at al-Yarmūk when the general passed among his soldiers and began to admonish them <code>(yaˈizuhum)</code>, <code>yaquṣṣu ʻalayhim</code> and to stir them up <code>(yuḥarriduhum)</code>, saying:

(3) Lower your glances and kneel on your knees, point the arrows and maintain your posts and your battle lines. When your enemy attacks you, wait for them until they fasten the tips of their spearheads, then pounce in their faces as would a lion. And by the One Who is pleased with truth and rewards it, and detests lying and punishes it, and recompenses with beneficence, I have been informed that the Muslims will conquer it (the land), village by village, and palace by palace. So do not fear their troops or their numbers: if you fight them forcefully, they will be frightened like the chicks of the partridge.

أيها الناس، غضوا أبصاركم، واجثوا على الركب، و اشرعوا الرماح، والزموا مراكزكم و مصافكم، فإذا حمل عليكم عدوكم فامهلوهم حتى إذا ركبوا أطراف الأسنة فثبوا في وجوههم وُثوب الأسد، فوالذي يرضى الصدق و

Historiographically, this qiṣṣa corroborates Conrad's assessment of Azdī's objective by arguing that the Byzantines' time was simply finished; God was now doing something new through the Muslims. See Conrad, "al-Azdī," 39–40, 46–47.

يثيب عليه، يمقت الكذب و يعاقب عليه، ويجزى بالإحسان، لقد بلغني أن المسلمين سيفتحونها كَفُرًا كَفُرًا، وقصرًا قصرًا، فلا يهولنكر جموعهم ولا عددهم، فإنكر لو صدقتموهم الشدة لقد انذعروا انذعار أولاد الحجل. 122

This qiṣṣa is unique among the martial qiṣaṣ because it is predominantly a lesson in military strategy and not simply encouragement of the soldiers' martial spirit.<sup>123</sup> From the beginning of the statement, 'Amr drew attention to his soldiers' posture before the approaching enemy. He tells them to lower their heads (lit. their glances, abṣarakum) and kneel, then to raise their spears and hold fast their battle lines. He then encourages them to be patient and to attack only after the enemy fastens the tips of their spears—most likely a reference to their closeness.

Then 'Amr, swearing an oath to his honesty ("by the One Who is pleased with truth and rewards it, and detests lying and punishes it"), declares to his soldiers that he knows that they will be victorious: "I have been informed that the Muslims will conquer it (i.e. the land), village by village, and palace by palace." It is unclear from the text precisely how 'Amr came upon this information, though, as Conrad has shown, the belief that Syria and the Byzantines will fall (soon) to the Muslims was widespread and is attested in several hadīths of the Prophet; this sentiment is alluded to in a report in Azdī's Futūḥ. 124 Thus, 'Amr, allegedly basing himself either on a common conviction possibly rooted in Prophetic hadīth, or on a personal conviction, told his soldiers that, even if they encounter numbers greater than theirs, their valiant fighting will result in victory, and the enemy will scatter before them like small chicks.

The latter portion of the qiṣṣa is important for its complete lack of religious terminology. Unlike previous qaṣaṣ sayings, this one does not encourage greater dependence on God, nor does it imply that assistance and victory come by His hand. Even 'Amr's saying, that he was certain of their ultimate victory, lacks any direct association with religion. Thus, while 'Amr's statement may express a sentiment derived from a Prophetic ḥadīth, it is thoroughly veiled in this pronouncement. The qissa, then, portrays 'Amr as a general confident of victory based on tactics, on his own sense about the outcome and on the fierce fighting of his soldiers more than on the intervention of God. Thus, while the qissa is not lacking in religious terminology (i.e., the oath by God), it is entirely devoid of religious arguments.

<sup>122</sup> Azdī, Futūḥ, 324.

There is a similarity here with the khutba which Qutbuddin noted can also contain military instructions; see her "Khutba," 207.

<sup>124</sup> Conrad, "al-Azdī," 44. Whether the conviction that the Muslims would be victorious is to be connected to 'Amr or that this belief has been projected back into his qiṣṣa by a later source is unclear.

A final example of qaṣaṣ during the conquest of Syria comes in a statement allegedly delivered at al-Yarmūk by Abū Sufyān b. Ḥarb, the once-notorious Qurashī opponent of the Muslims who, after accepting Islam at the time of the submission of Mecca to the Muslims, became a fighter in defense of the faith.<sup>126</sup> This qaṣaṣ statement was recorded by Ṭabarī, unlike the previous martial qaṣaṣ sayings, which are all cited in Azdī's Futūḥ al-Shām. However, Azdī does record a battlefield speech by Abū Sufyān at al-Yarmūk, although he describes the Companion's actions as "stirring the people up (yuḥarriḍu al-nās), inciting them (yaḥuḍḍuhum) and admonishing them (yaʿiẓuhum)," then recording a statement differing entirely from the qaṣaṣ saying attributed to him by Ṭabarī.<sup>127</sup> It seems apparent, however, that the various terms used for encouraging soldiers in warfare are largely synonymous, in like fashion to the similarities between qaṣṣa and other terms, such as dhikr and ḥadīth, as was noted above.

Ṭabarī's account of the battle of al-Yarmūk informs us that at that time Abū al-Dardā' was the judge and Abū Sufyān was the  $q\bar{a}ss$ . Shortly thereafter, he records:

(4) Abū Sufyān went about, stopping at the squadrons to say, "God, God! You are the defenders of the Arabs and the supporters of Islam. They are the defenders of the Romans and the supporters of polytheism. O God, this is a day from among your days. O God, send down your help to your worshipers."

وكان أبو سفيان يسير فيقِف على الكراديس، فيقول: ألله ألله! إنكم ذادةُ العرب، وأنصار الإسلام، وإنهم ذادة الروم وأنصار الشرك! اللهم إنّ هذا يومر من أيامك؛ اللهم أنزل نصرك على عبادك! و129

<sup>125</sup> This is not to imply that 'Amr was not a man of religious conviction, for he apparently was; see Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 22:78–85.

<sup>126</sup> On Abū Sufyān, see the Appendix # 7.

<sup>127</sup> Compare Azdī, Futūḥ, 325 to Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 1:2095.

<sup>128</sup> Tabarī, Tārīkh, 1:2095.

<sup>129</sup> Ibid. Translation taken from Khalid Yahya Blankinship; see his *The History of al-Ṭabarī XI:*The Challenge to the Empires (Albany, 1993), 11:94.

Abū Sufyān's qiṣṣa was expressed as a duʿaੌ, though with the clear intention that his supplication to God be used as a source of motivation for battle. He expresses an essential disparity between his soldiers and those of the Byzantines; the former are Arabs and Muslims, the latter Romans and polytheists. As a result, the Muslim armies can rest assured that they are on the right side and will rule the day. Furthermore, he pleads to God to intercede on behalf of those who worship Him. His emphasis on the rectitude of their cause and on God's ability to support them in their fight is quite similar to the other martial sayings ostensibly given during the conquest of Syria.

This particular qissa of Abū Sufyān has drawn the attention of modern scholars about the role of the qussas on the battlefield. Johannes Pedersen deduced from it that, beginning with the conquest of Syria, the qass was "an official orator in the field to rouse the warriors." The above examples of martial qassas do not support this, however. They do not indicate that the qass was an "official" position on the battlefield at that time—a point that 'Athamina correctly raised in his review of Pedersen. Yet in the process of righting this overstatement, 'Athamina may have swung too far in the opposite direction by asserting that Abū Sufyān, whom he notes was once a staunch opponent of the Prophet, did not act at all as a qass and that this report is an example of a later attempt to redeem the reputation of the father of the first Umayyad caliph, Muʻāwiya. As we have seen above, Abū Sufyān's qissa on the battlefield is not that dissimilar to the qisas of other military leaders during the conquest of Syria, and thus, its ascription to him is not beyond reason.

Moreover, both Azdī and Ṭabarī report that this type of exhortation was part of the morale effort put in place by the Byzantines, with Azdī using the term qaṣṣa to characterize such exhortations. Ṭabarī, on the other hand, says that "the priests, deacons and monks urged them (i.e. the Byzantine fighters) on and bewailed to them [the fate of] Christianity."<sup>132</sup> Azdī records that Muʿadh b.

<sup>130</sup> Pedersen, "Islamic Preacher," 232.

In addition to arguing that this account is a pro-Umayyad fabrication to redeem the image of Muʻāwiya's father, ʻAthamina rejected this tradition alleging that "from an objective standpoint, a man like Abū Sufyān could not perform such a role [as a qāṣṣ], since its minimal requirements included proficiency in the religious material and semblance of religious piety—both of which he lacked." See his "Qaṣaṣ," 57. Yet the requirements to which 'Athamina refers should not be applied to the Abū Sufyān tradition. First, these requirements were taken from a much later source on qaṣaṣ, the relatively unknown 8th/14th-century source, Ibn al-Ukhuwwa's (d. 729/1329) Maʻālim al-qurbā fī aḥkām al-ḥisba. Furthermore, Ibn al-Ukhuwwa's work does not address the martial aspect of qaṣaṣ and therefore does not account for its varied expressions.

<sup>132</sup> Țabarī, Tārīkh, 1:2091.

Jabal himself heard the speeches of encouragement from Byzantine religious men; presumably a translator informed him that the Byzantines incited [their soldiers] and challenged [the Muslims], and the bishops and monks delivered qisas (qassat) to them. And they approached the Muslims. When Muʻādh b. Jabal heard that from them he said, "O God, shake their feet and strike fear into their hearts; send down your majesty (al- $sak\bar{n}a$ ) $^{133}$  upon us; put within us the word of fear [of You]; make us love the meeting [in the hereafter]; and make us satisfied with [Your] judgment."

إن الروم تحاضوا وتداعوا، وقصت عليهم الأساقفة والرهبان، وقد دنوا من المسلمين، فإذا سمع معاذ ذلك منهم قال: اللهم زلزل أقدامهم، وارعب قلوبهم، وأنزل علينا السكينة، والزمناكلمة التقوى، وحبب إلينا اللقاء، ورضنا بالقضاء. 134

These texts show Muslim historians applied the term qaṣaṣ to exhortations given on the battlefield, even those given by the Byzantines. Although no actual statement made by the Byzantine quṣṣāṣ has been preserved in the Islamic sources, it is evident that their qaṣaṣ was comprised of religious themes. First, Ṭabarī states that the Byzantine religious men appealed to their soldiery based on the prospect that the fate of Christianity hung in the balance. Secondly, the Byzantine quṣṣāṣ were identified in both Azdī and Ṭabarī as men of religion; "bishops and monks" in Azdī and "priests, deacons and monks" in Ṭabarī. In contrast, while the quṣṣāṣ on the Muslim side may have been men revered for their piety and respected for their knowledge of the faith, as was certainly true of men like Abū 'Ubayda, Mu'ādh b. Jabal and 'Amr b. al-'Āṣ, all of whom were paragons of the faith, they were, during the conquests, not merely military men, indeed, military leaders. To be sure, this distinction between the Byzantine and Muslim quṣṣāṣ is not unusual. Even if the professional class of religious men in Islam was not less defined than that of Christianity by principle, it was less

For the Qur'ānic foundation of the calling upon the sakīna of God, the presence of God as in the Jewish shakīna, for aid in battle, see T. Fahd, "Sakīna," *EI*2, 7:888.

<sup>134</sup> Azdī,  $Fut\bar{u}h$ , 328. See also Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 2:151 where he uses the verb dhakkarat in the place of qaṣṣat. 'Athamina was aware that the sources described the actions of the Byzantine religious men as qaṣaṣ but dismissed its relevance; see his "Qaṣaṣ," 57–58.

defined at this time, in light of the fact that these events occurred at an early stage in the evolution of the Muslim community.

In spite of these distinctions, it is noteworthy that the Muslim historians applied the term qassa to the sayings of the Byzantine religious men. Therefore, while some qasas were comprised of purely non-religious statements (as indicated by the words of 'Amr b. al-'Ās), Muslim historians (among them, Azdī) considered them religious phenomena and, therefore, chose the term to describe statements by Byzantine men of religion in battle.

Yazīd b. Shajara al-Rahāwī (d. 58/677)

Aside from the qaṣaṣ statement attributed to 'Amr b. al-'Āṣ (which we argued is a statement of military tactics), each of the preceding qaṣaṣ sayings have indicated that religious ideology and terminology were often used in martial qaṣaṣ. Apparently, the use of religious themes, delivered by men who were both warriors and pious believers, in martial contexts was not uncommon, for both the Muslims and the Byzantines engaged in this practice. The conjoining of religious and martial themes, therefore, may at times make distinctions between the type of pronouncement difficult, if not unnecessary. Such seems to be the case with a martial qisṣa attributed to Yazīd b. Shajara al-Rahāwī (d. 58/677).  $^{135}$

Yazīd b. Shajara was a military man with close ties to the Umayyad governor of Syria and later caliph, Muʻāwiya b. Abī Sufyān, dating back at least to the battle of Ṣiffīn (37/657).<sup>136</sup> In the year 39/659, Muʻāwiya selected him to lead the pilgrimage where he came in conflict with Qutham b. 'Abbās al-Hāshimī (d. 57/677), 'Alī b. Abī Ṭālib's cousin and the governor of Mecca, regarding leadership of pilgrimage rituals; a compromise was struck and Shayba b. 'Uthmān led the prayers.<sup>137</sup> He continued to serve Muʻāwiya as a military commander leading his forces, usually as a naval commander, against Constantinople, where he died while on a campaign in the year 58/677. <sup>138</sup> In the course of his career, he ostensibly made statements preserved in a number of sources, one identified as a qiṣṣa before his soldiers. It occurs in the Sunan of Saʿīd b. Manṣūr, recorded within the following report:

<sup>135</sup> On Yazīd, see the Appendix # 20.

<sup>136</sup> Mas'ūdī records a story about Yazīd and Mu'āwiya in which Yazīd models how people should listen to and pay deference to their rulers. According to the account, Mu'āwiya and Yazīd were walking together when Yazīd was struck in the head with a rock and began to bleed. He, however, never flinched and maintained undivided attention on the conversation with the caliph; see his Murūj, 4:112–113. Balādhurī recorded that Yazīd participated on Mu'āwiya's side at Ṣiffīn and identified him as a fervent supporter of 'Uthmān (kāna 'Uthmāniyyan); see his Ansāb al-ashrāf, ed. Maḥmūd Firdaws al-'Aẓm (Damascus, 1996), 2:332.

<sup>137</sup> Khalīfa b. Khayyāṭ, Tārīkh, ed. Akram Diyāʾ al-ʿUmarī (Beirut, 1977), 198; Balādhurī, Ansāb, ed. al-ʿAzm, 2:332–334; Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 1:3448; Masʿūdī, Murūj, 2:209. On Qutham b. ʿAbbās, see C.E. Bosworth, "Ķutham b. 'Abbās," EI2, 5:551.

(5) Yazīd b. Shajara used to give qaṣaṣ and his deeds confirmed his words and he used to say, "Swords are the keys to paradise." And he used to say, "When the two sides met in the path of God and the prayer was held, the heavenly maidens descended and appeared. If the man was advancing they [the heavenly maidens] say, "O God strengthen him, God give him victory, God help him." If he was fleeing, they veil themselves from him and say, "God forgive him." And if he is killed, all of his sins are forgiven at the shedding of the first drop of his blood. Then two virgins will come to him and wipe the dirt from his face and say, "Your time has come." And he will say, "Your time has come."

كان يقص، وكان يصدق قوله فعله، وكان يقول: السيوف مفاتيح الجنة، وكان يقول: إذا التقى الصفان في سبيل الله، وأقيمت الصلوة نزلن الحور العين فاطلعن، فإذا اقبل الرجل قلن "اللهم ثبته، اللهم أنصره اللهم أعنه،" فإذا أدبر احتجبن منه قلن "اللهم اغفر له،" وإذا قُتِلَ غفر له بأول قطرة تخرج من دمه كل ذنب له، وتنزل عليه ثنتان من الحور العين تمسحان عن وجهه الغبار تقولان "قد أنى لك،" ويقول "قد أنى لكما. "199

This statement was, without doubt, delivered in a martial context. A number of phrases in it confirm this: the reference to swords as the keys to paradise, the description of two rows (of soldiers) meeting "in the path of God," the juxtaposition of "advancing" and "fleeing" and the promise to the slain that their spilled blood will bring them forgiveness. These four themes were used by

<sup>138</sup> Ibn Saʻd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:449; Khalīfa b. Khayyāţ, Ṭabaqāt, ed. Akram Diyāʾ al-ʿUmarī (Riyadh, 1982), 75, 148; idem, Tārīkh, 223, 225; Bukhārī, al-Ṭārīkh al-ṣaghīr, ed. Maḥmūd Ibrāhīm Zāyid (Cairo, 1977), 1:120; Ibn Qutayba, Maʿārif, 448; al-Yaʻqūbī, Tārīkh, (Beirut, 1960), 2:240; Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 2:86, 173, 181.

<sup>139</sup> Saʿīd b. Manṣūr, Sunan, ed. Ḥabīb al-Raḥmān al-Aʻzamī (Dabhil, 1967), 2:219.

Yazīd to spur his soldiers to fight; their swords were the keys to paradise, they must advance and not retreat and their shed blood would yield forgiveness.

In addition, much of the statement focuses on the prospect of heavenly maidens awaiting the slain. First, and apparently in an effort to spur in the soldiers an attitude of honor and chivalry, he told his soldiers that they were being watched by these maidens. If the soldiers faced the enemy and advanced against them, the maidens were prepared to intercede for them before God for victory. If the soldiers turned their backs and fled, the maidens would plead to God that they be forgiven. In effect, these maidens conjure in the modern mind a type of cheerleader; and while this specific classification is certainly one out of its time, the image depicted by Yazīd is timeless. The valiant receive the encouragement of the heavenly maidens; the cowardly, however, disappoint the maidens causing them to plead for their forgiveness. Yazīd, thus, implores them in one variant to "not disappoint the heavenly maidens (lā tukhzū al-hūr al-'in)."140 Secondly, two heavenly maidens will care for each man slain in battle, wiping the dirt from his face. They then announce to the slain that his time to enter paradise has arrived, and the slain warrior responds with a sexual allusion saying: "Your time has come." Thus, Yazīd inspired his soldiers by warning them of the detriments of dishonorable performance in battle and by enticing them with the benefits of valor.

This qaṣaṣ text is important for its contribution to our understanding of the themes found in martial qaṣaṣ and in demonstrating how the scholarly community imbibed these texts. The report itself can be found extensively throughout the sources, though not always in its complete form. Ibn Abī Shayba (d. 235/849), in the section of his Muṣannaf "on the coming of the quṣṣāṣ, their sessions and their deeds," recorded only a variant of the initial portion of the Yazīd report given above: "He used to yaquṣṣu and his deeds agreed with his words (wa-kāna yuwāfiqu fi'luhu qawlahu)."<sup>141</sup> The impression given by this short statement is simply that Yazīd was an honest, unhypocritical qāṣṣ; there is no indication that this description applied to a military man. Yet, Ibn Abī Shayba was aware of the expanded report and recorded a variant of it in his section on jihād, albeit without the statement that Yazīd was a qāṣṣ whose actions confirmed his deeds. <sup>142</sup> Moreover, 'Abd al-Razzāq al-Ṣan'ānī

<sup>140</sup> Ibn al-Mubārak, al-Jihād (Tunis, 1972), 38; idem, Zuhd, 43.

<sup>141</sup> Ibn Abī Shayba, Muṣannaf, 5:290. He recorded the variant in a later section using the verb yuṣaddiqu in place of yuwāfiqu; see 7:161.

<sup>142</sup> Ibn Abī Shayba, Muṣannaf, 4:207. It is worth noting that there was also a Prophetic tradition which was quite similar to this report and, thus, raises the question of its prov-

(d. 211/827) also recorded the qiṣṣa in his section on jihād with this description about Yazīd though he claimed he was giving an oration (wa-kāna yakhṭubunā wa-yaqūlu).<sup>143</sup> Similarly, an even earlier compiler, Ibn al-Mubārak (d. 181/797), recorded the report in a longer form than that found in Ibn Abī Shayba, in two of his works, his Kitāb al-jihād and his Kitāb al-zuhd, both also contain a variation on the assertion that Yazīd was an honest man: "And he would cry and would confirm with his crying his deeds (fa-yabkī wa-kāna yuṣaddiqu bakāʾahu bi-fi'lihi).<sup>144</sup>

The above citations of the report indicate that the qissa was perceived as both a pronouncement on  $jih\bar{a}d$  and on zuhd. It therefore suggests that the two subjects were not considered to be mutually exclusive. Indeed, the use of pietistic themes in martial pronouncements was quite common; we have already encountered examples of this above and will see more below. As a result, while this is a martial qissa in the literal sense, its application to the community extended much further beyond its military content. Yet, it must be noted that while the statement itself may have bridged categories, Yazīd was known almost exclusively as a military man, to the extent that, even though his qissa was recorded in zuhd works, he himself is not mentioned in works of tasawwuf or compendiums on ascetics, such as  $Ab\bar{u}$  Talib al-MakkT's enance; see Ibn Abī Shayba, Muṣannaf, 4:204; idem, Muṣnad, 2:13; Ibn al-Sarī, al-Zuhd, ed. 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. 'Abd al-Jabbār al-Faryawā'ī (Kuwait, 1985), 1:122; 'Abd b. Ḥumayd, al-Muntakhab min muṣnad, eds. Ṣubḥī al-Badrī al-Sāmarrā'ī and Maḥmūd Muḥammad Khalīl al-Ṣa'īdī (Cairo, 1988), 163; Ibn Abī 'Āṣim, al-Āḥād wa-l-mathānī, ed. Bāsim Fayṣal Aḥmad al-Jawābira (Riyadh, 1991), 5:114.

&#x27;Abd al-Razzāq, Muṣannaf, 5:256. His description of the qiṣṣa as an oration reveals the flexibility in the sources in classifying statements such as these; in addition to describing the statement as a qiṣṣa, the sources also classify the statement as "reminding [yudhak-kir] (Ibn al-Mubārak, Jihād, 38; idem, Zuhd, 43); as a khuṭba ('Abd al-Razzāq, Muṣannaf, 5:256; Ibn Sallām, Gharīb al-ḥadīth, ed. Muḥammad 'Abd al-Mu'īd Khān (Hyderabad, 1964–1966), 4:358; Tabarānī, al-Mu'jam al-kabīr, 22:246; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 65:230–232); or simply as a "saying [qāla or yaqūlu]" (Sa'īd b. Manṣūr, Sunan, 2:258; Ibn Abī Shayba, Muṣannaf, 4:204, 207; Ibn al-Sarī, Zuhd, 1:122–123).

<sup>144</sup> Ibn al-Mubārak, Jihād, 38; idem, Zuhd, 43.

It can be found in other works of these types, such as Ibn al-Sarī, Zuhd, 1:122–3; Ibn Abī 'Āṣim, al-Jihād, ed. Musā'id b. Sulaymān al-Rāshid al-Ḥumayd (Medina, 1989), 2:528, as well as in works of other genres, such as Ṭabarānī, al-Muʿjam al-kabīr, 22:246–247; al-Azharī, Tahdhīb al-lugha, ed. Muḥammad 'Awaḍ Mur'ib (Beirut, 2001), 7:204; al-Ḥākim al-Naysābūrī, al-Mustadrak 'alā al-ṣaḥīḥayn, ed. Muṣṭafā 'Abd al-Qādir 'Aṭā (Beirut, 1990), 3:564; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 65:230–232.

Qūt al-qulūb, Abū Nuʻaym al-Isfahānī's Ḥilyat al-awliyā' or Ibn al-Jawzī's Ṣifat al-safwa.

Sulaymān b. Şurad and the Rebellion of the Tawwābūn (65/685)

Just as qasas was a tool in the battles against non-Muslim forces, it also was utilized in the military conflicts that arose as a result of the growing internal strife within the Muslim community. The first recorded example of its use in this context, transmitted by Tabarī, is that of the pro-'Alid rebellion of Sulaymān b. Surad al-Khuzā'ī (d. 65/685) in Iraq in 65/685. His movement in Kufa, called that of the Tawwābūn ("penitents"), for their repentance for having failed to aid al-Husayn, developed into a fighting force of approximately 3000 defeated by a significantly larger Umayyad force under the leadership of 'Ubayd Allāh b. Ziyād at 'Ayn al-Warda, located in al-Jazīra along the modern border of Syria and Turkey.<sup>146</sup> In his rebel army, Sulaymān made use of three quṣṣāṣ: Rifāʿa b. Shaddad al-Bajalī, Şukhayr b. Ḥudhayfa al-Muzanī and Abū al-Juwayriya al-'Abdī. 147 Of these three men, the sources provide the least amount of information on Abū al-Juwayriya, informing us only that he was injured on the second day of the battle and remained thereafter with the supplies. His connection to qaṣaṣ is unclear. Rifā'a, on the other hand, is the most well-known of the three qussās. Tabarī records information on him spanning the years before and after Sulaymān's rebellion; all we know of his involvement in qaṣaṣ is that he incited the soldiers on the right flank of Sulaymān's army; we have no example, for instance, of his qaṣaṣ sayings. Of the three quṣṣāṣ, Ṣukhayr b. Ḥudhayfa is the only one for whom a qaṣaṣ saying has been recorded. He allegedly made rounds all night among the soldiers saying:

(6) Rejoice, servants of God, in His generosity and pleasure! All that is required from someone who is kept from meeting those he loves, entering paradise, and obtaining rest from the ties to this world, by separation from this base self that incites to evil, is that he should be content to separate from it [i.e., the self] and be joyful at meeting his Lord.

For information on the event, see E. Kohlberg, "Sulaymān b. Ṣurad," El2, 9:826–827; F.M. Denny, "Tawwābūn," El2, 10:398; E. Honigmann, "Ra's al-Ayn," El2, 8:433–435.

<sup>147</sup> Țabarī, Tārīkh, 2:559. See also Goldziher, Muslim Studies II, 152. Also see the Appendix: Sukhayr # 22; Rifā'a # 23; and Abū Juwayriya # 24.

أبشروا عباد الله بكرامة الله ورضوانه فق والله لمَنْ ليس بينه و بين لقاء الأحبّة و دخول الجنة والراحة من إبرام الدنيا وأذاها إلا فراق هذه النفس الأمّارة بالسوء أن يكون بفراقها سَخِيًّا، وبلقاء ربه مسرورًا. 148

Ṣukhayr prepared his warriors for battle by expressing the eternal benefits accompanying death, such as reuniting with loved ones, entering paradise, and finding rest from this world toward which his baser soul is constantly pulled. His emphasis, therefore, was not on the fearful aspects of the coming battle, rather on the overall heavenly blessings that await the believer. Ṣukhayr's <code>qiṣṣa</code> differs from other martial <code>qaṣaṣ</code> sayings by its lack of clearly discernible military emphases, in spite of its martial setting. Indeed, if not for the context, this <code>qiṣṣa</code> might have been included among the religious texts addressing the topic of death. <sup>149</sup>

Khārijī Quşşāş

Two Khārijī rebels of al-Jazīra, Ṣāliḥ b. Musarriḥ al-Tamīmī (d. 76/695) and his alleged successor Shabīb b. Yazīd al-Shaybānī (d. 77/697), also used qaṣaṣ as a means of inciting fighting fervor among their supporters. Ṣāliḥ was a pious man and moderate Khārijī of the Ṣufriyya sect—a denotation ascribed to those who "remained seated" ( $q\bar{a}$ 'ad) instead of engaging in armed revolt against their adversaries. <sup>150</sup> He spent approximately twenty years preaching his Ṣufrī <sup>148</sup> Țabarī, Tārīkh, 2:559. The translation is a slightly modified translation of G.R. Hawting, The History of al-Ṭabarī XX: The Collapse of Sufyānid Authority and the Coming of the Marwānids (Albany, 1989), 20:145.

Tabarī recorded another speech delivered by Ṣukhayr before he gave this qiṣṣa in which he called the men of Kūfa to join their rebellion. In this speech, he stated that their goal was "seeking vengeance for the blood of the son of our Prophet's daughter (i.e., Ḥusayn)" and then he specifically raised martial concepts by saying, "We have neither dīnār nor dirham with us, we bring only the blades of our swords and the tips of our spears." See his Tārīkh, 2:541 (translation taken from Hawting, Collapse, 20:127). Therefore, while the speech which was identified as a qaṣaṣ saying has no clear martial associations to it, except for the context, it would be wrong to claim that this was common in the public statements made by Ṣukhayr.

W. Madelung, "Şufriyya," E12, 9:766. Madelung noted that the description Şufriyya was derived from the yellow color of their faces as a result of their ascetic practices. In Ṭabarī, Şāliḥ is described as muṣfarr al-wajh, "yellow-faced," or as Rowson has nicely translated, views in the region of Dārā in Northern Mesopotamia.<sup>151</sup> He was, in fact, the first Ṣufrī Khārijī to rise in armed rebellion against the Umayyads, apparently in response to al-Ḥajjāj's persecution of the imām of the Ṣufriyya, 'Imrān b. Ḥiṭṭān al-Sadūsī (d. 84/703).<sup>152</sup> Tabarī, relying on Abū Mikhnāf's account of the rebellion, described Ṣāliḥ's actions among his supporters: "He would recite Qur'ān, teach religious law and give qaṣaṣ to his supporters (la-hu aṣḥāb yuqri'uhum al-Qur'ān wa-yufaqqihuhum wa-yaquṣṣu 'alayhim)."<sup>153</sup> One of his qiṣaṣ was allegedly recorded by a supporter of his, Qabīṣa b. 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Khath'amī, and was circulated in written form.<sup>154</sup>

Ṣāliḥ's qiṣṣa is rather long, comprising just over two pages in M.J. De Goeje's edition. He began with Sūrat al-An'ām (6):1 stating, "Praise be to God, who created the heavens and the earth, and made the darkness and the light. Yet those who have disbelieved ascribe rivals to their Lord." After this, he gave a statement about the basics of the faith, affirming the oneness of God, His supremacy over all of creation and the Prophetic career of Muḥammad. He then related some core ascetic principles and Khārijī doctrines. He said:

(7) I commend to you the fear of God, austerity in this world, desire for the afterlife, frequent recollection of death, avoidance of the sinners, and love for the believers.

He followed this with an exposition of all of these statements except for the first, "the fear of God." He began with asceticism (al-zuhd) arguing that it encourages the believer to desire the things of God and "frees his body for obedience to God (wa-tufarrighu badanahu li-ṭāʿat Allāh)." He then asserted that dhikr produces the fear of God causing the one involved in dhikr to seek God's

&quot;sallow of mien." See Tārīkh, 2:881; Everett Rowson, The History of al-Ṭabarī XXII: The Marwānid Restoration (New York, 1989), 22:33, n. 136.

<sup>151</sup> Ibid.

<sup>152</sup> Ibid. On 'Imrān, see J.W. Fück, "'Imrān b. Ḥiṭtān," EI2, 3:1175.

<sup>153</sup> Țabarī, Tārīkh, 2:881. On Ṭabarī's reliance on Abū Mikhnāf, in particular his Kitāb Shabīb al-Ḥarūrī wa Ṣālih b. Musarriḥ, see Rowson, Marwanid, 22:32, n. 134.

<sup>154</sup> Țabarī, Tārīkh, 2:881–882.

<sup>155</sup> Țabarī, Tārīkh, 2:882–884.

<sup>156</sup> Tabarī, Tārīkh, 2:882 (translation taken from Rowson, Marwānid, 22:34).

<sup>157</sup> Ibid.

help and submit to Him. Next he expounded on an important Khārijī doctrine on the status of sinners ( $f\bar{a}siq\bar{n}$ ) saying that they were not believers and one must separate oneself from them. He based this argument on Sūrat al-Tawba (9):84, "Do not pray over any of them who dies, ever, nor stand by his grave; they disbelieved in God and His messenger, and died as sinners." Conversely, the Khārijī rejection of the  $f\bar{a}siq\bar{n}$  was supplemented with their love of the believers (al-mu' $min\bar{n}$ ). Loving the believers, according to Ṣāliḥ, brings God's grace, mercy and paradise.

Ṣāliḥ then moved into an exposition of the progression of the early caliphate. He praised the first of the caliphs, Abū Bakr and 'Umar, then excoriated 'Uthmān alleging that "he expropriated the spoils, failed to enforce the Qur'ānic punishments, rendered unjust judgments, and treated the believer with contempt and the evildoer with esteem." According to Ṣāliḥ, 'Uthmān's assassination was justified because of these offenses and thus God, His Messenger and the righteous believers were free of him (bari'a Allāhu min-hu wa-rasūluhu wa-ṣāliḥ al-mu'minīn). Not only was the community free of 'Uthmān, they were eventually free of 'Alī whom Ṣāliḥ rebuked for submitting the decision of the leadership of the community to human judges (ḥakkama fī amr Allāh al-rijāl) and for his lack of certainty concerning "the people of error (wa-shakka fī ahl al-ḍalāl)." <sup>161</sup>

Ṣālīḥ, building on his argument that the deaths of 'Uthmān and 'Alī were legitimate, concluded his qiṣṣa with a call to his followers to rise against the current illegitimate rule of the Umayyads. In doing so, he utilized themes of death and the after-life that we have encountered in previous martial qaṣaṣ sayings. He said:

Be not anxious about being killed for God's sake, since being killed is easier than dying naturally. Natural death comes upon you unexpectedly (ghayr mā tarjum al-ṣunūn), separating you from your fathers, sons, wives, and this world, even if your anxiety and aversion for it is strong. Thus, indeed, sell your souls and your wealth to God obediently, and you will enter paradise in security and embrace the black-eyed houris.

<sup>158</sup> On the debate surrounding the fāsiq, see L. Gardet, "Fāsiq," *EI*2, 2:833–834.

<sup>159</sup> Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 2:882 (translation taken from Rowson, Marwānid, 22:34).

<sup>160</sup> The phrase ṣāliḥu al-mu'minīn is Qur'ānic from Sūrat al-Taḥrīm (66):4 and, auspiciously, a play on the rebel's name.

<sup>161</sup> Țabarī, Tārīkh, 2:883. See also Rowson, Marwānid, 22:35, n. 148.

ولا تجزعوا من القتل في ألله، فإنَّ القتل أيسرُ من الموت، والموتُ نازلً بكم غير ما ترجُم الظنون، فمفرّق بينكم و بين آبائكم و أبنائكم، وحلائلكم و دنياكم، وإن اشتد لذلك كُرُهكم وجزعكم. ألا فبيعوا الله أنفسكم طائعين وأموالكم تدخلوا الجنة آمنين، وتعانِقوا الحور العين. 162

Like Sulaymān b. Ṣurād, Ṣāliḥ described the benefits of death in battle, although his arguments in advocacy of it differed from Sulaymān. Ṣāliḥ argued that death in battle was better because it is an expected death, apparently in the sense that the day of one's death may be anticipated, as opposed to an unknowable natural death. He then, using typical Khārijī language, encouraged them to give all they owned to God ("sell your souls and your wealth to God obediently") so that they were able to gain paradise with its rewards of security and heavenly maidens.

While certain aspects of this qissa have been encountered in other statements, such as references to the nature of God, to death, and to heavenly blessings for those who die in battle, this qissa differs from the previous martial qisas inasmuch as it is, in actuality, a doctrinal justification for military action. Consequently, in spite of the general martial context—it was delivered in the lead up to the battle not at the battle itself—the qissa focuses on religio-political positions, particularly the sound rule of Abū Bakr and 'Umar, as opposed to 'Uthmān and 'Alī, the legitimacy of the murder of 'Uthmān, the unacceptability of 'Alī's decision in favor of arbitration and the correctness of armed rebellion against corrupt leaders. It therefore stands as an example of the flexibility of the meaning of qasas. This is a hybrid statement merging religious, martial and even politico-doctrinal themes together in one qissa.

When Ṣāliḥ was killed, another Ṣufrī Khārijī, Shabīb b. Yazīḍ, led a rebellion against the Umayyads, possibly as the immediate successor to Ṣāliḥ's rebellion. According to Ṭabarī, who again used Abū Mikhnaf as his source, both the Umayyad general 'Attāb b. Warqā' and Shabīb delivered qaṣaṣ to their soldiers, although only a portion of Shabīb's qiṣṣa has been recorded. Shabīb stood before his supporters and gave many qiṣaṣ (waqafa 'alaynā fa-qaṣṣa

<sup>162</sup> Țabarī, Tārīkh, 2:883–884 (translation taken from Rowson, Marwānid, 22:35).

The precise connection between Ṣalīḥ and Shabīb is unclear. Shabīb was listed among Ṣāliḥ's supporters in Dārā and Abū Mikhnaf claims that he continued Ṣāliḥ's rebellion, though others have doubted this connection; see a discussion of the issue by K.V. Zettersteen and C. Robinson, "Shabīb b. Yazīd," El2, 9:164.

ʿalaynā qiṣaṣ̄an kathūran), only one of which was remembered by a certain Tamīm b. Hārith al-Azdī, who related that Shabīb said:

(8) O people of Islām! Those who have the best lot in paradise are the martyrs. God praises none of his creatures more than the steadfast; hear how He says, "Be steadfast; God is with the steadfast (Sūrat al-Baqara [2]:153)." He whose deeds God praises, how great is his status! But God despises no one more than those who commit outrages. See how this enemy of yours slaughters the Muslims with his sword, and they insist that they thereby win God's favor. They are the most wicked people on earth, the dogs of the people of hell! Where are the quṣṣāṣ?" When he asked that, not one of us, by God, answered him. Seeing this, he asked, "Where is he who recites the poetry of 'Antara?" And no, by God, not a single man breathed a word of reply to this. He said, "We are God's! It seems to me I can see you fleeing from 'Attāb b. Warqā' and leaving him with the wind whistling up his ass."

يا أهل الإسلام، إنّ أعظم الناس نصيباً في الجنة الشهداء، وليس الله لأحد من خلقه بأحمَد منه للصابرين، ألا ترون أنّه يقول: ﴿وَأَصْبِرُوا إِنَّ الله مع الصابرين ﴿ فَمَن حَبِد الله فعلَه فما أعظم درجته، وليس الله لأحد أمقَت منه لأهل البغي؛ ألا ترون أنّ عدوّكه هذا يستعرض الله لأحد أمقت منه لأهل البغي؛ ألا ترون أنّ عدوّكه هذا يستعرض المسلمين بسيفه، لا يرون إلاّ أن ذلك لهم قربة عند الله! فهم شرار أهل الأرض وكلاب أهل النار، أين القصاص؟ قال ذلك فلم يجُبه والله أحد منا؛ فلما رأى ذلك، قال: أين مَنْ يَروي شعرَ عَنْتَرَة؟ قال: فلا والله ما ردّ عليه إنسان كلمة أله فقال: إنّا لله! كأنى بكم قد فررتُ معن عَتَاب بن وَرقاء وتركتموه تسفى في استه الرج. 164

Shabīb's qiṣṣa distinguishes the true Muslims, i.e. his Khārijī supporters, those he called "people of Islam," from the imposters, i.e. his Umayyad opponents led by 'Attāb b. Warqā', those whom he called "the most wicked people on earth." The true Muslims are those who will have the best positions in paradise because they died as martyrs. The two descriptions are diametrically opposed to each other: Shabīb's side will be blessed with the best places in paradise, while the Umayyads will be the lowest in hell, "the dogs of the people of hell." Even here, once again, the theme of death and the afterlife is evident in martial qaṣaṣ. Furthermore, Shabīb encouraged his followers to be steadfast/patient in battle, citing Sūrat al-Baqara (2):153 as had Abū 'Ubayda b. al-Jarrāḥ before him.

<sup>164</sup> Țabarī, Tārīkh, 2:950–951 (translation was taken from Rowson, with some modifications; see Marwānid, 22:101–102).

Shabīb then summoned two groups of people. He called for the qussas, and when no one responded, he called for someone to recite the poetry of 'Antara. Again no one answered. He interpreted his followers' silence as a lack of martial spirit and an omen that they would flee the battlefield as fast as the wind.

Shabīb's summons to the quṣṣāṣ and to those who can recite the poetry of 'Antara is noteworthy for what it reveals about the role of the martial quṣṣāṣ. We have already encountered examples of the qussās promoting courage and a fighting spirit in the soldiery. This is precisely what Shabīb was looking for in his summons. He himself had just delivered a qissa, yet he called for others to do likewise. When this summons fell unheeded, he called for the nextbest option—those who were able to provide a similar passion for courage and valor by reciting the heroic poetry of 'Antara, the famous pre-Islamic warriorpoet immortalized for his great courage and astounding victories, extending across Arabia and beyond against foes and forces far larger than he. Not only was 'Antara a powerful warrior, he was also chivalrous, willing to fulfill a number of dangerous conditions placed on him by the father of his beloved 'Abla in order to win her hand. 'Antara, thus, came to symbolize the character traits of courage and chivalry and, in spite of being pagan, he embodied the image of the ideal Arab and Muslim. As Heller has noted, "by a bold stroke 'Antar, the solitary hero, is raised to be the representative of all that is Arab, 'Antar the pagan is made the champion of Islam."165 Therefore, when Shabīb appealed for someone to recite the poetry of 'Antara, he was seeking someone who, in the absence of quṣṣāṣ, was prepared to inspire in his soldiers these traits of courage and chivalry. The association that Shabīb made between the quṣṣāṣ and those who recite the poetry of 'Antara indicates that, in his view, the two groups fulfilled similar objectives.

<sup>165</sup> B. Heller, "Sirat 'Antar," EI2, 1:518.

Religio-political Qaṣaṣ: Abū Dharr al-Ghifārī

It has become evident that the term qassa was applied to various sayings of both a religious nature and martial nature. Even within these broad categories, qasas sayings incorporated a number of themes revealing a great degree of diversity. We have already encountered, for instance, the merging of religious and political themes in a martial context in the qissa of the Khārijī leader Ṣāliḥ b. Musarriḥ al-Tamīmī. We will now turn to the last qasas text to be analyzed in this chapter integrating religious and political themes yet, unlike Ṣāliḥ's qissa or even that of his successor Shabīb, not in a martial context. This last religio-political qissa has been attributed to Abū Dharr al-Ghifārī in his famous opposition to Mu'āwiya, when he was the governor of Syria, and to 'Uthmān, the then caliph. It, therefore, is purported to be an early testament of a qasas saying.

I have placed this text here, by itself, for two reasons. First, the saying is not strictly a religious qissa since its objective is as much politically oriented as it is religiously oriented, in spite of the use of religious argumentation. Secondly, even though the saying challenged the political leaders, it is not a martial text  $per\ se$ , since it was not delivered in a military situation. The text is, in fact, a religio-political text similar to some martial qasas sayings in its intent, not necessarily in its context.

The qissa comes to us in a late source, Muḥammad Bāqir al-Majlisī's (d. 1110/1698) Bihar al-anwar, although al-Majlisī drew from earlier sources.  $^{166}$  Without doubt, the lateness of the source (12th/17th century) raises the question of the statement's authenticity, and the Shī'ite advocacy of its author augments doubts about it. Still, questions surrounding the authenticity of the text as well as its identification as a qissa do not diminish its importance. For, if the saying was considered a qasas saying and was delivered by Abū Dharr, then it provides another example of the content of early qasas sayings. If, on the other hand, it is merely described as a qissa by a late and tendentious source, the text remains significant for it indicates that a later source was aware of the applicability of the term qassa in the early period to an ideological statement of this type, or that the term qassa continued to be applied to a broad array of statements, and thus its lexical parameters accommodated, even in later centuries, a statement of this nature.

According to an unidentified Syrian source:

<sup>166</sup> Muḥammad Bāqir al-Majlisī, Biḥār al-anwār (Beirut, 1983), 22:395.

(1) When 'Uthmān sent Abū Dharr al-Ghifārī from Medina to Syria he used to give gasas to us (yagussu 'alaynā). He praised God, testified the shahāda of truth, prayed for the Prophet, and then he said, "Verily we were in our period of ignorance before the Book came upon us and the Messenger was sent to us. We kept oaths, honored our words, were kind to our neighbors, entertained guests and were charitable to the poor. So when God sent to us His Messenger and sent down to us His book, God and his Messenger were pleased with these ethical behaviors and the people of Islam were indeed more worthy of them. So he charged them to maintain them. Thus they continued to do that which God desired for them to do. Then the rulers [meaning, 'Uthmān] did wicked deeds of which we are all aware, such as extinguishing the sunna, enlivening bid'a, calling the one who tells the truth a liar, siding with those who do not fear God nor are trustworthy, preferring them over the pious. By God, if that which You have (ordained) was better for me, then take me to you (i.e., make me die) without me having altered or changed (the correct faith)." He used to repeat this saying and declare it. So Ḥabīb b. Maslama<sup>167</sup> came to Mu'awiya and said, "Abū Dharr is corrupting the people against you with what he is saying." So Mu'āwiya wrote to 'Uthmān about this and 'Uthman wrote back, "Send him to me." When he went to Medina, 'Uthmān banished him to al-Rabadha.

لمّا سيّر عثمان أبا ذرّ من المدينة إلى الشامكان يقصّ علينا، فيحمد الله فيشهد شهادة الحق، ويصلّي على النبي ويقول: أمّا بعد فإنّاكنّا في جاهليّتنا قبل أن ينزل علينا الكتاب ويبعث فينا الرسول، ونحن نوفي بالعهد، ونصدّق الحديث، ونحسن الجوار، ونقري الضيف، ونواسي الفقير، فلمّا بعث الله تعالى فينا رسول الله وأنزل عليناكابهكانت تلك الأخلاق يرضاها الله ورسوله، وكان أحق بها أهل الإسلام، وأولى أن يحفظوها، فلبثوا بذلك ما شاء ألله أن يلبثوا، ثمّ إنّ الولاة قد أحدثوا أعمالا قباحا ما نعرفها: من سنة تطفى، و بدعة تحيى، وقائل بحقّ مكذّب، وأثرة لغير تقيّ وأمين من سنة تطفى، و بدعة تحيى، وقائل بحقّ مكذّب، وأثرة لغير تقيّ وأمين

<sup>167</sup> He was one of Mu'āwiya's military commanders; see J.W. Fück, "Ḥabīb b. Maslama," EI2, 3:12.

مستأثر عليه من الصالحين، اللهم إن كان ما عندك خيرًا لي فاقبضني إليك غير مبدّل و لا مغيّر، وكان يعيد هذا الكلام و يبديه، فأتى حبيب بن مسلمة معاوية بن أبي سفيان فقال: إنّ أبا ذرّ يفسد عليك الناس بقوله: كيت وكيت، فكتب معاوية إلى عثمان بذلك، فكتب عثمان: أخرجه إليّ، فلمّا صار إلى المدينة نفاه إلى الربذة. 168

In this qaṣaṣ statement, Abū Dharr bemoaned what he perceived to be the destructive conduct of 'Uthmān and his governor of Syria, Muʻāwiya. His famous opposition to these political powers, expressed in Ṭabarī's  $T\bar{a}r\bar{\iota}kh$  as stemming from their misappropriation of God's money, ultimately led to his being exiled to al-Rabadha, where he eventually died in 32/653. <sup>169</sup>

This qissa presents a number of other complaints against Mu'awiya and 'Uthmān. Abū Dharr began by arguing that the Arabs, even prior to the coming of the Prophet, proved themselves to be a noble people, as is reflected in their keeping of oaths, honoring their words, being kind to neighbors, showing hospitality to guests and being charitable to the poor. The virtue of these traits was affirmed when God sent His Messenger since, according to the qissa, they were told to continue these behaviors. In suggesting the existence of a continuity in ethical standards from the pre-Islamic Jāhilī Arabs to the Prophet, Abū Dharr sought not only to portray Mu'āwiya and 'Uthmān as diverting from the conduct of the Prophet yet also to place them outside the purview of Arab cultural mores; they were guilty in both religious and cultural terms. Abū Dharr described their wickedness as "extinguishing the sunna, enlivening bid'a, calling the one who tells the truth a liar, siding with those who do not fear God nor are trustworthy, preferring them over the pious." Then, in what seems to be presented as a foreshadowing of his death in exile ("By God if that which You have [ordained] was better for me"), he appealed to God to take him from this world in a state of correct faith.

This qissa attributed to Abū Dharr is a statement of exhortation, if not provocation. It is quite similar in its intent to that of Ṣāliḥ b. Musarriḥ, whose qissa recounted the golden years of the faith under the Prophet and the first two caliphs, the decline of the faith under 'Uthmān and 'Alī, and an appeal to the true believers to remain faithful till death in opposing illegitimate leaders. In this regard, Ṣāliḥ's qiṣṣa was also meant to provoke; its aim was to provoke his followers to stand firm on the correctness of their cause and in the face of those who have corrupted the faith.

<sup>168</sup> Majlisī, Biḥār, 22:395. See also Jūda, "Qaṣaṣ," 122.

On the incident, see J. Robson, "Abū Dharr al-Ghifārī," El2, 1:114; A.J. Cameron, Abū Dharr al-Ghifārī: An Examination of His Image in the Hagiography of Islam (New Delhi, 2006), 67–68, 73, 78, 80, 89–90, 107–109.

Regardless of the difference in context between the religious and martial qasas, as well as this religio-political qissa, each category reveals that the term gasas is not exclusively a descriptive term as far as the content of the statement is concerned. The diversity of themes in both religious gasas and martial gasas suggests that more than content is at play when applying the term qissa to a saying. For example, a martial qissa could draw upon the themes of death and the afterlife, as did religious qisas. A martial qissa could also simply be instruction in military tactics. Furthermore, a religious qissa could describe legal rulings, which, while still illustrating the qussās's interest in advocating piety, are, nonetheless, more practical in their application than calls to piety of a general nature. It may be, therefore, that qaṣaṣ was identified as much on intent as on content. The intent, for example, of the above statements is to challenge the listener to a higher level of devotion; in the religious sayings, this meant greater devotion to the faith while in the martial sayings it meant greater devotion to a military or politico-doctrinal objective. The aim of eliciting a fervent response from the listener seems to be the unifying factor between qaṣaṣ of a religious nature, of a martial nature and of a religio-political nature.

Quṣṣāṣ Associations: With Whom Are the Quṣṣāṣ Associated?

The qussas of the Umayyad period are represented throughout the broad spectrum of the scholarly activities in the community, some aspects of which (such as Qur'ān commentary, hadith, and fiqh), have already been encountered in the previous chapter's discussions. The connections that the qussas enjoyed with other disciplines, including their reputations in them, can help clarify our understanding of their identity and influence in the early period. Upon analysis of the one hundred and eight identified qussas of this period, it was evident that their associations were as diverse as the themes of their qisas. Nine categories of main group associations, however, emerged: Qur'ān reciters (qurrar), Qur'ān commentators (mufassirun), hadith transmitters (muhaddithun), jurists (fuqahar), judges (qudat), orators (khutabar), admonishers (murasak).

Since some of these categories are fluid, certain restraints in methodology are necessary in order to allow for manageable analysis. For example, the categories of dhikr and admonition (wa'z), in which some qussas are sometimes included, are quite broad, and, because of the intent of qasas to exhort and inspire, as seen in Chapter One, all the qussas, even those identified as purely martial qussas, fall within them. Thus, in order to avoid subjectivity in identifying a statement of a qassas as dhikr or wa'z, only those qussas who were expressly connected to these terms will be included in those categories. In other words, only the qassas who has been identified by the sources specifically as a wa'iz ("admonisher") or as having given a maw'iza ("admonition") of some sort will be categorized with the wu'`az. This condition will be enforced even if the content of a particular saying of a qassas is available for interpretation as an admonition, and these same restrictions will be applied to each of the nine categories.

Unfortunately, the large number of qussas and the even larger number of sources available to be mined for information on them present an insurmountable obstacle to any claim of comprehensiveness in this regard. The current chapter is, therefore, only a first, though important, step in categorization, as well as identification, of the affiliations of the qussas. Those qussas who have distinguished themselves in a particular discipline will be noted and evaluated in order to draw general conclusions about their role in these disciplines. I will begin with those who were associated with disciplines of the religious sciences, such as Qur'ān recitation, Qur'ān commentary and hadith, and will proceed to those who were associated with various forms of religious expression, including hadithas ("orators"), haditas as ("admonishers") and ascetics.

Since the Prophet could be considered the progenitor of each of these disciplines, I have left him out of the statistical analysis.

Qur'an Reciters (qurra')

Qur'ān recitation was an essential component of qaṣaṣ from its inception.<sup>2</sup> According to Ibn al-Jawzī, the Qur'ān was the primary source of admonition (wa'হ) for the Companions of the Prophet.<sup>3</sup> The central importance of the Qur'ān in qaṣaṣ is alluded to in a report about Tamīm al-Dārī who, as one of the first quṣṣāṣ, listed its recitation as his first objective when giving qaṣaṣ.<sup>4</sup> Another tradition, traced back to 'Ā'isha, suggests that the teaching of the Qur'ān, along with its interpretation  $(tafs\bar{t}r)$ , was the main objective of the early quṣṣāṣ. Upon meeting the Medinan  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  Ibn Abī al-Sā'ib, she told him to "give qaṣaṣ to the people once a week, and if you want, then give qaṣaṣ twice, and if you want, then give qaṣaṣ three times a week, but do not make the people bored with this Book." 'Ā'isha's warning that the proliferation of qaṣaṣ ses-

The Qur'an played a fundamental role in the religious education of the community from the outset and was also an essential source in the various disciplines of religious education. Wadad Kadi and Mustansir Mir, for example, have argued that the Islamic sermon is a genre of prose whose existence is directly dependent upon the Qur'an; see their "Literature and the Qur'an," EQ, 3:221.

<sup>3</sup> The overlap in meaning of the terms wa'aza and qaṣṣa in Ibn al-Jawzī's usage can be seen in this report which is recorded in a section on qaṣaṣ but in which he uses the term wa'aza to describe the nature of the Qur'ānic recitation; see his Quṣṣāṣ, 136.

<sup>4</sup> Ibn Abī ʿĀṣim, al-Mudhakkir wa-l-tadhkīr wa-l-dhikr, ed. Khālid b. Qāsim al-Raddādī (Riyadh, 1993), 66; Ibn ʿAsākir, Dimashq, 11:80. See also Jūda, "Qaṣaṣ," 107–108; 'Athamina, "Qaṣaṣ," 60.

Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 43:19–20; Ibn Shabba, Kitāb tārīkh al-Madīna al-munawwara, ed. Fahīm Muḥammad Shaltūt (Mecca, 1979), 1:13; Ibn Ḥibbān, Ṣaḥūḥ, 3:258. See also Jūda, "Qaṣaṣ," 108–109. Other versions of the tradition identify 'Ā'isha's interlocutor only as al-Sā'ib and do not state that he was a qāṣṣ; see Abū Ya'lā al-Mawṣilī, Musnad, 7:448; Ibn Abī Ḥātim, 'Ilal al-Ḥadīth, ed. Muḥibb al-Dīn al-Khaṭīb (Beirut, 1984), 2:248; Ṭabarānī, Du'ā', 37. Bukhārī gives another version of the tradition transmitted by Ibn 'Abbās in which he commands an unidentified listener to ḥaddith al-nās; see his Ṣaḥūḥ, 5:2334. Ibn al-Jawzī cited both variants; see his Quṣṣāṣ, 31.

Of the one hundred and eight qussas, thirty-one, or 29%, were specifically associated with Qur'ān recitation. Among these are well-known Companions of the Prophet. Four of them, Mu'ādh b. Jabal, Abū al-Dardā', Ibn Mas'ūd and Zayd b. Thābit, were numbered among the original collectors of the Qur'ān. Not only did they allegedly collect the Qur'ān, they were also teachers and reciters of it. Mu'ādh and Abū al-Dardā' were dispatched by 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb to Syria upon the request of Yazīd b. Abī Sufyān for men to teach the Qur'ān and to instruct the people/soldiers (yu'allimuhum al-Qur'ān wayufaqqihuhum). Ibn Mas'ūd was extolled by the Prophet himself for the excellence of his recitation. Ibn Mas'ūd's alleged influence on Qur'ān recitation is legendary, especially with regard to his defense of his recitation against that of the 'Uthmānic recension. Ibn Mas'ūd even questioned the competence of the famous  $q\bar{a}ss$  Zayd b. Thābit in compiling the Qur'ān. Il

Tensions related to Qur'ān recitation were tangible in other circles as well. When the  $q\bar{a}ss$  Ka'b al-Aḥbār challenged Mu'āwiya b. Abī Sufyān on his recitation of Sūrat al-Kahf (18):86, the governor referred the matter to Ibn 'Abbās

These are: (6) Muʻādh b. Jabal, (9) Kaʻb al-Aḥbar, (10) Abū al-Dardā', (11) Ibn Masʻūd, (12) Abū Dharr al-Ghifārī, (16) Tamīm al-Dārī, (18) Zayd b. Thābit, (25) ʿUbayd b. ʿUmayr, (26) Abū al-Aḥwaṣ, (27) Abū ʿAbd al-Raḥmān al-Sulamī, (28) Sulaym b. ʿItr, (29) Ṣāliḥ b. Musarriḥ, (31) Abū Idrīs al-Khawlānī, (39) Zurāra b. Awfā, (40) Saʿīd b. Jubayr, (56) Saʿīd b. Abī al-Ḥasan, (57) Tubayʻ b. ʿĀmir, (58) Mujāhid b. Jabr, (60) Bilāl b. Saʻd, (61) Muslim b. Jundab, (65) ʿAwn b. ʿAbd Allāh, (66) al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, (71) Qatāda b. Diʻāma, (77) Tawba b. Namir, (79) ʿAbd Allāh b. Kathīr, (83) Thābit al-Bunānī, (86) Maṭar al-Warrāq, (89) Khayr b. Nuʻaym, (93) Hilāl, Abū Ṭuʻma, (102) ʿUthmān b. Abī al-ʿĀtika, (108) Mūsā b. Sayyār.

<sup>7</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 47:110–111, 137. On the compilation of the Qur'ān, as well on the role of some of these Companions in the process, see A.T. Welch, "al-Ķur'ān," *EI*2, 5:404–406; J. Burton, "Collection of the Qur'ān," EQ, 1:355–358.

<sup>8</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 47:137.

<sup>9</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 33:60, 66.

<sup>10</sup> Goldziher, Schools, 5–6. A student of his, the qāṣṣ Mujāhid b. Jabr, confessed that without the variant recitation of Ibn Masʿūd the proper meaning of a verse in Sūrat al-Isrāʾ (17):95 would have remained elusive; see Goldziher, Schools, 11.

On Zayd's role in the compilation of the 'Uthmānic recension, see Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 5:311; al-Dhahabī, Ma'rifat al-qurrā', eds. Bashshār 'Awwād Ma'rūf, Shu'ayb al-Arnā'ūṭ and Ṣāliḥ Mahdī 'Abbās (Beirut, 1983), 1:36–38; M. Lecker, "Zayd b. Thābit," *El*2, 11:476; Welch, "al-Ķur'ān," *El*2, 5:404–406; Burton, "Collection," EQ, 1:355–358. On Ibn Mas'ūd's criticism of Zayd as a worthy resource for the task of compiling the Qur'ān, see Goldziher, Schools, 6.

who confirmed Kaʻb's recitation. Muʻāwiya, however, refused to acquiesce, and only the council of Ibn 'Abbās assuaged Kaʻb's anger at Muʻāwiya's obstinance. Eventually, Ibn 'Abbās was able to bring Muʻāwiya to agree with their recitation. 12 The affirmation of the Jewish convert's knowledge of Qur'ānic recitation, in this instance superior to that of a distinguished Arab Companion of the Prophet, substantiates the general importance of Qur'ān recitation as well as indicating that the Muslims did not perceive his "Jewishness" as a necessary obstacle to his engagement in the propagation of the sacred text of Islam.

The qussas maintained a strong connection to Qur'an recitation with some reputed to have been the best Qur'an reciters and teachers of their time and region. 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr (d. 68/688) was considered a source for proper Qur'an recitation. 'Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Sulamī (d. 72-5/692-4) taught Qur'an recitation in the grand mosque of Kufa for forty years. 'In Syria, Abū Idrīs al-Khawlānī (d. 80/700) was considered "their reciter" and, later, Bilāl b. Sa'd (d.c. 105-25/724-43) was called "the Qur'an reciter,"  $al-q\bar{a}r\bar{r}$ , of Damascus. 'Even when on campaign, Qur'an recitation was taught. While deployed on the island of Rhodes, the famous  $q\bar{a}r\bar{r}$  and  $q\bar{a}ss$  Mujāhid b. Jabr taught his recitation to Tubay' b. 'Āmir, the  $q\bar{a}ss$  and step-son of the  $q\bar{a}ss$  Ka'b al-Aḥbār, who himself was considered a legitimate source in Qur'ānic recitation. 'It is doubtful that the relationship of the qussas to Qur'ān recitation was as serendipitous as here.

In 76/695 in Egypt, 'Abd al-Rahman b. Ḥujayra (d. 83/703) was both  $q\bar{a}ss$  and Qur'ān reciter. According to Maqrīzī, his practice of reciting Qur'ān in the congregational mosque on Friday and then giving qasas became the practice of Egyptian qussas well into the 'Abbāsid period.' Abū Ṭu'ma, a  $mawl\bar{a}$  of 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz who gave qasas and recited the Qur'ān in Egypt, seems to verify

<sup>12</sup> Al-Balādhurī, Ansāb al-ashrāf, ed. 'Abd al-'Azīz al-Dūrī (Weisbaden, 1978), 3:43.

<sup>13</sup> Ibn Sallām, al-Nāsikh wa-l-mansūkh, ed. Muḥammad b. Ṣāliḥ al-Mudayfir (Riyadh 1997), 10. Qur'ān recitation persisted in 'Ubayd's family; 'Abd Allāh, 'Ubayd's son, was known as the master of the qurrā', sayyid al-qurrā'; see Jāḥiz, Bayān, 1:284. Ibn Qutayba seems to have confusingly identified 'Abd Allāh as 'Ubayd Allāh's brother; see his Ma'ārif, 587.

<sup>14</sup> Al-Balādhurī, Ansāb al-ashrāf, ed. Muḥammad al-Yaʿlāwī (Berlin, 2002), 7/2:232.

<sup>15</sup> Ibn Ḥibbān, al-Thiqāt, ed. al-Sayyid Sharaf al-Dīn Aḥmad (Beirut, 1975), 5:227; Suyūṭī, Ṭabaqāt al-ḥuffāz, ed. 'Alī Muḥammad 'Umar (Cairo, 1973), 18.

<sup>16</sup> Abū Zur'a al-Dimashqī, Tārīkh, 1:607.

<sup>17</sup> Al-Balādhurī, Futūḥ al-Buldān, ed. M.J. De Goeje (Leiden, 1968), 236.

<sup>18</sup> Al-Maqrīzī, al-Mawā'iz wa-l-i'tibār fī dhikr al-khiṭaṭ wa-l-āthār (al-Khiṭaṭ), ed. Ayman Fu'ād Sayyid (London, 2003), 4/1:31–132. See also Pedersen, "Islamic Preacher," 233–234.

Maqrīzī's observation. <sup>19</sup> In the year 108/726, the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  Tawba b. Namir was paid three  $d\bar{n}n\bar{a}rs$  each month for reciting from the mushaf during the congregational prayer. <sup>20</sup> Khayr b. Nuʻaym, Tawba's successor in the year 120/738, was the first  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  in Egypt to recite from the mushaf while standing. <sup>21</sup> These traditions of receiving money for and of standing during recitation are of particular interest since both phenomena could be interpreted as signaling the official enterprise of qasas. <sup>22</sup> That they were implemented separately and that payment came before standing seem to indicate that these traditions may not always signify governmental sanction of a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$ .

Not only were some qussas Qur'an reciters and teachers, others were known for more specific associations to the Qur'an and its recitation. 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr, Mujāhid b. Jabr and Sa'īd b. Jubayr, for example, were known to have specific written recensions, masahif, attached to their names.<sup>23</sup> Maṭar b. Ṭahmān, known by the nickname (laqab) al-Warrāq, was reciter, copyist and seller of copies of the Qur'ān.<sup>24</sup> Ibn al-Nadīm mentioned in his Fihrist that 'Aṭā' b. Yasār wrote a "Book of the Numbers (of the Qur'ān)" tallying the number of sūras, verses, words and letters of the Qur'ān.<sup>25</sup> 'Abd Allāh b. Kathīr's recitation was considered by Abū Bakr b. Mujāhid (d. 324/936) to be one of the seven authoritative Qur'ān recitations.<sup>26</sup> For one  $q\bar{a}ss$ , Zurāra b. Awfā, the last words uttered from his mouth were those of the Qur'ān.<sup>27</sup> Other distinguished scholars, like the Basrans Qatāda b. Di'āma, al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī and Thābit al-Bunānī, were also identified as accomplished Qur'ān reciters. Likewise, Muslim b. Jundab, a

<sup>19</sup> Ibn Abī Ḥātim, al-Jarḥ wa-l-taˈdīl (Hyderabad, 1952), 9:398; idem, 'Ilal al-ḥadīth, 2:35; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 74:98. See the Appendix # 93.

<sup>20</sup> Maqrīzī, Khiṭaṭ, 4/1:31.

<sup>21</sup> Ibid., 4/1:31-32.

On the issue of standing, see Mez, Renaissance, 331–332 and the discussion in Chapter Three.

<sup>23</sup> See Ibn Abī Dāwūd, Kitāb al-Maṣāḥif in Materials for the History of the Text of the Qurʾān, ed. Arthur Jeffrey (Leiden, 1937), 88–89; Jūda, "al-Qaṣaṣ," 108.

Besides the sources that identify him by his laqab of al-Warrāq (Ibn Saʿd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:253; Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 7:400; Abū Nuʻaym, Ḥilya, 3:89; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:87), see in particular Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-Islām, ed. 'Umar ʿAbd al-Salām Tadmurī (Beirut, 1987), 8:269; idem, Siyar a'lām al-nubalā', ed. Shuʻayb al-Arnā'ūṭ (Beirut, 1981–1988), 5:452–453. See also Nabia Abbott, Studies in Arabic Literary Papyri II: Qurʾānic Commentary and Tradition (Chicago, 1967), 229–230.

<sup>25</sup> Ibn al-Nadīm, Fihrist, ed. Gustav Flügel (Beirut, 1964), 27, 37. See also Jūda, "Qaṣaṣ," 108.

<sup>26</sup> Ibn al-Nadīm, Fihrist, 28. See also Jūda, "Qaṣaṣ," 108. On Ibn Mujāhid and the selection of the authoritative Qur'ān recitations, see R. Paret, "Ķirā'a," El2, 5:127–128.

<sup>27</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:151; Ibn Ḥanbal, al-Zuhd, ed. 'Abd al-A'lā 'Abd al-Ḥamīd Ḥāmid (Cairo, 1987), 247; Abū Nu'aym, Ḥilya, 2:293; Ibn al-Jawzī, Ṣifat, 3:230; Dhahabī, Siyar, 4:516.

 $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ in Medina, taught thirty verses in his morning sessions and thirty in his evening sessions. <sup>28</sup>

Indeed, the connection of the qussas with the qurra' may reflect an image of them that appeared from the textual evidence discussed in the previous chapter better than any other association. Just as the textual evidence revealed that qasas drew upon both religious and martial themes, the association of the qussas with the term "qurra'" indicates the same. While most of the qussas of the Umayyad period were considered qurra' by virtue of their recitation, a second group of qussas was numbered among those qurra' whose reputations were formed in the fires of civil strife in Iraq; these associations will be explored more thoroughly in Chapter Five.  $^{29}$

Qur'an Commentators (al-mufassirūn)

The qussas relationship to Qur'an commentary is abstruse. They have long been associated with tafsar, and it was believed that one of the primary functions of the qass was explication of the Qur'an. This assumption was born out, in part, by the textual evidence for qasas, mentioned in the previous chapter. However, the nature of the relationship between the qussas and Qur'an commentary is uncertain, as is their affiliations with the traditions of the Jews and Christians, which are often associated with commentary on those verses about the pre-Islamic prophets. While it is true that much of the commentary tradition relies upon narratives for explication of unclear passages, and since the qussas have often been associated with the term "storytellers," it has been widely assumed in modern literature on tafsar that the qussas were the source of these "stories" and, thus, were major players in the development of the tafsar tradition—and it must be noted that this apparent influence is rarely expressed in positive terms. These perceptions of the qussas, at least as presented in modern scholarship, date to Goldziher, although a more dis-

Jāḥiz, Bayān, 1:368; Ibn Mujāhid, al-Sabʻa  $f\bar{\iota}$ -l- $qir\bar{a}$ ʻāt, ed. Shawqī Dayf (Cairo, 1972), 59–60.

For the various views concerning the meaning of the term qurrā' as it relates to opposition groups in Iraq, see Redwan Sayed, Die Revolte des Ibn al-Aš'aṯ und die Koranleser (Freiburg, 1977), 277–278; T. Nagel, "Kurrā'," *EI*2, 5:499–500.

Goldziher, Muslim Studies II, 152–153; Pedersen, "Islamic Preacher," 237; MacDonald, "Ķiṣṣa," Eli, 1043; Pellat, "Ķāṣṣ," Eli, 4:733–734; Wansbrough, Quranic Studies, 119–148, esp. 146–148; Fred Leemhuis, "Origins and Early Development of the Tafsīr Tradition," Approaches to the History of the Interpretation of the Qurʾan, ed. Andrew Rippin (Oxford, 1988), 27, 29; Crone, Meccan Trade, 213ff; 'Athamina, "Qaṣaṣ," 54, 59–60.

tinctly critical view of their role has emerged more recently among revisionist scholars like John Wansbrough and Patricia Crone. Wansbrough and Crone, for example, have challenged the validity of much of the tafsīr tradition because of its "narrative framework" and because of the doubtful historicity of commentaries on some Qur'ānic passages. Blame for the tradition's ahistoricity was placed largely upon "the storytellers."<sup>31</sup>

It is here that designations must be made. Both scholars maintain a broad definition of a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$ /"storyteller" as anyone who related narratives. However, as we have seen above, the designation between the  $qus\bar{s}a\bar{s}$  and those who "tell stories" is often unclear in the sources, with the latter being as broad as the researcher's definition of a "story." Crone, for example, is correct in identifying ' $\bar{a}s$ im b. 'Umar b. Qat $\bar{a}$ da b. al-Nu'm $\bar{a}$ n (d.c. 120/737) as one who told stories of the  $magh\bar{a}z\bar{\iota}$  and the Companions of the Prophet in the mosque of Damascus. Clearly, he was involved in telling "stories." However, no Islamic source identified him as a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$ . Apparently not every storyteller was a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$ .

The blurred lines between storytelling and gasas do not imply that the quṣṣāṣ neither related narratives nor that they were not involved in tafsīr. While it cannot be denied that the  $quss\bar{a}s$  played an important role in the  $tafs\bar{i}r$ tradition, the type and extent of their involvement has not yet been determined. Modern works on tafsīr often implicate the quṣṣāṣ as a group for the narrative underpinnings of the commentary tradition. Now, in light of the current list of scholars identified by the Islamic sources as quṣṣāṣ, more accurate evaluations can be made about the role the quṣṣāṣ played in the development of the tafsīr tradition. A first attempt at determining this relationship will be made here. First, general conclusions about the quṣṣāṣ' involvement in tafsīr will be drawn by analyzing the number of quṣṣāṣ who are directly associated with tafsīr, as well as by reviewing anecdotal evidence about their affiliations with tafsīr. From these two criteria, the percentages of quṣṣāṣ involved in tafsīr can be determined and tentative conclusions on how they were perceived by the community can be offered. Secondly, the extent of the quṣṣāṣ' influence upon the early commentaries of 'Abd al-Razzāq al-Ṣan'ānī (d. 211/827) and Tabarī (d. 310/923) will be analyzed. This evaluation will provide a basis for determining how prevalent the quṣṣāṣ are in the commentary tradition and what type of impact they evidenced on individual commentaries. Thirdly, the widely-held belief that the qussas were an essential, if not primary, source for the introduction of the traditions of the pre-Islamic prophets (isras iliyyat) or qisas al-anbiyas) into the Islamic tradition will be evaluated. This analysis will be based on anecdotal evidence on the qussas who purportedly knew the earlier Scriptures and the opinions of the qussas on reports about two pre-Islamic figures, Abraham and Moses. Lastly, the commentary of the qass Muqātil b. Sulaymān (d. 150/767) will be reviewed as an example of the alleged conflation of tassas with qassas and isras iliyyat.

<sup>31</sup> Wansbrough Quranic Studies, 146–148; Crone, Meccan Trade, 213–225.

<sup>33</sup> Crone, Meccan Trade, 217–218.

Percentages and Reputations

According to the sources, only twenty-seven of the qussas were explicitly associated with Qur'ān commentary. This means that only one-quarter of the qussas identified by the Islamic sources were recognized specifically as commentators (mufassiran). As was mentioned above, these statistics do not imply that only a quarter of the qussas ever gave commentaries on the Qur'ān. This is certainly not true, as will be seen below. However, in light of the general impression that one of the primary functions of the qass was Qur'ān commentary, it is revealing that so few were distinguished specifically for their commentaries.

Also the relatively low percentage of commentators from among the quṣṣāṣ is not to be interpreted to mean that they were not influential in the development of the tafsīr tradition. Some of the most important sources in the tafsīr works are included among these men, such as Kaʿb al-Aḥbār, Ibn Masʿūd, Saʿīd b. Jubayr, Mujāhid b. Jabr, al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, Qatāda b. Diʿāma and Muḥammad b. Kaʿb al-Quraẓī. The commentaries of these men are strewn throughout the tafsīr tradition, not least within the important early extant works of ʿAbd al-Razzāq al-Ṣanʿānī, Ṭabarī and, to a lesser degree, Muqātil b. Sulaymān. While a compilation and analysis of their individual commentaries and transmissions

They are: (3) Abū Bakr al-Ṣiddīq, (6) Muʻādh b. Jabal, (9) Kaʻb al-Aḥbār, (10) Abū al-Dardā', (11) Ibn Mas'ūd, (16) Tamīm al-Dārī, (18) Zayd b. Thābit, (19) Abū Hurayra, (25) ʻUbayd b. ʻUmayr, (26) Abū al-Aḥwaṣ, (31) Abū Idrīs al-Khawlānī, (36) Nawf b. Faḍāla, (38) Ibrāhīm al-Taymī, (40) Saʻīd b. Jubayr, (46) Kurdūs b. al-ʾAbbas, (57) Tubayʻ b. ʻĀmir, (58) Mujāhid b. Jabr, (61) Muslim b. Jundab, (63) Yazīd b. Abān, (66) al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, (67) Wahb b. Munabbih, (71) Qatāda b. Diʻāma, (72) Muḥammad b. Kaʻb, (79) ʻAbd Allāh b. Kathīr, (80) Muḥammad b. Qays, (88) Muqātil b. Ḥayyān and (97) Muqātil b. Sulaymān.

helps construct a picture of the types of themes that were particularly relevant to the  $quss\bar{as}$ , such an endeavor is beyond the scope of this work.<sup>35</sup>

It is evident though, throughout the sources, that the qussas played a pivotal role in the tafsīr tradition. The earliest qussās who were among the first religious authorities of the community in recitation and law, like Abū al-Dardā', Ibn Mas'ūd, Zayd b. Thābit and Abū Hurayra, are likewise listed among the sources for the tafsīr tradition. Even at this early level, the diversity of the interests of the qussās may be felt. Goldziher, for instance, clearly associated the qussās with legendary and fantastical traditions drawn mostly from the "People of the Scriptures."36 His evaluation has, in fact, played a significant role in establishing the image of the qussās in modern studies. However, Goldziher also asserted that Ibn Mas'ūd, who was one of the most influential reciters of the Qur'an and commentators on it among the Companions of the Prophet, was against the mythological interpretations of the Qur'an characterized by the quṣṣāṣ.37 However, Ibn Mas'ūd's own affiliation with qaṣaṣ, as discussed in Chapter One, calls into question Goldziher's assessment and confirms the diversity within qaṣaṣ, indicating that the associations of quṣṣāṣ are not limited to legend, myth and fantasy. Unfortunately, accurate assessments of the specific commentaries of the Companions of the Prophet are not easy to obtain because of the difficulty in confirming their authenticity. As a result, it is the influence of the qussās at the level of the next generation, that of the "Successors," that is of greater interest to us, since it is among this group of scholars that we find mention of the recording of commentaries, and it is they who are named most prominently throughout the extant commentaries.

Saʿīd b. Jubayr, for example, was one of the chief students of "the father of Kurānic exegesis," Ibn ʿAbbās, known as the "rabbi/doctor of the Arabs" (ḥabr al-ʿarab), and, therefore, much of his tafsīr and his knowledge of the stories of Heribert Horst analyzed the number of citations of various isnāds and transmitters, many of whom were quṣṣāṣ, in Ṭabarī's Tafsūr but did not analyze their actual sayings; see his "Zur Überlieferung im Korankommentar aṭ-Ṭabarīs," zDMG 103 (1953), 290–307. As mentioned in the Introduction, Jūda attempted to reconstruct the topics of the quṣṣāṣ by evaluating their sayings. He selected a number of quṣṣāṣ and then gave samples of their sayings found throughout the sources; see his "Qaṣaṣ," 110–115. This approach, however, is unavoidably subjective since the researcher himself, by virtue of the examples he has selected, has already decided what type of report is a qiṣṣa. If the researcher believes that qaṣaṣ is made up of stories of cosmogony and the biblical prophets then he may have a tendency to prefer reports of these kinds as examples of the sayings of the quṣṣāṣ and may leave out sayings of a different type, such as legal rulings.

<sup>36</sup> Goldziher, Schools, 37-39.

<sup>37</sup> Ibid., 39.

the pre-Islamic prophets was putatively drawn from his teacher. Saʿīd allegedly recorded his own commentary, commissioned by 'Abd al-Mālik b. Marwān and preserved in his  $d\bar{\imath}w\bar{a}n$ , and some of Saʿīd's students possessed copies of it. Saʿīd's involvement in commentary and in  $qa\bar{\imath}a\bar{\imath}$  did not mean that he offered interpretations unscrupulously. In one instance, when asked for an interpretation, he replied: "I would prefer my side to collapse rather than [do] this." His reticence to explain a passage stands in contrast to the widely-held perception of the  $qu\bar{\imath}s\bar{\imath}a\bar{\imath}$  as men who were willing to dash into fabricating an interpretation before abstaining or admitting that they did not know.

A contemporary of Saʿīd's and fellow student of Ibn 'Abbās, Mujāhid b. Jabr, was also extolled as one of the great commentators of the Successors. The Islamic sources allege that he, like Saʿīd, learned his commentary from Ibn 'Abbās, and a tafsīr attributed to him is extant.<sup>42</sup> So great was his reputation as a mufassir that the famous Sufyān al-Thawrī said: "If you receive the tafsīr of Mujāhid, then you have all you need."<sup>43</sup> Mujāhid's orthodox reputation as a commentator raises further questions about the general perception of the quṣṣāṣ in Qurʾān interpretation. Goldziher, for example, put Mujāhid forward as a precursor to the dogmatic, rationalistic school of Qurʾān interpretation

According to a report in Ibn Sa'd, when Ibn 'Abbās became old and blind, he would send inquirers to Sa'd for instruction; see his Ṭabaqāt, 8:375. Ṭabarī alleged that the commentary of al-Ḍaḥḥāk b. Muzāḥim was essentially that of Ibn 'Abbās transmitted through the mediation of Sa'd; see his Tafsīr, 1:91. Sa'd's dependence on Ibn 'Abbās for tafsīr and for knowledge of the pre-Islamic prophets is evident from the large number of his transmissions from Ibn 'Abbās in Ṭabarī's section on pre-Islamic history; see Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 1:88ff. On Ibn 'Abbās and his role in tafsīr, see Goldziher, Schools, 42f.; L. Veccia Vaglieri, "'Abd Allāh b. 'Abbās," El2, 1:40; F. Sezgin, GAS, 1:25–28; Abbott, Studies II, 99; Leemhuis, "Origins," 15. A tafsīr has been attributed to Ibn 'Abbās, but the authenticity of its ascription to him is doubtful; see Andrew Rippin, "Tafsīr Ibn 'Abbās and the Criteria for Dating Early Tafsīr Texts," JSAI (1994), 38–83.

<sup>39</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:376, 384; Abbott, Studies II, 98–99.

<sup>40</sup> Goldziher, Schools, 37.

<sup>41</sup> Ibid., 37-39.

Țabarī, Tafsīr, 1:90; Ibn al-Nadīm, Fihrist, 33. Leemhuis argues that, while we may have proof of mid-second century "written fixation of the works that transmit tafsīr 'an Ibn Abī Najīḥ 'an Mujāhid," they do not preclude the raising of commentary traditions to the level of Ibn 'Abbās, leaving the question of the authenticity of Mujāhid's transmissions from Ibn 'Abbās unresolved; see his "Origins," 13–30, esp. 21. See also, Abbott, Studies II, 98. As for the tafsīr attributed to Mujāhid, see Tafsīr Mujāhid, ed. 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Ṭāhir b. Muḥammad al-Sūrtī (Beirut, [1970s]).

<sup>43</sup> Ṭabarī, Tafsīr, 1:91.

later characterized by the Muʻtazila.<sup>44</sup> The rationalism adopted by Mujāhid does not accord well with the common perception of the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ . However, as Goldziher correctly noted, Mujāhid was not a systematic dogmatist, as some Muʻtazilites, who claimed that his commentary contains exegesis that is antirationalistic, later asserted.<sup>45</sup> Furthermore, Mujāhid, as Andrew Rippin noted, also integrated traditions of the people of the Book, frequently connected to the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ , into his commentary, such as his explanation of how Solomon lost his kingdom for forty days to Satan, referred to in Sūrat Ṣāḍ (38):34–5.<sup>46</sup> Mujāhid offers an important example of the difficulty in identifying the characteristics of a  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$ . While he was certainly aware of the traditions of the Jews and Christians, neither he nor his commentary is associated with qaṣaṣ by modern scholars. Contrariwise, if he does harbor aspects of a pre-Muʻtazilite rationalism, it seems that he was the antithesis of the  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$ . The reality seems to lie somewhere in the middle.<sup>47</sup>

A slightly younger contemporary, Muḥammad b. Ka'b, a descendant of the Jewish tribe of Qurayẓa, was purportedly the author of a tafsīr and was the most knowledgeable person in Qur'ān recitation whom the distinguished

He based this assessment on Mujāhid's assertion that no man could see God, an issue which Goldziher claimed developed from interpretations of Sūrat al-An'ām (6):102 in reference to the debate whether man will be able to see God in the hereafter—an issue in which Goldziher saw competing views between orthodoxy and Mu'tazilism. Mujāhid actually makes the statement in reference to Sūrat al-Qiyāma (75):20–25; see Ṭabarī, Tafsūr, 29:192–193; Goldziher, Schools, 70. On Goldziher's characterization of Mujāhid as a pre-Mu'tazilite rationalist, see his Schools, 61–72.

<sup>45</sup> Ibid., 72, citing his position on Sūrat al-Isrā' (17):81.

Mujāhid, Tafsīr, 2:549–551. Mujāhid's commentary stands out on two points. First, it is strikingly similar to a story about Solomon found in the apocryphal legends of the Jews; see Louis Ginzberg, The Legends of the Jews (Philadelphia, 1968), 4:150, 153, esp. 168–172. Second, he names the incarnation of Satan Āsaf, diverging from the Jewish legend which identified him as Asmodeus and from later Islamic traditions which give him various names, such as Sakhr b. 'Ufayr; see Muqātil b. Sulaymān, Tafsīr, ed. Aḥmad Farīd (Beirut, 2003), 3:118–119. However, Mujāhid's idenfication of the demon/king as Āsaf further reveals his familiarity with the traditions of the Jews since Āsaf (Āsaph) was the name of a musician in the court of both David and Solomon (1 Chronicles 6:31–43, 25:1; Psalm 73–83). These factors suggest that Mujāhid was intimately familiar with the traditions of the Jews, both scriptural and apocryphal, on Solomon's reign. Both Muqātil b. Sulaymān (Tafsīr, 3:118–120) and Ṭabarī (Tafsīr, 23:156–160) also demonstrate a familiarity with the traditions of the Jews in their commentaries on this passage. On Andrew Rippin's evaluation of Mujāhid, see his "Mudjāhid b. Djabr," EI2, 7:293.

<sup>47</sup> Andrew Rippin also noted that Mujāhid and his commentary resist easy categorization; see his "Mudjāhid b. Djabr," *EI*2, 7:293.

"Successor" and fellow  $q\bar{a}ss$  'Awn b. 'Abd Allāh ever met. <sup>48</sup> Possibly even more influential than these was their Baṣran contemporary Qatāda b. Di'āma. <sup>49</sup> While Ibn al-Nadīm does not list a work of  $tafs\bar{\imath}r$  by Qatāda, he notes that two written  $tafs\bar{\imath}r$ s were taken from him: those of Sa'īd b. Bashīr and Muḥammad b. Thawr, with the latter having been transmitted by Ma'mar b. Rāshid. <sup>50</sup> A perusal of later commentaries, such as those of 'Abd al-Razzāq al-Ṣan'ānī and of al-Ṭabarī, confirms Qatāda's importance. <sup>51</sup> The extent of his influence, as well as that of his contemporaries, is clearly evident in the early commentary of 'Abd al-Razzāq al-Ṣan'ānī.

Quṣṣāṣ Representation in Tafsīr

The Tafsīr of 'Abd al-Razzāg al-San'ānī

An analysis of the 3755 reports in 'Abd al-Razzāq al-Ṣan'ānī's Tafsūr reveals that his commentary is dominated by the exegesis of the early quṣṣāṣ. <sup>52</sup> I tallied the first source of the isnād for each report and compared it to the list of quṣṣāṣ assembled in the Appendix. This analysis revealed that 2614 reports, or 70%, originated with quṣṣāṣ. Furthermore, among those reports from the quṣṣāṣ, an overwhelming number, 1894, or 50% of the total commentary, come from Qatāda b. Di'āma. The next three highest representatives in the commentary lag significantly behind Qatāda b. Di'āma—al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī with 240 reports, or 6.4% of the commentary, Mujāhid b. Jabr with 218, or 5.8%, and Ibn 'Abbās with 180, or 4.8%. It is not simply the large number of traditions from Qatāda, as well as those from al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī and Mujāhid, that hint at this tafsūr's connection to the quṣṣāṣ, there are also nineteen other quṣṣāṣ cited throughout the work. <sup>53</sup> Even though 'Abd al-Razzāq's commentary is not usually associated with the quṣṣāṣ, these numbers undeniably affirm that he depended heavily on them. In addition, 'Abd al-Razzāq's commentary does not incorpo-

<sup>48</sup> Ibn Ḥajar, 3:685; Sezgin, GAS, 1:32. On Muḥammad b. Kaʿb, see the Appendix # 72. On ʿAwn b. ʿAbd Allāh, see the Appendix # 65.

<sup>49</sup> C. Pellat, "Ķatāda b. Di'āma," *EI*2, 4:748; Appendix # 71.

<sup>50</sup> Ibn al-Nadīm, Fihrist, 34.

Horst tallied that Qatāda is listed as an authority 3060 times in Ṭabarī's tafsīr; see his "Überlieferung," 301. On Qatāda as a Qur'ān commentator, see also Raif George Khoury, Les légendes prophétiques dans l'Islam (Wiesbaden, 1978), 91–93.

<sup>52</sup> This anaylsis was based on Maḥmūd Muḥammad 'Abduh's edition (Beirut, 1999).

<sup>53</sup> Sa'd b. Jubayr (72 times); Ibn Mas'ūd (67 times); Abū Hurayra (53 times); Ka'b al-Aḥbār (16 times); 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr (11 times); Thābit al-Bunānī (10 times); Muḥammad b. Ka'b (8 times); Abū al-Aḥwaṣ (6 times); Zayd b. Thābit (4 times); Mu'ādh b. Jabal (3 times); 'Umar b. Dharr, Yazīd b. Abān and Nawf al-Bakālī (2 times); Ibn Rawāḥa, Abū al-Dardā', Sa'd b. Abī'l-Ḥasan, Maṭar al-Warrāq, Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Sulamī and Zurāra b. Awfā (1 time).

rate a large amount of narrative exegesis, and therefore does not appear to follow the commonly-accepted character traits of qa$a$-material. In fact, much of the commentary is identifiable as "paraphrastic." Many of the statements attributed to Qatāda, for example, are concise and lack the characteristics of a narrative. This suggests that, at least in the case of 'Abd al-Razzāq, qa$a$-material was not necessarily, nor even primarily, composed from narratives. Here, as in the evidence culled from the sayings of the qu$a$a$ in Chapter One, the qu$a$a$ display a wide variety of interests. As a result, 'Abd al-Razzāq's commentary indicates that statistically the qu$a$a$ played a major role in the taf$a$a$ tradition, yet that this role did not always include stories.

The Tafsīr of Ṭabarī

Similar conclusions can be drawn from analyses of Ṭabarī's  $tafs\bar{\imath}r$ , though he utilizes narrative exegesis more than 'Abd al-Razzāq. Ṭabarī also depended much upon the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ . Horst's research on the transmitters in Ṭabarī's  $Tafs\bar{\imath}r$  is particularly relevant here for the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  can be found throughout his article. <sup>55</sup> He noted, for example, that the isnad most often cited by Ṭabarī, at 3060 times, was traced back to Qatāda b. Di'āmā. <sup>56</sup> Other qaṣaṣ-sources for Ṭabarī's  $tafs\bar{\imath}r$  include Mujāhid b. Jabr, <sup>57</sup> Saʻīd b. Jubayr, <sup>58</sup> al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, <sup>59</sup> 'Abd Allāh b. Kathīr <sup>60</sup> and Wahb b. Munabbih. <sup>61</sup> It merits mention that Ṭabarī cited 'Abd al-Razzāq al-Ṣanʿānī as a source, and thus the presence of common sources between the two commentators is not surprising. <sup>62</sup>

Complementing the results gleaned from Horst's analysis is a tradition from Yāqūt al-Ḥamawī (d. 626/1229) hinting further at Ṭabarī's dependence upon the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ . Yāqūt listed the "writings" (kutub) of a handful of men, many of whom were numbered among the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ , from whom Ṭabarī drew his  $tafs\bar{u}r$ . He states:

Leemhuis argued that the earliest commentaries were "paraphrastic," characterized by providing synonyms and paraphrases for unclear passages, and that to this were added later narratives from the qussas; see his "Origins," 22–23, 29.

<sup>55</sup> Horst, "Überlieferung," passim.

<sup>56</sup> Ibid., 301–302. See also Abbott, Studies II, 101.

Horst, "Überlieferung," 295–298, 301, 304. See also Abbott, Studies II, 101.

Horst, "Überlieferung," 303. See also Abbott, Studies II, 101.

<sup>59</sup> Horst, "Überlieferung," 301.

<sup>60</sup> Ibid., 295.

<sup>61</sup> Ibid., 303.

<sup>62</sup> Ibid., 301.

[Al-Ṭabarī] mentioned in it [his tafsīr] the tafsīr books of other authors, from Ibn 'Abbās five "recensions" (turuq),<sup>63</sup> from Saʿīd b. Jubayr two recensions, from Mujāhid b. Jabir three recensions and possibly from him in other places more than that, and from Qatāda b. Diʿāma three recensions, and from al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī three recensions, and from 'Ikrima three recensions and from al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī three recensions, and from 'Ikrima three recensions and from al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī three recensions and 'Abd Allāh b. Mas'ūd one recension along with the tafsirs of 'Abd al-Rahmān b. Zayd b. Aslam, Ibn Jurayj, and Muqātil b. Ḥayyān. Additionally, it contains well-known traditions from the Qurʾān commentators and others. It includes all that is necessary of traditions transmitted with isnads. He did not take into consideration untrustworthy tafsīrs so he did not bring into his book anything from Muḥammad b. al-Sāʾib al-Kalbī, nor Muqātil b. Sulaymān, nor Muḥammad b. 'Umar al-Wāqidī because in his opinion they are suspect.<sup>64</sup>

The statistics on the sources for 'Abd al-Razzāq's and Ṭabarī's commentaries suggest that the qussas played a fundamental role in the development of tafsar. As already noted, this assumption has been held by a number of scholars though usually in light of doubts about the historicity of the tradition stemming from the qussas' alleged emphasis on narratives, both those taken from Jewish and Christian materials as well as those connected to the biography (sara) of the Prophet. While the extent of the qussas' influence on 'Abd al-Razzaq and Ṭabarī is obvious, the nature of their influence is unclear. It would be beneficial, for example, to compile the commentaries of individual qussas and analyze their content and style in order to produce a more accurate definition of "qasas-material." I suspect that the diversity found in the textual evidence in Chapter One would be mirrored in the results of this type of analysis.

On the surface, statistical evidence on the prevalence of the qussas in the tafsar tradition seems to confirm the revisionist supposition that the commentary tradition is a creation of the qussas. However, the revisionist argument is not based on sheer number of citations of the qussas in the tafsar sources.

<sup>63</sup> This is Rosenthal's translation for turuq; see his General Introduction, 1:109.

Yāqūt al-Ḥamawī, Irshād al-arīb ilā ma'rifat al-adīb (Muʻjam al-udabā'), ed. D.S. Margoliouth (Leiden 1907–1927), 6:440–441, as cited in Rosenthal, General Introduction, 1:109–110.

<sup>65</sup> Țabarī, Tafsīr, 1:40.

<sup>66</sup> Wansbrough, Quranic Studies, 119–148, esp. 146–148; Crone, Meccan Trade, 216–226.

Heretofore, quantitive analyses were not accurate, because there was no body of names against which to cross-reference these sources. Rather, the revisionist argument is based largely on the assumption that qaṣaṣ means narrative, and that narratives, i.e. "stories," are ahistorical. The current research calls into question the validity of the former argument. Conclusions as to the accuracy of the latter can only be made by stringent analysis of individual traditions. It is evident, however, that the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  played an essential role as source material for the commentary tradition. It is less obvious, though, that this role was associated primarily with narratives. $^{67}$

Furthermore, one of the implied intents behind the attribution of the tafsīr tradition to the  $quss\bar{a}s$  seems to be the marginalization of its reliability because of its association with second-rate, "popular" scholars. Due to the prevalence of the qussās throughout the tradition, this supposition was maintained by advocating an extreme position that the majority of the commentary tradition, even those passages not explicated by narratives, is suspect. This conclusion, however, is untenable. First, the large number of well-respected scholars of the community who are numbered among the quṣṣāṣ and the mufassirūn challenges the perception of the  $q\bar{a}ss$  as an unreliable "popular preacher." The evidence seems to suggest that the  $q\bar{a}ss$  was much more orthodox and mainstream than previously believed. Secondly, the fine reputation of many of the quṣṣāṣ can be attested in their presence throughout the commentary tradition. Their exegesis was by no means restricted to narratives. However, these factors do not altogether acquit them of potential fabrications in their commentaries. It is clear that commentators often were unsure of the explication of certain passages of the Qur'an, as shown by Crone's analysis of Sūrat Quraysh.<sup>68</sup> How much of this uncertainty is the product of the qussas in particular can only be determined by more detailed evaluations of individual quṣṣāṣ and their commentaries.

<sup>68</sup> Crone, Meccan Trade, 203f.

Isrā'īliyyāt

Not only are the <code>quṣṣāṣ</code> most often associated with providing a "narrative framework" for Qurʾānic exegesis, they are, more controversially, often named as the source for the introduction of lore from "the people of the Book" into the Islamic tradition—commonly referred to as <code>isrāʾīliyyāt</code> or <code>qiṣaṣ al-anbiyā</code>. The Islamic tradition's perception of this material has been controversial since early in the community, and the sources contain conflicting reports about its permissibility. M.J. Kister, in his study on a Prophetic <code>hadāth</code> advocating for the transmission of traditions from the Children of Israel (<code>haddithū</code> 'an <code>banī</code> isrāʾīla <code>wa-lā</code> <code>haraja</code>), argued that "there was no serious opposition to the Jewish and Christian traditions transmitted by Jewish and Christian converts, in so far as they concorded with the views of orthodox Islam." How the Islamic tradition defined what "concorded" with its view was more complicated.

Goldziher, Schools, 37–38; Pedersen, "Islamic Preacher," 242; G.H.A. Juynboll, The Authenticity of the Tradition Literature (Leiden, 1969), 121–138; al-Kisā'ī, Qiṣaṣ al-anbiyā': Tales of the Prophets of Kisā'i, trans. William Thackston (Boston, 1978), xiv-xv; Wansbrough, Quranic Studies, 146–148; M.J. Kister, "Legends in Tafsīr and Ḥadīth Literature," Approaches to the History of the Interpretation of the Qur'ān, ed. Andrew Rippin (Oxford, 1988), 82–114; Leemhuis, "Origins," 27; Roberto Tottoli, "Origin and Use of the Term Isrā'īliyyāt in Muslim Literature," Arabica xlvi (1999), 193–210; Claude Gilliot, "Exegesis: Classical," EQ, 2:105–106; al-Tha'labī, Arā'is al-majālis fī qiṣaṣ al-anbiyā' or "Lives of the Prophets": As Recounted by Abū Isḥāq Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad ibn Ibrāhīm al-Tha'labī, trans. William M. Brinner (Leiden, 2002), xi–xxiv.

Oriental Studies ii (1972), 238. Kister chose a variant of this tradition as recorded in 'Abd al-Razzāq's Muṣannaf as his exemplary tradition. Yet the complexity of the issue surrounding the permissibility of the knowledge of the people of the Book may be better characterized in the following tradition in the Muṣannaf in which Zayd b. Aslam related that the Messenger of God said: "Do not ask the people of the Scripture about anything because they will not lead you correctly, for they have already led themselves astray." So he [Zayd] said, "We said, "O Messenger of God, should we narrate (traditions) from the Banū Isrā'īl?" He said, "Narrate, and there is nothing objectionable in that." See 'Abd al-Razzāq, Muṣannaf, 6:110. The tradition presents an obvious interpretive challenge. It seems to indicate that the Muslims were not to seek out unsubstantiatable information from the people of the Scripture by asking them questions, yet they could narrate traditions from them which, I postulate, may have already been recorded, i.e. in the books themselves, and were, therefore, reliable as revelations of God.

Even the medieval scholar Ibn al-Jawzī who challenged the quṣṣāṣ on their use of isrāʾīliyyāt in his Kitāb al-quṣṣāṣ (10–11) included in his al-Mudhish a section on dhikr al-mawāʿiz, which is divided into al-qiṣaṣ and al-mawāʿiz wa-l-ishārāt. The former are tales of pious believers of the past, like Adam, and the second are sermons; see Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Mudhish, ed. Marwān Qabbānī (Beirut, 1985), 76f.; Pedersen, "Islamic Preacher," 242.

To be sure, the association of qaṣaṣ with the Jews is expressed in various traditions, both positive and negative, throughout the sources. The commentary tradition preserves some generally positive reports about the relationship of the Banū Isrāʾīl to qaṣaṣ, one being the commentary on Sūrat al-Isrāʾ (17):1–8. Here the Prophet, when he ascended into the seven heavens (al-mi 'raj), found Aaron, the brother of Moses, in the fifth heaven giving qaṣaṣ to the Banū Isrāʾīl.\(^{72}\) The connection of the term qaṣaṣ to Aaron's session seems to highlight the "Jewishness" of the term, although the report also suggests that qaṣaṣ was not only important temporally, it maintained its relevance eternally. A less flattering evaluation of the relationship between the Jews and the qaṣaṣ is conveyed in a report alleging that the downfall of the Banū Isrāʾīl occurred precisely because they engaged in qaṣaṣ.\(^{73}\) Regardless of the sentiment, be it positive or negative, the implication in both reports is that qaṣaṣ is directly affiliated to the Banū Isrāʾīl.

This allegedly essential connection between <code>qaṣaṣ</code> and the Banū Isrāʾīl, along with the connection of influential <code>quṣṣāṣ</code> like Kaʿb al-Aḥbār and Wahb b. Munabbih to the stories of the prophets, seems to have played an important role in the perception that the <code>quṣṣāṣ</code> were directly connected to the traditions of the people of the Book. Eventually <code>qaṣaṣ</code> became virtually synonymous with those <code>isrāʾīliyyāt</code> that were rarely viewed positively. While not every report about this relationship was antagonistic, <code>isrāʾīliyyāt</code> in the Islamic tradition were increasingly shunned, and the <code>quṣṣāṣ</code> were often blamed as the source

It appears then that the tension between the acceptance of these stories and their rejection is still palpable in the medieval period. Juynboll's study on the perception of the isrāʾīliyyāt in contemporary Egypt reveals the same sorts of fluctuations between acceptance and rejection of these traditions; see his Authenticity, 121–138.

<sup>72</sup> Ṭabarī, *Tafsū*r, 15:9; Thaʿlabī, Kashf, 6:62; Suyūṭī, Durr, 5:202; Ibn Kathir, *Tafsū*r, 3:20. Al-Samʿānī adds that Moses was giving qaṣaṣ and admonishing the Banū Isrāʾīl; see his *Tafsū*r, eds. Yāsir b. Ibrāhīm and Ghanīm b. ʿAbbās b. Ghanīm (Riyadh, 1997), 4:158.

The report is found in three variants. One states: "When the Banū Isrā'il engaged in qaṣaṣ they perished (anna banī isrā'īl lammā qaṣṣū halakū)." See al-Daylamī, al-Firdaws bi-ma'thūr al-khiṭāb, ed. Muḥammad al-Sa'd b. Basyūnī Zaghlūl (Beirut, 1986), 1:231; Ibn al-Athīr, al-Nihāya fī gharīb al-ḥadīth wa-l-athar, eds. Ṭāhir Aḥmad al-Rāzī and Maḥmūd Muḥammad al-Ṭanāḥī (Cairo, 1963—1965), 4:71; Ibn Manzūr, Lisān al-'arab (Beirut, 1956), q-ṣ-ṣ. A second variant reads: "When the Banū Isrā'īl perished they engaged in qaṣaṣ (inna banī isrā'īl lammā halakū qaṣṣū)." See Ṭabarānī, al-Mu'jam al-kabīr, 4:80; Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 127; Suyūṭī, Taḥdhīr, 176. The third variant states that when the Banū Isrā'īl perished they gave judgments (lammā halakū qaḍaw). See Abū Nu'aym, Ḥilya, 4:401; Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 127, n. 4.

for their introduction. 74 Abū Mansūr al-Tha'ālibī (d. 429/1038) cited Abū Dulaf al-Khazrajī, a fourth/tenth century poet, who connected gasas to either Israel (wa-man qaṣṣa li-Isrāʾīl), glossed by al-Thaʿālibī as "the reports of the prophets (al-hadīth 'an al-anbiyā')," or to those who told short stories. 75 A contemporary of al-Thaʿālibī was Ahmad b. Muhammad of the similar lagab al-Thaʿlabī (d. 427/1035) who compiled his famous compilation of these traditions in his 'Arā'is al-majālis, commonly known as his qisas al-anbiyā', one of a number of works in this genre, and who, by doing so, further established the connection between the gussās and the traditions of the people of the Book.<sup>76</sup> Thus, by the sixth/twelfth century, Ibn al-Jawzī, in devoting a whole work to the qussās and mudhakkirūn, bemoaned their role in the introduction of these reports, saying that "the stories (akhbār) of the ancient peoples were seldom authentic, especially those that were related concerning ancient Israel...such as their teachings that David sent Uriah out in order that he might be killed and then married his wife."77 The fundamental role of the qussās in introducing the isrāʾīliyyāt into the Islamic tradition has been widely accepted in modern scholarship. In light of our expanded list of qussās, these assumptions can now be evaluated more closely.

The Quṣṣāṣ and Isrāʾīliyyāt

Of the twenty-seven qussas who were associated with tafsar, only sixteen were singled out for their knowledge of the Jewish and Christian scriptures. In relation to those identified with tafsar, this amounts to over half; in terms of the total number of qussas, this indicates that only 15% were known specifically for their knowledge of the scriptures of the people of the Book. Yet even though this percentage is quite small, it may not reflect the relative influence of these sixteen in regards to the development of the tafsar because listed among this group are some of the more influential commentators of the Umayyad period, such as Ka'b al-Aḥbār, Abū al-Dardā', Tamīm al-Dārī, Zayd b. Thābit, Abū Hurayra, Sa'īd b. Jubayr, Mujāhid b. Jabr, Wahb b. Munabbih, Qatāda b.

Abbott argues that these attitudes were forming by the mid-second century, Studies II, 10. On the connection of the quṣṣāṣ to this development, see Vajda, "Isrāʾīliyyāt," *EI*2, 4:211–212. See also the sources mentioned above in n. 69.

<sup>75</sup> Al-Thaʻālibī, Yatīmat al-dahr, ed. Mufid Muḥammad Qumayḥa (Beirut, 2000), 3:419.

See Brinner's introduction to his translation of Tha labī's 'Arā'is al-majālis, xi-xxiv.

<sup>77</sup> Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Quṣṣāṣ, 10–11 (translation taken from Swartz, 97).

<sup>78</sup> They are: (9) Kaʿb al-Aḥbār, (10) Abū al-Dardā', (16) Tamīm al-Dārī, (18) Zayd b. Thābit, (19) Abū Hurayra, (25) 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr, (36) Nawf b. Faḍāla, (40) Saʿd b. Jubayr, (46) Kurdūs b. al-'Abbas, (57) Tubayʿ b. 'Āmir, (58) Mujāhid b. Jabr, (63) Yazīd b. Abān, (67) Wahb b. Munabbih, (71) Qatāda b. Diʿāma, (72) Muḥammad b. Kaʿb and (97) Muqātil b. Sulaymān.

Di'āma and Muḥammad b. Ka'b. On the other hand, these statistics do not take into consideration other scholars who, though not identified as  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ , were also directly associated with the traditions of the people of the Book. The most prominent representatives of this group are 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb,<sup>79</sup> 'Abd Allāh b. Salām,<sup>80</sup> Ibn 'Abbās,<sup>81</sup> Abū Mūsa al-Ash'arī<sup>82</sup> and 'Abd Allāh b. 'Amr b. al-ʿĀṣ,<sup>83</sup> though they are certainly not alone in their interest in the pre-Islamic Scriptures.<sup>84</sup> The Islamic sources' failure to identify this latter group of scholars as  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  suggests the Muslims may not have always drawn a direct correlation between the reports of the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  and the traditions of the pre-Islamic prophets.

The quṣṣāṣ who are most often associated with the introduction of isrāʾīliyyāt into the Islamic tradition are Kaʿb al-Aḥbār<sup>85</sup> and Wahb b. Munabbih, <sup>86</sup> though they were by no means the only quṣṣāṣ who knew the pre-Islamic Scriptures. Tamīm al-Dārī was numbered among the scholars of the people of the Scriptures. <sup>87</sup> Zayd b. Thābit was famously instructed by the Prophet to learn Hebrew in order to inform him of the content of the Jewish scriptures. <sup>88</sup> At the turn of the century, quṣṣāṣ from across the empire were still known for their associations with sacred scriptures. In Kufa, Kurdūs b. al-ʿAbbās "used to read the pre-Islamic Scriptures and speak about the Gospel and the Torah." <sup>89</sup> Mujāhid b. Jabr of Mecca ostensibly drew much knowledge from the people of the Book, either by reading their Scriptures or by consulting them. <sup>90</sup> Exposure to the earlier Scriptures continued into the first quarter of the second century.

<sup>79</sup> Ibn Mufliḥ al-Maqdisī, al-Ādāb al-shar'iyya, ed. Shu'ayb al-Arnā'ūṭ and 'Umar al-Qiyām (Beirut, 1996), 2:100; Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 10. See also Abbott, Studies II, 8.

<sup>80</sup> J. Horovitz, "Abd Allāh b. Salām," EI2, 1:52.

<sup>81</sup> L. Veccia Vaglieri, "'Abd Allāh b. 'Abbās," EI2, 1:40-41.

<sup>82</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 32:41–54.

<sup>83</sup> Abbott, Studies II, 9.

<sup>84</sup> For a summary of this issue, see Abbott, Studies II, 7–10.

<sup>85</sup> Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 1:2408–409. See also, M. Schmitz, "Ka'b al-Aḥbār," El2, 4:316; Bernard Chapira, "Légendes bibliques attribuées à Ka'b al-Aḥbār," Revue des Etudes Juives, lxix, 86 ff., lxx, 37 ff.; Brinner, 'Arā'is, xxvi-xxvii; Juynboll, Authenticity, 121–138.

Khoury argued that Wahb should be considered the progenitor of the qiṣaṣ al-anbiyā' tradition; see his Légendes, 84. See also Raif George Khoury, Wahb b. Munabbih (Wiesbaden, 1972), 210–221; idem, "Wahb b. Munabbih," EI2, 11:34–36; Juynboll, Authenticity, 121–138.

<sup>87</sup> Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:259.

<sup>88</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 5:308–309. See also Abbott, Studies II, 256–258.

<sup>89</sup> Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 5:342. See also Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 7:242; Abū Nuʻaym, Ḥilya, 4:200; Ibn Ḥajar, al-Iṣāba fī tamyīz al-ṣaḥāba, ed. ʿAlī Muḥammad al-Bajjāwī (Beirut, 1992), 5:639; idem, Tahdhīb, 3:467–468.

<sup>90</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:28.

Qatāda in Basra argued on Islamic topics based on teachings of the Torah. <sup>91</sup> In Medina, Muḥammad b. Kaʿb, a descendant of the Jewish tribe of Qurayẓa, gave commentary based on reports about the pre-Islamic prophets. <sup>92</sup>

Certainly, some of these scholars, like Wahb b. Munabbih, came to be affiliated with the isrā'īliyyāt more than others. It may be helpful to mention, though, that in spite of his association with stories of pre-Islamic prophets, Wahb, thus far, has only explicitly been connected to the term gassa in two, rather late, sources. 93 How this is to be interpreted is open to debate. On its surface, however, it suggests that the earliest biographers did not perceive of him as a  $q\bar{a}ss$  or, at least, as primarily a  $q\bar{a}ss$ , despite his well-established connection with the stories of the pre-Islamic prophets. Considering his widely recognized association with "stories," it seems rather odd that he is not consistently identified as a qāṣṣ or as having given qaṣaṣ, unless the biographers agreed with regard to a different view of the role of a  $q\bar{a}ss$  than simply as one who related traditions of the people of the Scriptures. Even more unusual, though, is that even later biographers, those who would already have associated the quṣṣāṣ with isrāʾīliyyāt, such as Mizzī, Dhahabī and Ibn Ḥajar—all of whom lived after Ibn al-Jawzī who himself already made this connection—never specifically identify Wahb as a  $q\bar{a}ss$ .

The Quṣṣāṣ on Moses

While the reports presenting anecdotal evidence of the qussas's knowledge of the traditions of the Jews and Christians are by and large positive, other reports challenge their trustworthiness because of their questionable interpretations. In one instance, the Kufan  $q\bar{a}ss$  Nawf b. Faḍāla al-Bakkālī, the step son of Kaʿb al-Aḥbār, alleged that the Moses who was the Companion of the enigmatic Qurʾānic figure al-Khiḍr was not the same Moses of the Banū Isrāʾīl. Saʿīd b. Jubayr, himself a  $q\bar{a}ss$ , informed his teacher Ibn ʿAbbās of Nawf's opinion. Ibn ʿAbbās exclaimed: "The enemy of God lied!" On the surface, this tradition seems to affirm the qussas' tendency, especially those with ties to the Jewish

<sup>91</sup> Jāhiz, Bayān, 1:104.

<sup>92</sup> Țabarī, Tārīkh, 1:298–299, 923–925.

<sup>93</sup> See the Appendix # 67.

<sup>94</sup> Al-Shāfiʿī, al-Risāla, ed. Aḥmad Muḥammad Shākir (Cairo, 1939), 442; ʿAbd al-Razzāq al-Ṣanʿānī, Tafsūr, 2:408; Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 35:43–46, 48–57; Bukhārī, Ṣaḥūḥ, 1:56–57, 3:1246–1247, 4:1752–1754; Muslim, Ṣahūḥ, 4:1847–1850; Ṭabarī, Tārūkh, 1:417, 424; idem, Tafsūr, 15:279–280; Ibn Abī Khaythama, Akhbār al-Makkiyyūn, ed. Ismāʿīl Ḥasan Ḥusayn (Riyadh, 1997), 410, 412; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhūb, 4:250. For more citations for this tradition, see the editor's note in Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 35:46. See also Goldziher, Studies II, 154; Pedersen, "Criticism," 217.

and Christian traditions, as in the case of Nawf, for promoting the  $isr\bar{a}$ ' $\bar{i}$ liyy $\bar{a}t$ . In addition, Nawf's familial connection to Ka'b al-Aḥbār did not mitigate the perception that he relied upon  $isr\bar{a}$ ' $\bar{i}$ liyy $\bar{a}t$ . Therewithal, the report lends itself to be interpreted as a judgment upon the qussas for distorting the faith by false teaching. Other factors, however, suggest that this deduction may not be accurate.

First to be noted, Saʿīd b. Jubayr, the informant in the tradition—a role suggesting his opposition to Nawf's interpretation—and one who was the source of many reports about the pre-Islamic prophets, was also a  $q\bar{a}ss.^{95}$  Consequently, this report claiming to give the opinion of only one  $q\bar{a}ss.^{95}$  Nawf, in fact preserves the opinions of two  $quss.^{95}$ . Furthermore, these two  $quss.^{95}$  are portrayed in opposition to each other over a Qur'ānic interpretation suggesting that commentators who knew the scriptures of Judaism and Christianity did not automatically default to these traditions. In addition to this, even the medieval scholar al-Nawawī in his commentary on Muslim's version of this tradition, being aware of Nawf's strong reputation as a scholar and apparently fearing that this report marred the reputation of a distinguished scholar, noted that Ibn 'Abbās's accusation that Nawf was "the enemy of God" not be taken literally, rather as hyperbole ( $mub\bar{a}lagha$ ). <sup>96</sup>

The Quṣṣāṣ on Abraham

A second example, from the Tafsīr of Ṭabarī, confirms that quṣṣāṣ, even those from Jewish background, did not always defer to their own traditions while expounding upon the Qur'ān. One Qur'ānic passage exemplifying the exegetical tension between Judaism and Islam is that describing God's testing of Abraham, asking him to sacrifice his son.<sup>97</sup> The Jewish Scriptures identify the boy as Isaac (Isḥāq); the Qur'ān, on the other hand, is silent about the identity of the boy. This silence, though, did not keep the commentators from speculating on his identity. The commentary tradition preserves the various opinions of the earliest scholars of the community, and Ṭabarī's  $Tafs\bar{\imath}r$  is a valuable repository of opinions on this debate.

<sup>95</sup> Sa'd gave reports on many of the pre-Islamic prophets as indicated in the opening sections of Ṭabarī's Tārīkh; see 1:150; 1:332; 1:417; 1:458; 1:523; 1:654–655. He also allegedly inquired from the "People of the Scriptures" on interpretive matters; see Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 1:461–462.

<sup>96</sup> Al-Nawawī, Sharḥ Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim (Beirut, 1972), 15:137. Therefore, Pedersen, in my opinion, rightly deduced that this report is "not a general criticism of the quṣṣāṣ;" see his "Criticism," 217.

<sup>97</sup> On this event, see Norman Calder, "From Midrash to Scripture: The Sacrifice of Abraham in Early Islamic Tradition," Muséon 101:3–4 (1988), 375–402.

Ṭabarī records traditions advocating for each of the two sons of Abraham, Ismāʿīl and Isḥāq, as the requested sacrifice. As for those who alleged that Isḥāq was the sacrifice, Ṭabari cites Ibn ʿAbbās and al-ʿAbbās b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, along with five  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ : Ibn Masʿūd, Abū al-Aḥwaṣ, Abū Hurayra, Kaʿb al-Aḥbār and ʿUbayd b. ʿUmayr. <sup>98</sup> Only one of the five  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ , Kaʿb al-Aḥbār, comes from Jewish background, seeming to confirm Kaʿbʾs role in introducing <code>isrāʾīliyyāt.</code> <sup>99</sup>

Furthermore, the list of those who believed that Ismāʿīl was the son whom Abraham was to sacrifice is just as diverse. In addition to distinguished Companions like Ibn 'Abbās and Ibn 'Umar, three <code>quṣṣāṣ</code>, Mujāhid b. Jabr, al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī and Muḥammad b. Kaʿb al-Quraẓī, are named as sources who advocate for Ismāʿīl, while a fourth <code>qāṣṣ</code>, Saʿīd b. Jubayr, is cited as the one who transmitted this report from Ibn 'Abbās.¹00 Just as was true among those who made the case for Isḥāq, only one of these <code>quṣṣāṣ</code>, Muḥammad b. Kaʿb al-Quraẓī, descended from Jewish lineage. In the report attributed to him, he informed the caliph 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz that, while the Jews admit that Abraham was called to sacrifice Ismāʿīl, they intentionally hid this from the Arabs so as to keep from them the honor of having their father be the sacrifice.¹¹¹¹¹ The strength of his argument for identifying the boy as Ismāʿīl is therefore rooted in what appears to be "insider" information. In this instance, a Muslim of Jewish heritage exposed the Jews' hidden agenda behind keeping this information secret.¹¹¹²²

The commentary on this passage indicates the complex relationship of the qussas, even those of Jewish lineage, to Jewish material. This example suggests that, while the qussas certainly engaged in Qur'anic commentary, the role that

<sup>98</sup> Țabarī, Tafsīr, 23:81–83.

<sup>99</sup> For allegations against Ka'b for introducing isrā'īliyyāt, see Brinner in Tha'labī, 'Arā'is, xxvi–xxvii; Juynboll, Authenticity, 121–138.

Tabarī, Tafsīr, 23:83–85. It should be mentioned that Ibn 'Abbās is cited as having advocated both Isḥāq and Ismā'īl. Goldziher noted that opposing or mutually-exclusive commentaries were attributed to Ibn 'Abbās; see his Schools, 51.

Tabarī, Tafsīr, 23:85. Goldziher refers to this tradition but, instead of identifying the source as Muḥammad b. Kaʿb, he identifies him as "a servile convert;" see his Schools, 52.

This type of putative manipulation of information by the Jews was considered by the Muslims as taḥrīf. After the 5th/11th century, largely as a result of Ibn Ḥazm's influence, the term was extended to apply to alleged distortions in the text. See H. Lazarus-Yafeh, "Taḥrīf," *EI*2, 10:111–112; Gordon Nickel, "Early Muslim Accusations of Taḥrīf: Muqātil b. Sulaymān's Commentary on Key Qur'ānic Verses," in The Bible in Arab Christianity, ed. David Thomas (Leiden, 2007), 207–223.

they played in introducing the traditions of the People of the Scriptures into the Islamic tradition is still uncertain: on the particular issue of Abraham's sacrifice eight  $quss\bar{a}s$ —nine if Sa'īd b. Jubayr is included—are divided among the opposing opinions. Furthermore, each interpretation enjoyed the support of one scholar of Jewish descent. At least in this instance, the attribution of the  $isr\bar{a}$ ' $iliyy\bar{a}t$  to the  $quss\bar{a}s$  or to individuals who allegedly maintained a propensity and sympathy for the  $ahl\ al$ - $kit\bar{a}b$  seems unjustified.

The Tafsīr of Muqātil b. Sulaymān: The Merging of Tafsīr with Qaṣaṣ and Isrā'īliyyāt

Familiarity with and utilization of the traditions of the People of Book were allegedly factors in the repudiation of the famous Qur'ān commentator and  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  Muqātil b. Sulaymān (d. 150/767). Muqātil was a prolific author on topics related to the Qur'ān and its commentary. His most famous work is certainly his extant  $Tafs\bar{i}r$ . This  $Tafs\bar{i}r$  is of particular importance to the study of the  $quss\bar{a}s$  and the  $isr\bar{a}iliyy\bar{a}t$  since it has been presumed that it preserved the vestiges of early qasas material. To Criticisms of Muqātil's  $Tafs\bar{i}r$  occur in early attestations in the Islamic sources. Al-Jāḥiz preserved the opinion of his

- Goldziher noted that Kaʿb was not the only advocate for Isaac; but by referring to him as "the Jewish scholar" and by not identifying the "servile convert" who supported Ismāʿīl as the reputable Muḥammad b. Kaʿb of the Jewish Qurayza tribe, he may have unintentionally left the impression that Jewish converts defended the Torah; see his Schools, 52–53.
- Goldziher, Schools, 38–40; Sezgin, GAS, 1:36–37; Wansbrough, Quranic Studies, 136; Plessner and Rippin, "Mukātil b. Sulaymān," EI2, 7:508. Plessner and Rippin noted that Muqātil was also criticized for anthropomorphism and for affiliation with questionable theological groups such as the Murji'a and the Zaydiyya. These accusations, however, do not appear to be connected to criticisms of his tafsīr for as Plessner and Rippin noted, "Certainly there is little or no evidence for any of these stances in his extant works;" see Plessner and Rippin, "Mukātil b. Sulaymān," EI2, 7:508.
- 105 Ibn al-Nadīm names twelve different works attributed to him; see his Fihrist, 179.
- There are still important unresolved issues surrounding the two modern editions of Muqātil's Tafsīr. Specifically, the modern edition of 'Abd Allāh Maḥmūd Shihāta is based on the "Baghdādī" recension alone, while other recensions of the work, in particular the recension from Marw, could prove helpful in supplying a more accurate production of the work. For discussions of these issues, see Claude Gilliot, "Muqātil, grand exégète, tradionniste et théologien maudit," Journal Asiatique 279:1 (1991), 39–50; van Ess, TG, 2:519–523.
- Plessner and Rippin state this outright ("Mukātil b. Sulaymān," El2, 7:508), but they are certainly following in the path of earlier scholars who noted the connection between Muqātil and the traditions of the ahl al-kitāb, like Goldziher (Schools, 38–39) and, in particular, Wansbrough (Quranic Studies, 119–148, esp. 136, 146–148). For similar analyses, see also Leemhuis, "Origins," 29; Gilliot, "Muqātil," 70–76; idem, "Exegesis: Classical," teacher Abū Ishāq al-Nazzām (d. 220–30/835–45)<sup>108</sup> who disparaged Muqātil, along with a number of other commentators, such as 'Ikrima (d. 105/723), 109 al-Paḥḥāk [b. Muzāḥim] (d. 105/723),110 al-Suddī (d. 127/745),111 al-Kalbī (d. 146/763),<sup>112</sup> and Abū Bakr al-Asamm (d. 200-1/816-7),<sup>113</sup> for "saying things without giving a source, and these were, thus, baseless, and that the stranger the commentary the more beloved it was by them."114 Al-Nazzām's criticism of these commentators was based on two points: first, that their commentaries lacked an authority and were, thus, merely their personal opinions, and second, that their commentaries were odd and, in fact, the odder the commentary the more sought after it was. 115 About a century later, Ibn Hibban (d. 354/965), in his work on unreliable ḥadīth transmitters, mentioned Mugātil's associations with the traditions of the ahl al-kitāb, stating: "He took from the Jews and Christians knowledge of the Qur'an which agreed with their books ('ilm al-Qur'ān alladhi yuwāfiqu kutubahum)."116 It has been this criticism, supplemented by the sentiment portrayed in al-Nazzām's criticism, which contributed to a generally negative assessment of Muqātil and his Tafsīr.

The role that Ignaz Goldziher played in the modern perception of Muqātil as a "storyteller" is crucial and warrants more analysis. Goldziher, building on Ibn Ḥibbān's report, connected Muqātil with "the old guild of storytellers  $(quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ)$ ," whose invented stories were "dominated by the element of phantasy (sic.)." He criticized Muqātil, and the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  in general, as people who "knew no secrets and shunned neither effort nor scruples credibly to fashion

EQ, 107; van Ess, TG, 2:516–519; G.H.A. Juynboll, Encyclopedia of Canonical Ḥadīth, (Leiden, 2007), 298.

<sup>108</sup> J. van Ess, "al-Nazzām," El2, 7:1057-1058.

<sup>109</sup> J. Schacht, "'Ikrima," EI2, 3:1081-1082.

<sup>110</sup> Sufyān al-Thawrī purportedly advocated taking tafsīr from al-Daḥḥāk, as well as from Sa'd b. Jubayr, Mujāhid and 'Ikrima; see Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 13:293.

<sup>111</sup> G.H.A. Juynboll, "al-Suddī," EI2, 9:762.

<sup>112</sup> W. Atallah, "al-Kalbī," EI2, 4:494-495.

<sup>113</sup> J. van Ess, "al-Aşamm," EI2, Supplement 12:88–90.

<sup>114</sup> Al-Jāḥiz, Kitāb al-ḥayawān, ed. 'Abd al-Salām Muḥammad Hārūn (Cairo, 1996), 1:343. See also van Ess, TG, 2:518.

Van Ess noted that al-Nazzām considered Muqātil's commentary "outlandish" but he did not mention al-Nazzām's primary criticism of the commentators, their lack of an authoritative source; see his TG, 2:518.

<sup>116</sup> Ibn Ḥibbān, Kitāb al-majrūḥīn min al-muḥaddithīn, ed. Maḥmūd Ibrāhīm Zāyid (Aleppo, 1976), 3:14. See also Ibn Khallikān, Wafayāt al-a'yān wa-anbā' abnā' al-zamān, ed. Ihsan 'Abbās (Beirut, 1970–1973), 5:257; Goldziher, Schools, 38.

<sup>117</sup> Goldziher, Schools, 38.

their phantasies woven into the Koran by way of misleading borrowing from reputable authorities." In the case of Muqātil, in particular, Goldziher cites two examples of this type of "misleading" whereby Muqātil took his tafsīr from "reputable authorities": one from al-Þaḥḥāk [b. Muzāḥim] and another from Ibn 'Abbās." The commentary that Goldziher claims Muqātil ascribed to Ibn 'Abbās is worthy of further examination.

Goldziher's judgment of Muqātil, and by extension of the qussās as lacking in "scruples" and dependent on "phantastic" stories is based largely on a tradition that he read in Muhammad b. Mūsā al-Damīrī's (d. 808/1405) zoological lexicon, Hayāt al-hayawān al-kubrā. 120 Here, Damīrī records multiple traditions about the goat that will be slaughtered on the Day of Resurrection symbolizing for the people of paradise and hell-fire the eternality of their existence.121 Damīrī based his discussion on a Prophetic tradition found in many variants transmitted by Abū Hurayra, Ibn ʿAbbās and Abū Saʿīd al-Khudrī and also found in orthodox hadīth compilations. 122 It is at this juncture that Damīrī introduces traditions on this subject from Ibn 'Abbās, al-Kalbī and Muqātil claiming that they alleged that Gabriel and the prophets rode on this goat. Damīrī, in fact, does not attribute this commentary directly to Muqātil, although Goldziher read it as such; instead he makes it appear that it was common to all three men. 123 In addition, even if al-Damīrī's intention was in fact to ascribe this interpretation to Muqātil, the interpretation itself does not derive from a single citation in Muqātil's commentary of Sūrat al-Mulk (67):2; rather, it is a compilation of his commentaries on a variety of passages, in particular Sūrat al-Isrā' (17):1, Sūrat Maryam (19):39 and Sūrat al-Anbiyā' (21):103. 124

Damīrī, therefore, exercised creative license in constructing a tafsīr and then attributing it to Muqātil, or to all three commentators. While he implied that these commentators actually said that Gabriel and the prophets rode on

<sup>118</sup> Ibid., 39.

<sup>119</sup> Ibid., 38-39.

<sup>120</sup> Al-Damīrī Ḥayāt al-ḥayawān al-kubrā, ed. Aḥmad Ḥasan Basaj (Beirut, 2003), 2:367, s.v. kabsh. This passage was clearly a proof-text for Goldziher because he translated it, in its entirety, in his Schools; see 39. Van Ess noted that Goldziher drew his impressions on Muqātil from secondary sources, like al-Damīrī, though van Ess still believed that his observations were accurate; see his TG, 2:518.

<sup>121</sup> Damīrī, Ḥayāt, 2:367.

<sup>122</sup> Ibn Sallām, Gharīb, 2:206; Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 17:120; Bukhārī, Ṣaḥīḥ, 4:1760; Muslim, Ṣaḥīḥ, 4:2188; Tirmidhī, Sunan, 5:315; Nasāʾī, Sunan, 6:393; Ṭabarī, Tafsūr, 15:99, 16:88. See similar traditions in Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 14:215–216, 31:265–267.

<sup>123</sup> Compare Damīrī, Ḥayāt, 2:367 with Goldziher, Schools, 39.

<sup>124</sup> Compare Damīrī, Ḥayāt, 2:367 with Muqātil, Tafsīr, 2:246–247, 313, 371.

this goat, the reference he is citing is actually of Muqātil's commentary on the mi'rāj and the Prophet's journey into the heavens on a mythical horse. 125 Indeed, by mixing commentaries, Damīrī created his own commentary and played himself the role of "storyteller." Arguably, the statement that he created is in fact more fanciful than what is found in the individual commentaries of these three passages found in Muqātil's Tafsīr when those are left in their contexts. Furthermore, as for the interpretations of the Prophet's night journey, Mugātil's commentary is no more fanciful than later commentators; in actuality, it is wholly orthodox. Thus, Goldziher's assessment of Muqātil as an unscrupulous qāss characterized by "capricious Koranic exponents, subject to no limitations" and therefore lying outside the pale of orthodoxy, as opposed to orthodox scholars like Ibn Mas'ūd (though Goldziher is apparently unaware that Ibn Mas'ūd was also identified by the sources as a  $q\bar{a}ss$ ), is entirely unjustified. 126 The Muqātil that Goldziher evaluated was almost a caricature of Damīrī's creation. Lastly, it must be remembered that Damīrī's invented story about Muqātil's commentary comes within a passage telling of orthodox hadīth scholars who related similar traditions about the nature of this eschatological goat. In other words, Muqātil's comments were apparently not too far removed from those of the most orthodox of authorities.

Goldziher's view of Muqātil and the quṣṣāṣ in the tafsīr tradition affected Muqātil's reputation profoundly. His initial evaluation was later expanded such that Muqātil's Tafsīr was believed to have preserved the earliest form of Qur'ānic commentary—a form established primarily on providing a narrative framework for passages and rooted in Rabbinic literature that served to fill in "the gaps in the Quranic narrative." Indeed, based on these factors, it Muqātil, Tafsīr, 2:246–247. Damīrī noted that the gait of the beast on which Gabriel and the prophets rode "is—as far as the eye can reach—greater than that of a donkey and smaller than that of a mule (khuṭwahā madd al-baṣar fawq al-ḥimār wa-dūn al-baghl)." See Damīrī, Ḥayāt, 2:367 (translation is that of Goldziher, Schools, 39). The passage is clearly problematic since a gait that is greater than a donkey but smaller than a mule is not very long and, therefore, cannot be described as "as far as the eye can reach." The difficulty stems from Damīrī's combination of two separate descriptions of the animal given by Muqātil, and his implication that they apply to the gait of the animal, in particular, as Goldziher read it. According to Muqātil the animal itself is larger than a donkey but smaller than a mule and its gait is as far as the eye can see; see his Tafsīr, 2:247 on Sūrat al-Isrā' (17):1.

<sup>126</sup> Goldziher, Schools, 38-39.

<sup>127</sup> Van Ess, TG, 2:518.

<sup>128</sup> Wansbrough said, "For Muqātil and Ibn Ishāq it was the story that mattered." See his Quranic Studies, 127. While he noted both scholars' interest in stories, he believed that was precisely Muqātil's "undisciplined employment of Jewish material" which made him suspect in the eyes of "later generations." <sup>129</sup>

Muqātil's apparent dependence on these types of narratives was likewise interpreted as an indication of the "popular," as opposed to "scholarly," thinking preserved in his commentary—a perception that seemed to find support in a report stating that Muqātil, "assembled together the  $tafs\bar{\imath}r$  of the people  $(jama`a tafs\bar{\imath}r al-n\bar{a}s)$ ." Leemhuis interpreted this reference to the " $tafs\bar{\imath}r$   $al-n\bar{a}s$ " as having "probably... just meant that this kind of material (by which Leemhuis means stories with 'no identifiable source') was thought to stem from the popular store of the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ.$ " This analysis upholds the perception that Muqātil's  $Tafs\bar{\imath}r$  is essentially based in narratives.

The belief that Muqātil based his commentary on the traditions of the Jews and Christians is by no means reserved to Western revisionist circles. The perception that Muqātil was sympathetic towards these traditions can be found in modern Islamic scholarship where it is accompanied by an impassioned the importance of the narrative framework, what he called haggadic exegesis, was better attested in Muqātil's *Tafsū*r than in Ibn Isḥāq's Sūra; see his Quranic Studies, 127. See also Gilliot's summary of Wansbrough's position, as well as that of other modern scholars on the earliest types of *tafsū*r, in his "Exegesis of the Qur'ān: Classical," EQ, 2:99–104. For the belief that Muqātil preserves Rabbinic literature, see Wansbrough, Quranic Studies, 123, 135.

Wansbrough, Quranic Studies, 136. Wansbrough cites al-Suyūṭī ( $Itq\bar{a}n$  [Cairo, 1967], 4:207–209) and Goldziher (Richtungen, 58–60, 87, 112 [=trans. Schools, 38–40, 57–58, 73]).

Al-Khaṭīb al-Baghdādī, Tārīkh Baghdād (Beirut, 2005), 13:163; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:143-144. 130 Leemhuis, "Origins," 29. Leemhuis, however, did not give the rest of the quote which says: 131 "And he interpreted [the Qur'ān] without having heard [from an authority] (wa-fassara 'alayhi min ghayr samā')." See al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī, Tārīkh, 13:163; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:143-144. This second criticism of Muqātil may be more relevant to his repudiation by the Islamic sources than the first. Rippin also considers Muqātil's Tafsīr to be an example of a "popular" commentary, as opposed to an "intellectual" commentary, which he claims includes "technical" matter such as grammatical analyses as he notes can be found in the Tafsīr al-Jalālayn. Though Rippin is aware of the significant time difference between the two commentaries, his decision to pit Muqātil's "popular" commentary against the Jalālayn seems somewhat self-serving. More accurate conclusions could certainly be drawn by comparing two commentaries from a similar time period. In that situation, the artificial designations of "popular" and "intellectual" may fall by the wayside; see Rippin, "Ibn 'Abbās," 70. See also Calder, "Midrash," 392-393.

<sup>32</sup> Leemhuis, following on his comment about the "tafsīr al-nās" being based on material from "the popular store of the quṣṣāṣ," said, "to us, in any case, it seems clear that this must have been the origin of this kind of narrative taſsīr," and supported his conclusion with a reference to Wansbrough; see his "Origins," 29.

antagonism not found in Western scholarship. Each of the editors of the two modern editions of Muqātil's Tafsīr was highly critical of its author for allegedly introducing the traditions of the Jews and Christians into the commentary tradition.<sup>133</sup> Both editors cited Muqātil's reference to the story of David and Bathsheba in his commentary on Sūrat al-Aḥzāb (33):36–8 as a specific example of the damage created through the transmission of Jewish lore.<sup>134</sup> This passage, on its surface reflecting negatively on Muqātil's orthodoxy, may, upon further review, shed light on his intentions and help clarify his connection to qaṣaṣ and the isrāʾīliyyāt.

According to Sūrat al-Ahzāb (33):36–8, the Prophet was granted permission by God to marry Zaynab bt. Jahsh, his cousin and the divorced wife of his adopted son, Zayd b. Ḥāritha. 135 Permission for this marriage required a special revelation by God allowing an adopting father to marry the wife of an adopted son since the Prophet's contemporaries viewed it skeptically, in spite of the fact that Zayd was not the Prophet's blood relative. 136 In his commentary on verse 38, stating: "there is no reproach for the Prophet in that which God makes his due; that was God's way with those who passed away of old—and the commandment of God is certain destiny," Muqātil analogized the Prophet's situation to that of David and Uriah. On this verse, though, Muqātil gave no details about what transpired between David and Uriah. He simply argued that what happened between the Prophet and Zayd had a precedent in David and Uriah, thus clarifying the statement in the Our'an "that was God's way with those who passed away of old." Only later, in his commentary on Sūrat Ṣāḍ (38):21-26 (of David being rebuked for some unspecified misdeed) does Muqātil explain that David wanted to marry Uriah's wife, so he sent Uriah to battle where he was killed.137

&#x27;Abd Allāh Maḥmūd Shiḥāta said: "In our countries, we submit to trials from the State of Israel. In our exegesis, we submit to the trials of the lies of the Children of Israel. When will we purify our lands of the Jews? When will we preserve our exegesis from the biblical legends of the Jews?" See Muqātil b. Sulaymān, Tafsīr, ed. 'Abd Allāh Maḥmūd Shiḥāta (Cairo, 1979–1989), 3:640–641, n. 5. See also Gilliot, "Muqātil," 71, n. 131. Aḥmad Farīd, editor of the Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyya edition, said that the primary flaw of the commentary is "the isrā'īliyyāt and the introduction of the knowledge of the Jews and Christians into the tafsīr of the Qur'ān." See*Tafsīr Muqātil*, ed. Aḥmad Farīd, 1:10.

<sup>134</sup> Muqātil, Tafsīr, ed. Shiḥāta, 3:640–641, n. 5; Muqātil, Tafsīr, ed. Farīd, 1:10.

<sup>135</sup> See Muqātil, Tafsīr, ed. Farīd, 3:46–48; Ṭabarī, Tafsīr, 22:11–15.

<sup>136</sup> Ibid.

<sup>137</sup> For this version of the story, see Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 1:563–570; idem, Tafsīr, 23:148–151; Thaʿlabī, 'Arāʾis, trans. Brinner, 468–480. In these accounts, the Islamic tradition does recognize the moral failure of David and his need for repentance. It differs from the biblical account, Muqātil's account of the Prophet's marriage to Zaynab, alluded to in Sūrat al-Aḥzāb (33):36–8, is, furthermore, not significantly different than what is recorded by Ṭabarī in his tafsūr.<sup>138</sup> One of the basic differences between the two is that Ṭabarī gives no historical reference for his commentary on verse 38, preferring, in contrast to Muqātil's reference to David and Uriah, only to argue that God did not cause the Prophet to sin by asking him to do something that prophets before him had not already done.<sup>139</sup> While he admits that there was a precedent, unlike Muqātil, he gave no concrete example.

Muqātil's allusion to a "Jewish" story is available for a surface interpretation as proof that he relied on these traditions more than other commentators, like Ṭabarī. However, this does not account for the presence of the story as a commentary on Sūrat Ṣāḍ (38):21–6 in Muqātil's, Ṭabarī's, as well as 'Abd al-Razzāq's, tafsūrs. Each of them related the expanded Islamic account of David and Uriah in their commentaries on this pericope, and that suggests that Muqātil was no more dependent upon <code>isrā'īliyyāt</code> than 'Abd al-Razzāq or Ṭabarī, whose names are not as often associated with the traditions of the <code>ahl al-kitāb</code> as his is.<sup>140</sup> As however, as to the identity of those who confronted David; the biblical account claims that a man named Nathan challenged the prophet-king (2 Samuel 12) while the Islamic account states that two angels were sent to him. The Islamic versions, however, do not contain the more scandalous aspects of the biblical account, such as David's adulterous relationship and Bathsheba's pregnancy, both of which, according to the biblical account, were the impetuses for his plot to have Uriah sent to the battlefront to die (2 Samuel 11). However, this information was known by the Islamic scholars, for Ibn Ḥazm refers to it and states that anyone who would ascribe such behavior to a prophet has upon himself "a thousand thousands of curses." See his al-Fişal fī-l-milal (Cairo, 1903), 1:143. Tha labī records a tradition attributed to 'Alī b. Abī Ṭālib who threatened with flogging those who believed that David had committed a sin even in the marrying of Bathsheba, without allusion to the adulterous affair and pregnancy found in the Jewish account; see Tha labī Arā'is al-majālis, trans. Brinner, 472. The absence of narrative detail in Muqātil's commentary on Sūrat al-Aḥzāb (33):38 is revealing, for it rather fits Wansbrough's halakhic paradigm of derivation of law from scripture—in this case the permissibility of marrying the wife of an adopted son-than his haggadic paradigm of narrative exegesis which he alleged characterized Muqātil's Tafsīr.

- 138 Gilliot noted the similarity between Muqātil's commentary and Ṭabarī's commentary in regards to a report about Solomon; see his "Muqātil," 72. It applies elsewhere also, such as here in the case of the story of David and Uriah.
- 139 Țabarī, Tafsīr, 22:14-15.
- This is not meant to suggest that 'Abd al-Razzāq and Ṭabarī's use of Jewish and Christian sources has not been previously noted. In fact, Ṭabarī's use of the stories of the Jews and Christians has been known in Western scholarship since at least Goldziher; see his Schools, 58–59. However, in spite of this, neither Ṭabarī nor 'Abd al-Razzāq have been a result, when Ibn al-Jawzī, and modern scholars, censured the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ 's scurrilous claim that David sent Uriah to his death, he was standing squarely against influential scholars, not all of who were considered to have been among the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ , who related this account.<sup>141</sup>

What is at stake in the comments of Aḥmad Farīd, one of the editors of Muqātil's commentary, seems, then, not to be Muqātil's use of this account in his commentary, rather how and where he applies it. By referring to David and Uriah in the passage about Zayd and Zaynab, Muqātil is walking a slippery slope. Since there is a scandalous aspect to the story of David and Uriah, its introduction at this juncture associated the Prophet with less than honorable behavior. It is this sentiment that seems to lie behind Farid's accusation that Muqātil's use of <code>isrā'īliyyāt</code> in this passage "magnified the calumny against the messenger of God." It is possible, as Gilliot suggested, that Muqātil's interpretation here was an example of an earlier, less rigid view of the impeccability of the Prophet. Muqātil, however, does not seem to have intended it this way. He seems to have intended the exact opposite result.

In this instance, Muqātil's use of isrāʾīliyyāt was available for interpretation as advantageous to the Prophet. The story helps legitimize the actions of the Prophet by giving a concrete example of the precedent merely alluded to in verse 38, with the added benefit of accomplishing this with the utmost care for the reputation of the Prophet. By omitting the details of the David and Uriah story (which he certainly knew as attested in his commentary at Ṣāḍ (38):21–26), Muqātil preserved the Prophet from the ignominy that resulted from comparison to David and his machinations against Uriah. This suggests that when the Qurʾānic text refers to an earlier prophet, even one of David's stature, potentially damaging details were allowed. In this case, Muqātil seems to preserve a theology pre-existing to the established doctrine of the impeccability of the prophets. However, Muqātil's reference to the David and Uriah narrative in the passage about the Prophet need not necessarily be interpreted as allowing for the fallibility of the Prophet. Muqātil, in this as well as other passages, indicates that he maintained no definitive theology of the impeccability subjected to the same types of criticism leveled against Muqātil for their use of these stories. Goldziher, on the contrary, classified Ṭabarī's commentary under "traditional exegesis;" see his Schools, 57.

<sup>141</sup> Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 10–11.

See Farīd's introduction to his edition of the Tafsīr, 10.

<sup>143</sup> Gilliot, "Muqātil," 84. On this position, see W. Madelung, "Işma," EI2, 4:182–184.

<sup>144</sup> Gilliot notes this in other instances in Muqātil's Tafsīr; see "Muqātil," 70–76.

<sup>145</sup> Gilliot, "Muqātil," 84.

of Muḥammad, and definitely not of the earlier prophets, though his tendency seems to be to protect the Prophet from association with misdeeds. 146

Unfortunately for Muqātil, these sensitivities were not enough to keep him from the negative reputation associated with the  $isr\bar{a}$   $iliyy\bar{a}t$  and therefore with the assumption that his  $Tafs\bar{i}r$  contains early qaṣaṣ material. Beyond this particular factor, his identification as a  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  may also have influenced this impression, although it is rarely referred to in studies of him. If the identification of Muqātil as a  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  has influenced his reputation as an untrustworthy purveyor of Jewish and Christian lore, then it must be noted that the majority of the Islamic sources identify Muqātil as a  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  only in connection to his teachings in Marw and related, in some way, to his interaction with his nemesis, the pro-Abbāsid Jahm b. Safwān. Ide Only Ibn Abī Ḥātim described Muqātil's position as a  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  from a different vantage point; he mentioned his role as a  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  in the context of his poor transmission of  $had\bar{u}th$ , not for any association with hisrariliyyat. Furthermore, the connection of the term qaṣaṣ to the <sup>146</sup> Gilliot, for example, includes it as an example of the openness of the early tradition on the theology of the infallibility of Muḥammad. This is not to say that the principle is entirely false. In fact, Gilliot cites a later passage, Sūrat al-Aḥzāb (33):52, which seems to support his position better. Here Muqātil, while commenting on the number of wives allowed for the Prophet, stated: "Then He (God) warned the Prophet about committing some offense that should not be done with regard to their (his wives') situation." See his Tafsīr, ed. Farīd, 3:52. In this instance, Muqātil alludes to the possibility that the Prophet would do something wrong and thus had to be warned by God. Gilliot shows how some later exegetes dealt with this passage by claiming it had been abrogated by verses 50-51 of the same Sūra; see his "Muqātil," 76. Furthermore, Muqātil's commentaries on passages which mention the Prophet asking forgiveness for sin (Sūrat Ghāfir [40]:55, Sūrat Muḥammad [47]:19 and Sūrat al-Fath [48]:2) are equally as diverse. In his commentary on the first two, he mentions nothing about the Prophet; see his Tafsūr, ed. Farīd, 3:152 and 3:238). In his commentary on al-Fath (48):2 which states: "That God may forgive thee of thy sin that which is past and that which is to come," Muqātil glossed "that which is past" with "what happened during the jāhiliyya (mā kāna-fī-l-jāhiliyya)" and "that which is to come" with "and after the coming of prophethood (wa-ba'd al-nubuwwa)." See his Tafsīr, ed. Farīd, 3:244. These passages support Gilliot's assessment that Muqātil was not beholden to a strict view of the infallibility of the Prophet.

Plessner is an exception. He states, for example: "It did not help his fame also that he is said to have told pious stories [cf. kiṣṣa] in the mosque, at a time when this was strictly forbidden." See "Mukātil b. Sulaymān," EII, 3:712.

<sup>148</sup> Ibn 'Adī, Kāmil, 6:437; Ibn Asākir, Dimashq, 60:123; al-Dhahabī, Mīzān al-i'tidāl, eds. 'Alī Muḥammad Mu'awwaḍ and 'Ādil Aḥmad 'Abd al-Mawjūd (Beirut, 1995), 6:505; idem, Tārīkh, 9:641; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:143.

<sup>149</sup> Ibn Abī Ḥātim, Jarḥ, 8:354.

political movements within Khurasān at the end of the Umayyad period was not reserved for Muqātil. Ṭabarī, for example, who fails to identify Muqātil as a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$ , reported that Jahm incited the supporters of the anti-Umayyad rebel al-Ḥārith b. Surayj by means of  $qas\bar{s}$  he gave in his tent. Consequently, the appellation of Muqātil as  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  may be relevant only within narrow geographical and chronological parameters. Is

This is not to deny, however, that Muqātil's Tafsīr contains material from Jewish and Christian sources; this fact is attested clearly in his Tafsīr as well as in biographical citations about him.<sup>152</sup> It is uncertain, though, if Rippin's conclusion that Muqātil's tafsīr "likely... presents versions of the stories told by the early kuṣṣāṣ" is entirely justified.<sup>153</sup> The attribution of Muqātil's Tafsīr to qaṣaṣ material appears to be a product of the general impression that Jewish and Christian traditions are inherently qaṣaṣ material.<sup>154</sup> This position, however, cannot be sustained. Furthermore, Muqātil was not the only commentator to draw from what Wansbrough classified as Rabbinic literature. In addition to Muqātil, Wansbrough mentions al-Kalbī and Sufyān al-Thawrī, suggesting that Muqātil and al-Kalbī were reproached opprobriously by later generations because of their use of Jewish materials and that even though Sufyān also utilized these sources he, for some unknown reason, emerged unscathed in reputation among later scholars, unlike his two unfortunate contemporaries.<sup>155</sup>

<sup>150</sup> Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 2:1919. See also the discussion of Muqātil's relationship with Jahm in Chapter Five.

<sup>151</sup> If this is accurate, then it would call into question van Ess's assertion that Muqātil b. Sulaymān and Muqātil b. Ḥayyān make up a "Khurāsānī qāṣṣ-tradition;" see his TG, 2:518. Van Ess intended by this statement that the two preserve legendary stories in their commentaries and thus apparently established a continuity of qaṣaṣ in the region. The political aspect of the references to Muqātil as a qāṣṣ, as well as his political alliance with Muqātil b. Ḥayyan in supporting Naṣr b. Sayyār, may indicate that their qaṣaṣ connection is a result of political affiliations more than their use of legendary stories in their commentaries; see Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 2:1918.

<sup>152</sup> For biographical references to his knowledge of Jewish and Christian materials, see Ibn Ḥibbān, Majrūḥīn, 3:14; Ibn Khallikān, Wafayāt, 5:257.

<sup>153</sup> Rippin, "Muķātil," 7:509.

The connection between the quṣṣāṣ and the isrāʾīliyyāt, qiṣaṣ al-anbiyā' and the Jewish and Christian traditions is widely accepted; see, for example, Goldziher, Schools, 38–40; Vajda, "Isrāʾīliyāt," *El*2, 4:211–212. See above, 91–94.

<sup>155</sup> Wansbrough, Quranic Studies, 136–137. W. Atallāh also mentioned al-Kalbī's use of Jewish and Christian sources; see his "al-Kalbī," *EI*2, 4:495. For a discussion of the Islamic tradition's views of Muqātil and al-Kalbī, see Abbott, Studies II, 104–106.

Yet the perseverance of the isrā'īliyyāt within the Islamic tradition suggests that Muqātil was not censured for this reason.<sup>156</sup> Other exegetes who were known for their transmission of the traditions of the Jews and Christians, most notably Wahb b. Munabbih, were not disregarded solely because of this issue. 157 Even later exegetes, like Tabarī, relied upon reports from Wahb, Sufyān al-Thawrī and others who used Rabbinic literature. 158 Yāqūt, for example, does not provide a reason why Tabarī rejected Mugātil beyond that his tafsīr contained "suspect" things. 159 This criticism does not seem to be tied to concerns about Muqātil's use of legendary traditions or reports from the ahl al-kitab, for Tabarī himself did not reject material simply because a source was affiliated with these traditions. 160 One of many examples is his utilization of reports from Mujāhid b. Jabr, who also drew from the traditions of the Jews and Christians. Moreover, when Tabarī disagreed with Mujāhid, he was not averse to challenging his opinion—an approach he could have applied to those interpretations of Mugatil with which he disagreed. 161 Additionally, Mugatil also depended upon Mujāhid, as well as other sources used by Ṭabarī, like Saʿīd b. Jubayr,

The presence of Jewish and Christian material within the Islamic tradition is extensive and undeniable. These traditions are found in histories, e.g. Ṭabarī, and al-Maṣūdī, qiṣaṣ al-anbiyā', e.g. al-Kisā'ī and Tha'labī, in commentaries, e.g. Ṭabarī, and even in ḥadīth collections, e.g. Bukhārī's Ṣaḥīḥ, in particular in his chapter on Qur'ānic commentary. For modern studies, see Vajda, "Isrā'īliyyāt," 4:211; Kister, "Ḥaddithū," 215–239; Tottoli, "Isrā'īliyyāt," 193–210.

A later scholar, Yāqūt al-Hamawī (d. 626/1229) would certainly have been aware of the negative connotation attached to the term <code>isrā'īliyyāt</code> and yet he praised Wahb as "the purveyor of historical reports (<code>al-akhbārī</code>), the master of <code>qaṣaṣ</code>. He was one of the best of 'the Successors;' trustworthy (<code>thiqa</code>), truthful (<code>ṣadūq</code>) and transmitted much from the old books known as the <code>isrā'īliyyāt</code> (<code>al-kutub al-qadīma al-ma'rūfa bi-l-isrā'īliyyāt</code>)." See his <code>Mu'jam al-udabā'</code>, 7:232. He obviously harbored no prejudice against those who used Jewish materials.

 $<sup>158 \</sup>quad \text{See Goldziher, } \textit{Schools}, 58-59; \text{Horst, "Überlieferung," } 290-307; \text{Abbott, } \textit{Studies II}, 101-102.$

<sup>159</sup> Yāqūt, Mu'jam al-udabā', 6:440-441.

Rippin noted Ṭabarī's use of reports that could be classified as <code>qiṣaṣ</code> al-anbiyā'. See his citation of Tilman Nagel's <code>Die Qiṣaṣ</code> al-anbiyā': Ein Beitrag zur arabischen Literaturgeschichte in "al-Thaʿlabī, Aḥmad b. Muḥammad," El2, 10:434. Van Ess also believed that Ṭabarī's suspicion of Muqātil stemmed from the latter's use of legend and myth; see his <code>TG</code>, 2:518. However, Yāqūt also noted that Ṭabarī used the <code>tafsīr</code> of Muqātil b. Ḥayyān; Yāqūt, <code>Muʿjam al-udabā</code>', 6:440–441. If, according to van Ess, the common denominator between Muqātil b. Ḥayyān's and Muqātil b. Sulaymān's commentaries is their use of legendary material, then one has to wonder why Ṭabarī considered only the latter Muqātil suspicious.

<sup>161</sup> Goldziher, Schools, 57-58.

Qatāda and al-Ḍaḥḥāk b. Muzāḥim, indicating that at least on some points Muqātil and Ṭabarī were drawing inspiration from the same pool of sources. 162

It must also be recalled that affiliation with the traditions of the Jews and Christians was a complicated matter. Even though many commentators depended on these traditions, the corpus as a whole was often viewed negatively. This negative image came to predominate in the minds of later scholars and has largely clouded the reputations of even earlier purveyors of these traditions in suspicion. The tension surrounding the legitimacy of the <code>isrāʾīliyyāt</code> and the <code>quṣṣāṣ</code> is certainly tangible in Ibn al-Jawzī's <code>Kitāb al-quṣṣāṣ</code>, where he at once censures them, cautions against them and advocates for them, with the determining factor in their permissibility apparently rooted in periodization and identification. In general, the <code>quṣṣāṣ/mudhakkirūn</code> of the early period and those who enjoyed sound reputations, i.e. the Companions of the Prophet, are granted more grace in this matter. Nevertheless, the future caliph 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb was warned by the Prophet about taking information from the Torah. Ibn al-Jawzī reported:

Certain of the pious ancestors despised storytelling  $(qaṣaṣ)\dots$  [because] the stories  $(akhb\bar{a}r)$  of the ancient peoples were seldom authentic, especially those that were related concerning ancient Israel.... 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb once took some excerpts from the Torah to the Prophet whereupon the latter responded: "Rid yourself of them, 'Umar, especially in view of the ridiculous things that are known in Judaism such as their teachings that David sent Uriah out in order that he might be killed...[and] some people who introduced into religion that which did not belong there told stories.<sup>164</sup>

The  $q\bar{a}$ \$ $\bar{s}$ \$ $\bar{s}$ \$, then, was often stigmatized as having surreptitiously and subversively corrupted the faith by infecting the community, either consciously or unwittingly, with the traditions of the ahl al-kitāb. The  $q\bar{a}$ \$ $\bar{s}$ \$ $\bar{s}$ \$ was, therefore, generally portrayed as sympathetic, not antagonistic, towards the Jews and Christians.

In his tafsūr, Muqātil refers to Sa'd b. Jubayr three times (2:304; 2:346 and 3:306), to Mujāhid four times (1:24; 1:27; 1:233; 3:375) and to al-Daḥhāk 15 times (1:23, 1:24, 2:164, 2:254, 2:264, 2:283, 2:299, 2:312, 2:319, 2:349, 2:350, 3:381, 3:427, 3:431, 3:503). He also lists Qatāda b. Di'āma as one of his thirteen sources (1:21), though he cites him only three times (2:298; 3:20; 3:345); see his Tafsūr, ed. Farīd. See also Abbott, Studies II, 97–101.

On this evolution, see Brinner's Introduction to Tha'labī's 'Arā'is; Tottoli, "Isrā'īliyyāt," passim. For discussions of this issue in 20th century Egypt, see Juynboll, Authenticity, 121–138.

<sup>164</sup> Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 10 (translation taken from Swartz, 96–97).

However, if an early Islamic scholar embarked on a systematic commentary of the Qur'ān, those passages criticizing the ahl al-kitāb presented an ideological dilemma for an alleged sympathizer of the Jews and Christians. An analysis of Muqātil's commentary indicates that, while he may have used reports about the Jews and Christians, as did his successors, his work can hardly be read as sympathetic to the ahl al-kitāb. He refers to them as hypocrites (at Sūrat al-Baqara [2]:9), as liars (at Sūrat al-Baqara [2]:105), as trying to seduce Muslims from the faith (at Sūrat al-Baqara [2]:107–8), as deserving of death or the poll-tax (al-qatal aw al-jizya) on earth and hell-fire in the next life (at Sūrat Āl 'Imrān [3]: 56), as adulterers and idolaters (at Sūrat al-Nūr [24]:3) and as rejecting the call to Islam (at Sūrat al-Shūrā [42]:15).

This representative sample of references to the ahl al-kitāb does not at all suggest that Muqātil maintained an affinity for the Jews and Christians. Such are not the types of opinions normally associated with a qāṣṣ who has introduced Jewish and Christian elements into Islam.<sup>165</sup> Generally, the quṣṣāṣ are connected to reports of the kind found in the qiṣaṣ al-anbiyā literature, basically devoid of critical statements about the Jews and Christians because it is not a commentary grappling with those passages that lend themselves to such interpretations. In spite of Ibn Ḥibbān's criticism that Muqātil took his 'ilm al-Qur'ān from the Jews and Christian, his commentaries on these passages do not portray him as an advocate for them.<sup>166</sup>

Muqātil and his  $Tafs\bar{i}r$  represent the tension that surrounds the qussas and their association with the traditions of the people of the Book. Some believe that these associations contributed to his repudiation by later generations of scholars. This factor, as I have attempted to show above, may not have been as instrumental in the evolution of his poor reputation as previously believed. A more likely reason was proposed by Abbott, who noted that his tafsar was respected by many leading scholars of the second/eighth and third/ninth century, such as Ibn al-Mubārak, Wakīʻ b. al-Jarrāḥ, al-Shāfiʻī and Ibn Ḥanbal, although it was mistrusted because he did not receive his information aurally from his sources, and because it lacked isnads. It is to be recalled that this was the primary criticism leveled against Muqātil and his fellow commentators Muqātil's critical views of the Jews can be seen in his comments on other Qur'ānic texts, such as on the various ways they tampered with God's revelations; see "Taḥrīf," *EI*2, 10:111; Nickel, "Taḥrīf," 207–223.

<sup>166</sup> Ibn Ḥibbān, Majrūḥīn, 3:14.

Ibn Ḥanbal purportedly said: "[Though] he had books that he consulted, I admit that he possessed knowledge of the Qur'ān." See al-Khaṭīb al-Baghdādī, Tārīkh, 13:161. See also Abbott, Studies II, 100, 104f.

by Nazzām.<sup>168</sup> He allegedly copied from written works and thus was rebuked for not having "conform[ed] to the standards of oral transmission of  $had\bar{u}th$  that were current in his day and thereafter."<sup>169</sup> It is his poor transmission of reports and traditions that outweighed any other judgment leveled against him.<sup>170</sup> Goldziher, who in the body of his Schools of Koranic Commentary depicts Muqātil as an unscrupulous  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$ , gave another reason in his footnotes as to why Ṭabarī may have rejected his  $tafs\bar{u}$ . He supported his position that Ṭabarī "displays little appreciation of independent, arbitrary, and subjective ideas" by noting that Ṭabarī's opposition to Muqātil was not a product of the latter's use of reports from the Jews and Christians, rather for his failure to provide sources for his opinions.<sup>171</sup> Moreover, Ibrāhīm b. Isḥāq al-Ḥarbī, who also criticized Muqātil's lax use of sources, recognized the value of his  $Tafs\bar{u}$  and did not connect opposition to it to the types of sources he used, rather to professional jealousy.<sup>172</sup>

The Quṣṣāṣ as Qur'ān Commentators

Clearly, the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}$ ṣ left a major imprint on  $tafs\bar{u}r$  works. Their names can be found throughout these works and indicate that they were generally considered by the Muslims to be reliable sources for commentary on the Qur'ān. They appear to have engaged in more "real exegesis" than was previously believed. The ascription to the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}$ ṣ of stories of the pre-Islamic prophets, i.e. the  $isr\bar{a}$  ' $iliyy\bar{a}t$  and the qiṣaṣ al-anbiyā', seems to be a product of the perception that these were the primary domains of the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ . This assumption, however, is not borne out by the current research. According to the textual evidence presented above, the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  were interested in a number of topics, including (although not exclusively or even predominantly) stories of cosmogony, the pre-Islamic prophets and interpretations from the people of the Book. Moreover, the breadth of their associations with other religious disciplines

<sup>168</sup> Jāḥiz, Ḥayawān, 1:343.

<sup>169</sup> Abbott, Studies II, 104.

<sup>170</sup> In addition to Abbott's summary, see al-Khatib al-Baghdādi's Tārīkh, where his lack of concern for sources is presented in multiple anecdotes; see 13:165–169.

<sup>171</sup> Goldziher, Schools, 57.

<sup>172</sup> Al-Khaṭīb al-Baghdādī, Tārīkh, 13:162–163; Abbott, Studies II, 104.

<sup>173</sup> Pellat restricted "real exegesis" to only "certain 'sermonisers'." See his "Kāṣṣ," EI2, 4:734.

Wansbrough states that "much if not all of his [the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$ ] material, however, is found in the writings of the haggadic exegetes." See his Quranic Studies, 147. By this he means that the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  drew his material from narratives of the traditions of the ahl al-kitāb, what he also refers to as narratio; see his Quranic Studies, 146. For the same sentiment, see Khoury, Légendes, 107.

reveals a diversity not normally attributed to them. Since there are early testaments to works of cosmogony, proto-qiṣaṣ al-anbiyā' and commentaries, some by the mid-second/eighth century, it seems more accurate to argue that these stories, i.e. isrā'īliyyāt and qiṣaṣ al-anbiyā', were not so much the focal point of one particular segment of religious educators, i.e. the quṣṣāṣ, but were the product of the natural evolution of the religion—sought out, transmitted and recorded by the scholarly community in general.<sup>175</sup>

In spite of being commonly associated with isrā'īliyyāt, it appears, on the basis of the above analysis, that the quṣṣāṣ were only part of a general trend within the first two centuries of Qur'an commentary of using these reports. Their "stories" seem to have been no different in content than other scholars, and thus there is no reason to disparage them because of their apparent questionable relations with the Jews and Christians. When Muqātil b. Sulaymān's Tafsīr was evaluated from this perspective, it was evident that he did not depend upon the narratives of the Jews and Christians any more than other commentators of the early period, nor did he reveal a particular empathy for these traditions. As a result, it appears that to classify his tafsīr as having preserved early qaṣaṣ-material seems to betray a presupposition about the nature of qaşaş and that Muqātil stood apart among his colleagues in his reliance upon them. Furthermore, since, statistically, more quṣṣāṣ of the Umayyad period are not mentioned in the commentary tradition than those who are, the introduction of isrāʾīliyyāt into the Islamic tradition does not seem to have been the primary interest of the quṣṣāṣ as a whole. Consequently, precisely what role they played in the development of the commentary tradition can only be accurately determined by further comparative studies of the identified qussās and their transmissions within the Qur'ān commentaries.

It may be helpful here to consider the statement of R.G. Khoury, following Zaki Mubarak's La Prose Arabe au IV<sup>e</sup> siècle de l'hégire, in describing the rise of Arabic/Islamic literature, that these developments are a natural process of human society. They do not come into existence ex nihilo; see Khoury, Légendes, 73–76. The same could be said about the quṣṣāṣ and their transmission of isrāʾīliyyāt. It would be wrong to assume that they alone were interested in these traditions. Compartmentalization of religious materials according to disciplines seems to argue against the normal trends in the evolution of religious systems. Averil Cameron has shown that the same tendency to utilize extra-canonical materials was at play in the evolution of stories in early Christianity; see her Christianity and the Rhetoric of Empire (Berkeley, 1991), 89–119. The presence of these stories in multiple genres of Islamic literature further supports the view that they attracted the interest of the scholarly community at large; for a summary, see Camilla Adang, Muslim Writers (New York, 1996), 13–21.

Ḥadīth Transmitters (muḥaddithūn)

The Critical Image of the Quṣṣāṣ in Ḥadīth Transmission

The image derived from much of the Islamic literature is that the qāss was a disreputable transmitter of hadīth. A number of reports perpetuate this image and serve as a basis for the general repudiation of the qussās. Again, the inimitable Ignaz Goldziher assembled a few of these reports in his insightful work on the qussās' involvement in the fabrication of hadīth.<sup>176</sup> While he recognized that qasas in the early period was not necessarily a negative phenomenon, he also maintained a consistently critical view of the qussās by distinguishing the practitioners of qaṣaṣ from the men of "official theology." Even though not every  $q\bar{a}ss$  was antagonistic to the scholars, the tension between the  $q\bar{a}ss$ and the hadīth scholar is illustrated in a report from al-Shaʿbī (d.c. 103/721), who, as we have seen before, admitted that he was beaten by a mob in Palmyra for challenging their  $q\bar{a}ss$ 's explanation of the trumpet blasts on the day of judgment. This report alleges that prior to the turn of the first century,  $quss\bar{a}s$ were engaged in the elaboration of, if not the outright fabrication of, traditions of the Prophet. This image eventually became the standard characterization of the quṣṣāṣ. Ibn al-Jawzī (d. 597/1200) states this, in part, in his Kitāb al-quṣṣāṣ and in more definitive terms in his Kitāb al-mawdū'āt where he numbers the quṣṣās among those who fabricate hadīth. 179 Almost two centuries later, Ibn Taymiyya (d. 728/1328) propagated this image in his Aḥādīth al-quṣṣāṣ through recording what he alleged to be some of the quṣṣāṣ's fabricated traditions. Then, the prolific al-Suyūṭī (d. 911/1505), approximately two centuries after Ibn Taymiyya, vilified the qussās in his Tahdhīr al-khawāss min akādhīb al-qussās ("Warning the educated about the lies of the quṣṣāṣ"), devoting his first chapter to relating numerous variants of the famous Prophetic tradition condemning those who lie about the Prophet, i.e. the quṣṣāṣ, to hell-fire. 180

The attribution of <code>hadīth</code> fabrication to the <code>quṣṣāṣ</code> has not diverged significantly from these reports and from Goldziher's analysis and can be summarized as follows:

Before the recognized books were compiled the body of Tradition had grown enormously, and serious students recognized that much of it was

<sup>176</sup> Goldziher, Muslim Studies II, 151, 153–155, 156–158.

<sup>177</sup> Ibid., 151-154.

<sup>178</sup> Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 177–178; Goldziher, Muslim Studies II, 156–158.

<sup>179</sup> Ibn al-Jawzī, Kitāb al-mawdū'āt, ed. Tawfīq Ḥamdān (Beirut, 1995), 1:19–22.

<sup>180</sup> Suyūṭī, Taḥdhīr, 8–65. For this ḥadīth's connection to the quṣṣāṣ, see also Goldziher, Muslim Studies II, 146.

fabricated. The kuṣṣāṣ (storytellers) were men who invented the most extraordinary traditions to which they attached seemingly impeccable  $isn\bar{a}ds$ , their purpose being to astonish the common people and receive payment for their stories.<sup>181</sup>

This image of the qussas is not entirely wrong, although it has often been drawn from the later medieval sources largely contentious towards the qussas. It is true that the sources contain reports of fabrications from the qussas. It is not clear, however, when the qussas developed this reputation or how rampant this fraud was among their ranks.

It is not a significant leap from this position to argue that the qussas not only engaged in the fabrication of  $had\bar{\imath}th$ , they were, in fact, the originators of  $had\bar{\imath}th$ . Basing his argument on  $awa\ddot{\imath}il$  traditions that purport to name the first qussas, be they Tamīm al-Dārī, 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr or Sulaym b. 'Itr, G.H.A. Juynboll claims that "the earliest qisas may well have contained sermon-like accounts of an edifying nature concerning the Prophet and the Muslims of the first period" and alleges that these qisas were the first stage in the evolution of  $had\bar{\imath}th$ . <sup>183</sup>

While it may be true that <code>qiṣas</code> were proto-<code>hadīth</code>, Juynboll's suppositions fail to prove his point because of his assumptions about the <code>quṣṣās</code> and the nature of <code>qaṣaṣ</code>. First, his decision to focus on the <code>awāʾil</code> traditions about the <code>quṣṣāṣ</code> betrays his presupposition that they were the sources for the <code>hadīth</code> tradition; he selects these <code>quṣṣāṣ</code> because they were putatively the first of their kind. He could have chosen, rather, other scholars who were ostensibly the first of their particular disciplines. Al-'Askarī, for example, discusses the first judges of various regions, some of whom date to the caliphates of Abū Bakr and 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb—the exact time period of the three <code>quṣṣāṣ</code> mentioned by Juynboll.¹84 The rulings of these judges could also represent the earliest stages of <code>hadīth</code>, just as <code>qiṣaṣ</code> allegedly did. Juynboll, however, argues that the rulings of these judges did not depend upon earlier precedent, an essential factor in

<sup>181</sup> J. Robson, "Hadīth," El2, 3:24. See also G.H.A. Juynboll, Canonical Hadīth, 57, 298, 704.

<sup>182</sup> Albrecht Noth drew the same conclusions about the quṣṣāṣ based on Ibn al-Jawzī's Mawḍū'āt; see his "Common Features of Muslim and Orientalist Hadith Criticism," Hadūth, ed. Harald Motzki, (Aldershot, 2004), 314.

<sup>183</sup> G.H.A. Juynboll, Muslim Tradition (Cambridge, 1983), 10–23, esp. 12. Juynboll chose the awā'il traditions believing that they contain reliable historical information. Aziz al-Azmeh, on the other hand, reads the awā'il literature not as history but as the propagation of exempla for the community; see his Arabic Thought and Islamic Societies (London, 1986), 267–269.

<sup>184</sup> See al-'Askarī, al-Awā'il, eds. Muḥammad al-Miṣrī and Walīd Qassāb (Damascus, 1975), 2:111–117, where he reports that 'Umar himself was appointed judge by Abū Bakr and that Abū Maryam al-Ḥanafī was appointed judge over Baṣra in 14/635.

hadīth transmission, and therefore cannot constitute early hadīth. While this may be accurate in part, it does not clarify how gasas was any more reliant upon precedent than was judging. I speculate, however, that his assumption that "legal thinking on the basis of individual judgement as well as precedent in Islam is a development of somewhat later times" may have contributed to his preference for the qussās as progenitors of hadīth rather than the judges. <sup>185</sup> Secondly, his assumption that the first *hadīth*s were edifying stories like those told by the qussās is premised on the belief that qasas remained static "in conformity with the later position of the qāss in society." While this also may prove true in certain aspects, it has heretofore been unsubstantiated, and the existence of a few examples of legal rulings by the quṣṣāṣ, as seen in the textual evidence given in Chapter One, seems to argue that the qussās were neither static nor always storytellers. Thus, when presented with two options for scholarly functions which may have been the precursor to the hadīth tradition, Juynboll seems to have chosen the qussās based on a back-projection of their medieval role into the early period as well as a concern that attributing these origins to the judges implies that "legal thinking" was an early phenomenon in Islamic society.

While the image of the qussās as hadīth fabricators can be supported by various reports and seems to have particular merit beyond the Umayyad period, their role in the formation of the hadīth tradition in the earliest periods of the community has not yet been adequately evaluated. Although some anecdotal evidence of the connections between the quṣṣāṣ and ḥadīth transmission will be evaluated, much of the following analysis will focus on the how the Islamic community viewed the qussās of the Umayyad period. Since the Muslims themselves were aware of the presence of hadīth fabrications, hadīth scholars attempted to isolate those whom they believed to be weak in hadīth transmission. If the quṣṣāṣ were systematically involved in such fabrications, then we should expect to find them associated with these weak transmitters. Therefore, drawing from biographical information, the reputations of each of the 108 quṣṣāṣ have been determined and assembled into four categories: 1. those who are generally reputable; 2. those who are generally weak; 3. those who have mixed reputations; 4. those whose reputations in hadīth were indeterminate due to limited information. The following analysis will show that the quṣṣāṣ of the Umayyad period were overwhelmingly considered to be trustworthy hadīth scholars.

<sup>185</sup> Juynboll, Muslim Tradition, 12 (emphasis his).

<sup>186</sup> Ibid., 12.

Statistical Analysis of the Reputations of Qussas in Ḥadīth

Even a cursory perusal of the names of the qussās of the early period reveals a number of well-known hadith scholars many of whom were Companions of the Prophet and provide the putative first line in transmission from him, such as the first caliph Abū Bakr, Abū al-Dardā', Ibn Mas'ūd, Zayd b. Thābit, Abū Hurayra and Mu'ādh b. Jabal. Aside from the question surrounding the number of hadīth transmitted by Abū Hurayra, these men are beyond reproach as sources for hadīth. They are not alone among the ranks of exemplary personalities in hadīth transmission. Reputable Successors such as Qatāda b. Di'āma and Thābit b. Aslam al-Bunānī, both of whom were considered among the best transmitters of traditions from the prolific Anas b. Mālik, are numbered among the quṣṣāṣ. 187 Additionally, two Kūfan quṣṣāṣ, Abū al-Aḥwaṣ and Saʿīd b. Jubayr were known both for their reliability in transmissions and for the number of hadīth that they transmitted. Abū al-Aḥwas tended to inundate his listeners with hadīth and his companions rebuked Saʿīd b. Jubayr for relating too many traditions. 188 Sa'id allegedly replied to these critics: "To relate hadith to you and your companions is preferable to me than taking it with me to my grave." Even pro-Shī'ī scholars, like the qāşs, 'Adī b. Thābit, enjoyed good reputations among the Sunnī scholars, especially if they were reputable hadīth transmitters.190

This anecdotal evidence on the reliability of the qussas as  $had\bar{u}th$  transmitters was confirmed statistically. Slightly over two-thirds of them, i.e. 74 of the 108 or 68.5%, were considered trustworthy or reputable  $had\bar{u}th$  transmitters. The remaining one-third fell within the other three categories. Only fifteen of the qussas, or 14%, were generally considered to have been weak transmitters. Among them is the Kufan Nufay' b. al-Ḥārith, about whom the famous  $had\bar{u}th$  compiler Bukhārī said: "[He was] a qassas about whom the  $had\bar{u}th$ -folk

<sup>187</sup> Ibn Abī Ḥātim, Jarḥ, 2:449; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 4:347; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:262–263; Suyūṭī, Ḥuffāz, 1:57. On Anas b. Mālik, see A.J. Wensinck and J. Robson, "Anas b. Mālik," *EI*2, 1:482.

<sup>188</sup> On Abū al-Aḥwaṣ, see Ibn Saʻd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:302. On Saʻd b. Jubayr, see Ibn Saʻd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:377.

<sup>189</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:377.

<sup>190</sup> See the Appendix # 69.

Due to the large number of reliable qussas, I have not listed them here. I have noted them in the Appendix by the addition of a (*) at the beginning of their biographies.

<sup>192</sup> They are: (44) 'Ā'idh Allāh al-Mujāsha'ī, (47) Shaqīq al-Dabbī, (55) Ḥumayd b. 'Aṭā' al-A'raj, (63) Yazīd b. Abān, (64) Ziyād b. 'Abd Allāh, (74) Nufay' (Nāfi') b. al-Ḥārith, (84) Jahm b. Şafwān, (85) 'Abd al-Wāḥid b. Zayd, (86) Maṭar al-Warrāq, (90) al-Faḍl b. 'Isa, (97) Muqātil b. Sulaymān, (103) al-Nahhās b. Qahm, (105) Yūnus b. Khabbāb, (108) Mūsā b. Sayyār and (109) al-Haytham b. Jammāz.

speak disparagingly  $(q\bar{a}ss, yatakallim\bar{u}na\,fihi)$ ." The implication in Bukhārī's assessment is that his weakness in  $had\bar{i}th$  was connected to his involvement in qasas. This negative association between  $had\bar{i}th$  and qasas was stated explicitly in reference to the  $q\bar{a}ss$  'Uthmān b. Abī al-'Ātika who was otherwise numbered among those of mixed reputations in  $had\bar{i}th$ ." Abd al-A'lā b. Mushir (d. 218/833) said of him: "'Uthmān b. Abī al-'Ātika was a  $q\bar{a}ss$  so if there was any error [in  $had\bar{i}th$ ], then it was from him  $(fa-ink\bar{a}nawahmfa-huwaminhu)$ ." Yet involvement in qasas was certainly not the only reason that led to a  $q\bar{a}ss$  rejection as a  $had\bar{i}th$  scholar. The weakness of the Baṣran  $q\bar{a}ss$  Yazīd b. Abān in  $had\bar{i}th$  was attributed not to his qasas, rather to his excessive piety reputedly making him lax in his transmissions.

In total, seven qussas, or 6.5%, including 'Uthmān b. Abī al-'Ātika, enjoyed mixed reputations as transmitters. <sup>197</sup> The most recognized name among this group is Ka'b al-Aḥbār. Mu'āwiya b. Abī Sufyān most aptly expressed the uncertainty that hovered over his reputation in  $had\bar{t}h$  saying, "He is the most trustworthy of the  $had\bar{t}h$  scholars who relate from the people of the Book, even though we used to accuse him of lying." Twelve among the remaining qussas, or 11%, were either relatively unknown personalities or their role in  $had\bar{t}h$  was indeterminable, and, therefore, it was not possible to draw any conclusions as to their trustworthiness in  $had\bar{t}h$ . <sup>199</sup>

These statistics indicate the Islamic community considered an overwhelming majority of the  $quss\bar{a}s$  of the Umayyad period to have been sound  $had\bar{t}h$

<sup>193</sup> Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 8:114; idem, al-Tārīkh al-ṣaghīr, 1:267; 'Uqaylī, Duʻafā' 4:307; Ibn 'Adī, Kāmil, 7:60. It should be noted, though, that since this is Bukhārī's opinion, it is a later assessment (third/ninth century) of the quṣṣāṣ whose reputations, as a whole, had, by then, become increasingly suspect.

<sup>194</sup> For a summation of the positions on his reliability in hadīth, see Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:65.

<sup>195</sup> Uqaylī, Du'afā', 3:221; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 38:394; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:65. Abū Mushir 'Abd al-A'lā b. Mushir was a reputable scholar of Syria who himself exhibited traits of a "storyteller" according to some criteria since he was known to have been an expert on reports of the conquests (maghāzī) and other historical traditions (ayyām al-nās); see Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 2:466–468. On him, see also Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 16:369–379.

<sup>196</sup> Ibn Ḥibbān, Majrūhīn, 3:98.

They are (9) Ka'b al-Aḥbar, (32) ʿImrān b. ʿIṣām, (49) Abū Yaḥyā al-Aʿraj, (81) Darrāj b. Simʿān, (93) Hilāl, Abū Ṭuʿma, (94) Sumayr b. ʿAbd al-Raḥman and (102) ʿUthmān b. Abī al-ʿĀtika.

<sup>198</sup> Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:471.

They are: (4) Sa'd b. Zayd, (13) 'Amr b. Zurāra, (14) al-Aswad b. Sarī', (22) Şukhayr b. Ḥudhayfa, (24) Abū al-Juwayriyya al-ʿAbdī, (29) Sāliḥ b. Musarriḥ, (30) Shabīb b. Yazīd, (45) Ibn Abī ʿUyayna, (52) Ibn Abī al-Sā'ib, (78) ʿAbd Allāh b. Zayd, (92) al-Naḍr b. ʿAmr and (100) al-Qāsim b. Mujāshiʿ.

scholars. These results stand in stark contradiction to the generally held belief among medieval and modern scholars that the qussas were lax and, thus, unreliable in  $had\bar{u}th$  transmission.

Conflicting Sentiments on the Reliability of the Quṣṣāṣ in Ḥadīth

While statistical and some anecdotal evidence reveal that the qussas were reliable  $had\bar{u}th$  transmitters, other reports reveal an underlying suspicion of the qussas with regard to their knowledge of  $had\bar{u}th$ . This suspicion seems to have manifested itself early. We have already encountered two traditions describing the qussas as poor transmitters. The Syrian qass 'Uthmān b. Abī al-'Ātika was implicated as the source of weak  $had\bar{u}th$ s by virtue of the fact that he was a qass. The above report on Sha'bī's beating at the hands of the followers of a qass in Palmyra also indicates that some qussas were involved in fabrications prior to the turn of the century.

Other quṣṣāṣ, however, proved more than capable in their transmissions. When Abū Idrīs al-Khawlānī, who died in 80/700, was challenged on his knowledge of the isnād, he responded with acrimony for having his reliability questioned; he retorted to his inquisitor: "I know isnāds better than I know hadīth; get up and don't sit with me!"<sup>200</sup> Indeed, the question surrounding the quṣṣāṣ's reliability in hadīth transmission was addressed directly in a tradition about the qāṣṣ Thābit al-Bunānī. Ḥammād b. Salama (d. 167/783), the distinguished Successor of Baṣra and student of Thābit, set out to test the popular theory of his day that the quṣṣāṣ were poor hadīth scholars by intentionally mixing up the isnāds of hadīth in Thābit's presence in order to see if his teacher could catch the mistakes.<sup>201</sup> Thābit's reputation, along with that of the quṣṣāṣ by extension, was ostensibly vindicated as he put each of them aright.<sup>202</sup> Thābit was praised for his knowledge of hadīth and it was even said of him that any bad things in his hadīth were not of his doing, rather, originating from those who transmitted from him, many of whom were weak and unknown.<sup>203</sup>

While the report of Ḥammād's experiment seems to redeem the reputation of an early  $q\bar{a}ss$ , it simultaneously confirms that by at least the end of the first quarter of the second/eighth century, the time of Thābit's death, the qussas developed a reputation as poor  $had\bar{t}th$  transmitters because of their laxity in isnas ds. It was for this reason, after all, that Ḥammād conducted his experiment.

<sup>200</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 26:164.

<sup>201</sup> On Ḥammād, see Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:481-483.

<sup>202</sup> Ibn Abī Ḥātim, Jarḥ, 2:449; Ibn 'Adī, Kāmil, 2:100; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 4:347; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:262.

<sup>203</sup> Ibn 'Adī, Kāmil, 2:100.

While some reports directly censure certain qussas as poor transmitters prior to the turn of the first/seventh century, such as those on Abū Idrīs al-Khawlānī and al-Shaʻbī, the report about Ḥammād's experiment hints at a general skepticism towards the qussas at Thābit's time.

In fact, another tradition implicates a Baṣran contemporary of Thābit and Ḥammād, the reputable scholar Qatāda b. Diʿāma, as also having been lax in using  $isn\bar{a}ds$ . He allegedly did not attach full  $isn\bar{a}ds$  to his  $had\bar{i}th$  until he was inspired to do so by Ḥammād b. Abī Sulaymān (d. 120/738), the teacher of the illustrious Abū Ḥanīfa (d. 150/767), when the former came to Baṣra reciting  $had\bar{i}th$  with  $isn\bar{a}ds$ . These reports on the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}s$  in Baṣra suggest that  $isn\bar{a}d$  transmission was not strongly emphasized there around the turn of the first/seventh century. If this was true in Baṣra, what does it indicate about the Syrian transmitters whom Makḥūl al-Shāmī (d. 112-7/730-5), a contemporary of these renowned scholars of Irāq, claimed were even less strict in their use of the  $isn\bar{a}d$  than the Iraqis? It must not be overlooked, though, that these traditions, while they raise the issue of lack of interest in  $isn\bar{a}ds$  in Baṣra, also confirm that these  $quṣṣ\bar{a}s/muhaddith\bar{u}n$  of Baṣra actually produced  $isn\bar{a}ds$  when required, as in the case of Thābit. The obvious intent of the report of Ḥammād's experiment is to suggest that the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}s$  were not as bad as they seemed.

Exactly how and when the qussassilesis developed a general reputation as poor  $had\bar{u}th$  transmitters is difficult to ascertain, especially in light of both the statistical and anecdotal evidence for their trustworthiness in the early period. Heretofore, it has been suggested that those who engaged in transmitting  $had\bar{u}th$  on pious behavior, moral admonitions, the coming judgment, etc.— essentially those topics that were commonly associated with the qussassilesis—did not need to meet the same rigid transmission standards, particularly in terms of the isnastilesis, expected of those who related traditions on issues of legal import. This supposition, however, accommodates neither the textual evidence reviewed above, indicating that the qussassilesis transmitted traditions of fiqh as well those of piety, nor the number of qussassilesis considered to be fuqahassilesis, as will be seen below, nor, finally, the quite large number of early qussassilesis who were considered reputable hadaste scholars. While the community may have accepted laxity in transmissions of traditions of piety and morality, it cannot be deduced as the reason for the poor reputation of the  $quss\bar{a}s$  as  $had\bar{t}th$  scholars, at least prior to 132/750.

<sup>204</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:230. I have not been able to determine when this incident occurred. On Ḥammād b. Abī Sulaymān, see Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 7:269–279; Dhahabī, Siyar, 5:231–239. On his relation to Abū Ḥanīfa, see Dhahabī, Siyar, 5:236 and EI2, s.v. "Abū Ḥanīfa al-Nu'mān."

<sup>205</sup> See Abbott, Studies II, 75, citing Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 1:362.

<sup>206</sup> Goldziher, Muslim Studies II, 145–147; Abbott, Studies II, 76.

Unidentified Qușșāș

It may be the case that the reputation of the qussas was sullied by a growing number of unnamed qussas and that, to a large degree, only the more reputable qussas are identified in the sources. Son Shub b. al-Ḥajjāj (d. 160/776), for example, declined to relate hadath to a young, unnamed qass because he charged that the qussas "receive traditions from us the span of a hand and stretch them into a cubit. This tradition adds to the previous criticism of the Basran qussas who were lax in providing an isnas for their traditions the accusation that they also tamper with the matn, the text of the tradition. It purports to make a general criticism of the qussas for whom the unidentified qass stands as representative. However, Shub was not entirely opposed to the qussas for he himself transmitted from some of their number, in particular Thabit al-Bunani, 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. al-Qasim, 'Adī b. Thabit, Qatāda and Muḥammad b. Qays. This tradition, therefore, indicated an evolution in the criticism of the qussas, suggesting that slackness was a characteristic of a growing number of unidentified qussas.

In addition, Abū Ṭālib al-Makkī, a  $s\bar{u}f\bar{\iota}$  and opponent of the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ , reported that Sulaymān b. Mihrān al-A'mash (d. 148/765) overheard an unidentified  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  claiming to have received  $had\bar{\iota}th$  from him. Al-A'mash stormed into his circle and began to pull the hair from his armpits causing the  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  to exclaim: "Old man, have you no shame? We are involved in religious knowledge ('ilm) and you do this?" Al-A'mash retorted, "What I am doing is better than what you are doing. . . . I am following the sunna and you are lying. I am al-A'mash and I did not relate to you anything that you said!" When the people heard this, they left the  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$ , gathered around al-A'mash and asked him to relate  $had\bar{\iota}th$  to them.  $^{210}$  In this instance, the  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  is depicted as deceiving his audience both in <sup>207</sup> Malak Abyaḍ noted this tendency in Ibn 'Asākir. She claimed that he gave biographies of only those quṣṣāṣ who were 'ulamā' because the community did not respect those who fabricated reports, and therefore those quṣṣāṣ who did so were only mentioned indirectly and critically within other biographies; see her Tarbiya, 313.

<sup>208</sup> Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 101–2 (translation taken from Swartz, 181). On Shuʿba, see G.H.A. Juynboll, "Shuʿba b. al-Ḥadjdjāj," EI2, 11:491–492. Juynboll notes that Shuʿba stands as the primary source of the tradition on lying about the Prophet—the tradition to which Suyūṭī devoted his first chapter in his work of criticism of the quṣṣāṣ, see his Taḥdhūr, 8–66.

<sup>209</sup> Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 12:480-484.

<sup>210</sup> Makkī, Qūt, 2:207.

his <code>hadīth</code> transmission and in his claim to be involved in religious education ('ilm). Just as in the case of Shu'ba, al-A'mash was not entirely antagonistic to the <code>quṣṣāṣ</code> for he also learned <code>hadīth</code> from many of them, including Ibrāhīm al-Taymī, Dharr b. 'Abd Allāh, Sa'īd b. Jubayr, 'Adī b. Thābit, Mujāhid b. Jabr and Yazīd b. Abān al-Raqāshī, who, it is to be recalled, was considered a weak transmitter.'

The Qussas as Hadīth Transmitters

While the sources do preserve reports about the weaknesses of the qussās in hadīth transmission, their association with hadīth fabrication seems to be no more prevalent than what is found among other scholars. If weakness in transmission was endemic among the ranks of the qussās then we expect to find their names littered throughout the du'afā' literature. This is not the case, however. In fact, as our statistical analysis suggests, the majority of quṣṣāṣ of the Umayyad period were considered by the community to be trustworthy and reputable hadīth scholars. On the other hand, it appears that by the turn of the first/seventh century the qussās were developing reputations as poor ḥadīth scholars. This reputation seems to have characterized primarily unnamed quṣṣāṣ. Eventually, however, the title qāṣṣ became equated with a poor hadīth scholar. Hitherto, this image of the qussās prevailed in studies of them, and when reputable hadīth scholars were found among them, they were considered the exception, not the rule. This image is to be refined, hereafter, in light of the high percentage of reputable hadīth scholars among the quṣṣāṣ of the Umayyad period.

Jurists (Fuqahā')

The Islamic sources identify eighteen qussas, or 16.7%, as being particularly adept in law,  $fiqh.^{212}$  Four of the earliest of these luminaries were also numbered among the qurra, the commentators and the  $had\bar{t}th$  transmitters:

<sup>211</sup> Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 12:77–80. On Yazīd as a transmitter, see above, 116 and the Appendix # 63.

They are: (6) Muʻādh b. Jabal, (10) Abū al-Dardā', (11) Ibn Masʻūd, (18) Zayd b. Thābit, (19) Abū Hurayra, (21) Rabī'a b ʻAmr, (27) Abū ʻAbd al-Raḥmān al-Sulamī, (29) Ṣāliḥ b. Musarriḥ, (40) Saʻd b. Jubayr, (58) Mujāhid b. Jabr, (59) ʿAṭā' b. Yasār, (62) Bakr b. ʿAbd Allāh, (65) ʿAwn b. ʿAbd Allāh, (66) al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, (68) Rajā' b. Ḥaywa, (71) Qatāda b. Diʻāma, (72) Muḥammad b. Kaʻb and (91) ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. Yazīd. For others who have noted the overlap between <code>qaṣaṣ</code> and <code>fiqh</code>, see Pedersen, "Criticism," 218; ʿAthamina, "Qaṣaṣ," 63.

Muʻādh b. Jabal, Abū al-Dardā', Ibn Masʻūd and Zayd b. Thābit. Zayd b. Thābit, along with a fifth distinguished Companion of the Prophet, Abū Hurayra, gave legal rulings as part of their qaṣaṣ, as was discussed in Chapter One. Muʻādh b. Jabal and Abū al-Dardā', were identified by the ḥadīth scholar and compiler al-Nasā'ī as the fuqahā' of Syria. Likewise, Ibn Masʻūd was considered the faqīh of Kūfa. Since these eminent scholars were major sources of religious knowledge for the community, it comes as little surprise that they were also considered fuqahā'.

The association of the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}s$  with fiqh continued throughout the Umayyad period. Abū Idrīs al-Khawlānī of Syria, himself a  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$ , stressed the importance that the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}s$  know fiqh by stating that he preferred to see the mosque in flames than a man giving qaṣaṣ who was not a  $faq\bar{\iota}h.^{215}$  While Abū Idrīs's wish was not fulfilled by each and every  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  of the Umayyad period, a number of  $quṣṣ\bar{a}s$  were distinguished for their acumen in fiqh. Rabī'a b. Amr was "the  $faq\bar{\iota}h$  of the people in the time of Muʻāwiya." Acontemporary of his, Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Sulamī, learned fiqh from 'Alī b. Abī Ṭālib, and his colleague the  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ/q\bar{a}r\bar{\iota}$ ' Abū al-Aḥwaṣ reportedly said of him: "Learn [lit. take] from him for he is a  $faq\bar{\iota}h.$ " The similarity between these two scholars is noteworthy. Each of them were Qurʾān reciters, pro-'Alids and  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  in Kūfa. These similarities seem to have generated a mutual respect, for Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Sulamī returned Abū al-Aḥwaṣ' complement by stating: "Don't sit with the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  except Abū al-Ahwas."

The city of Kufa later boasted the  $q\bar{a}ss/q\bar{a}r\bar{t}$  'Awn b. 'Abd Allāh, brother of one of the renowned  $fuqah\bar{a}$ ' of Medina 'Ubayd Allāh b. 'Abd Allāh, as its  $faq\bar{\iota}h.^{219}$  In Basra, two of its more famous scholars, al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī and Bakr b. 'Abd Allāh, were both named among the  $quss\bar{a}s$  and the  $fuqah\bar{a}'.^{220}$  Meanwhile, Syria was honored with the influential scholar and political leader Rajā' b.

<sup>213</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 47:124.

<sup>214</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 33:53.

<sup>215</sup> Abū Nu'aym, Ḥilya, 5:142; Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 131. See also 'Athamina, "Qaṣaṣ," 63.

<sup>216</sup> Ibn 'Abd al-Barr, al-Isti'āb fī ma'rifat al-aṣḥāb, ed. 'Alī Muḥammad al-Bajjāwī (Cairo, 1960), 2:493; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:600.

<sup>217</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:293; Balādhurī, Ansāb, ed. al-Ya'lāwī, 7/2:232.

<sup>218</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:292-293.

<sup>219</sup> Dhahabī, Siyar, 5:103. On the seven legists of Medina, see C. Pellat, "Fukahā' al-Madīna al-Sab'a," El2, 12:310-312.

On al-Ḥasan, see Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:389, 391. On Bakr, see Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:208. Ibn Sa'd recorded a report that connects the two men with the intent of honoring Bakr which states, "al-Ḥasan is the shaykh of Baṣra and Bakr is its young man;" see his*Ṭabaqāt*, 9:208.

Ḥaywa as one of its legists. His convictions about the importance of fiqh can be summarized in a  $had\bar{\iota}th$  transmitted by him, whereby the Prophet said: "A small amount of fiqh is better than much worship ( $qal\bar{\iota}tl$  al-fiqh  $blayr^{un}$   $blayr^{un}$  b

Yet not all reports about the qussas's knowledge of fiqh were positive. Ibn al-Jawzī recorded a Prophetic tradition transmitted by the qass/faqah Ibn Mas'ūd with the Prophet himself allegedly distinguishing between the sessions of qasas and the sessions of fiqh, telling his listeners: "When you pass by the gardens of paradise graze [on them]! I do not mean by this the circles of the qussas but, rather, the circles of fiqh."<sup>223</sup> This report, however, is problematic and since it proposes that the Prophet advocated fiqh sessions to qasas sessions, it is worthy of further consideration. A number of variants of the report reveal that its transmission history was complicated. Ibn al-Jawzī, for example, was aware of another variant of the tradition with "the gardens of paradise" simply identified as "sessions of dhikr (majalis al-dhikr)" without any reference to the qussas, yet he chose to record for his work on the qussas a variant setting them at odds with the fuqahas, even though his intention, as noted by Swartz, was not necessarily to disparage the qussas.<sup>224</sup>

The first recorded citation that I have located of the variant specifically noting that the sessions were fiqh, not qaṣaṣ, sessions is in al-Khaṭīb al-Baghdādī's (d. 463/1071) al-Faqīh wa-l-mutafaqqih, transmitted there on the authority of both Ibn Mas'ūd and 'Abd Allāh b. 'Amr b. al-'Āṣ. <sup>225</sup> Other variants, many of which are recorded in earlier compilations, do not mention the quṣṣāṣ and yet are still important in the analysis of the tradition. For example, a variant identifying the sessions as "sessions of dhikr (majālis, or more often, halaq al-dhikr)" was traced back to Anas b. Mālik through one of two quṣṣāṣ, either Thābit al-Bunānī or Ziyād al-Numayrī. <sup>226</sup> The presence of quṣṣāṣ in both variants at the level of transmitter from Anas implies that the quṣṣāṣ faithfully transmit-

<sup>221</sup> Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 1:381.

<sup>222</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 18:104. On Rajā' as a faqīh, see Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 4:237.

<sup>223</sup> Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 129 (translation taken from Swartz, 212).

He noted that Anas b. Mālik transmitted a Prophetic tradition in which the "gardens" are "majālis al-dhikr." See Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Tabṣira fī-l-wa'z, ed. Muṣṭafā 'Abd al-Wāḥid (Cairo, 1970). 2:305.

<sup>225</sup> Al-Khaṭīb al-Baghdādī, al-Faqīh wa-l-mutafaqqih, ed. Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān 'Ādil b. Yūsuf al-'Azzāzī (Riyadh, 1996), 1:95–96.

<sup>226</sup> For the variant from Thābit, see Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 19:498; Tirmidhī, Sunan, 5:532; Abū Ya'lā, Musnad, 6:155; Ibn 'Adī, Kāmil, 6:136; al-Bayhaqī, Shu'ab al-īmān, ed. Muḥammad

ted the tradition and did not gloss dhikr with qaṣaṣ. Furthermore, a variant from Abū Hurayra identified the "gardens" as "places of prayer (masājid)" while another, traced to Ibn 'Abbās through the qāṣṣ Mujāhid b. Jabr, claimed that they were "sessions of religious knowledge (majālis al-ʻilm)."<sup>227</sup> The complexity of the transmission history of this tradition, as well as the many variants failing to connect the statement to the quṣṣāṣ, calls into question its reliability as a source for the proposed differentiation between fiqh and qaṣaṣ. It also indicates how later scholars, in this case Ibn al-Jawzī, readily utilized variants of a tradition for their own ends.

Other reports suggesting that qaṣaṣ and fiqh were incompatible exhibit similar problems. When 'Āṭā' b. Yasār (d. 103/721) ruled that a Bedouin man who had not yet consummated his marriage must divorce his wife with one, as opposed to three, declarations of divorce (innamā talāq al-bikr wāhida), 'Abd Allāh b. 'Amr b. al-'Āṣ (d.c. 65/685) reprimanded him saying: "You are merely a  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ!$ "<sup>228</sup> This reprimand clearly suggests that 'Āṭā''s ruling was incorrect because he was a  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  who, presumably, possessed no legal training. However, as was the case in the report about the qaṣaṣ sessions discussed above, other factors suggest that this assessment may not be entirely accurate.

First, 'Aṭā' hailed from a family of jurists and he himself enjoyed a reputation as a reputable scholar. On its surface then, this rebuke may not necessarily be intended as a denigration of his character as much as an example of an antagonistic tendentiousness towards the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ . As a result, this report suggests that already by the middle of the first century, since 'Abd Allāh died around 65/685, the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ , in general, developed a negative reputation because when 'Abd Allāh sought to criticize the otherwise reputable 'Aṭā', he exploited his affiliation with qaṣaṣ as his Achilles's heel.

Furthermore, variants of the report state that 'Abd Allāh did not rebuke 'Aṭā' for being a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$ , rather, for being a judge: "You are merely a  $q\bar{a}d\bar{\iota}$ , and not a  $muft\bar{\iota}$ !"<sup>230</sup> This variant, however, is equally puzzling since distinctions al-Sa'd Basyūnī Zaghlūl (Beirut, 1990), 1:398. For the variant from Ziyād, see Ṭabarānī, Du'ā', 528; Abū Nu'aym, Ḥilya, 6:291; al-Khaṭīb al-Baghdādī, Faqīh, 1:93–94.

<sup>227</sup> For the variant from Abū Hurayra, see Tirmidhī, Sunan, 5:532. For the variant from Ibn 'Abbās, see Ṭabarānī, al-Mu'jam al-kabīr, 11:95.

<sup>228</sup> Mālik, Muwaṭṭa', ed. al-A'zamī, 4:821. On 'Abd Allāh b. 'Amr, see Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 15:357–363.

On the other members of 'Aṭā' 's family who were respected as  $fuqah\bar{a}$ ', see Ibn Qutayba,  $Ma'\bar{a}rif$ , 459.

<sup>230</sup> Mālik, Muwaṭṭa', ed. 'Abd al-Majīd Turkī (Beirut, 1994), 282; Fasawī, Ma'rifa, 1:549–550; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 40:448. 'Abd al-Majīd Turkī noted that some manuscripts read qāṣṣ while others read qāḍī or were unclear. He opted for qāḍī in his edition. Muḥammad Muṣṭafā al-A'zamī, another editor of Malik's Muwaṭṭa', read the word as qāṣṣ; see Mālik, in expertise between a  $q\bar{a}d\bar{\iota}$  and a  $muft\bar{\iota}$  seem to be minimal, and, therefore, the censure seems incongruous. It seems that censuring 'Aṭā' as a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  appears to have been more justified than censuring him as a judge except for the fact that the association of some  $qu\bar{s}s\bar{a}s$  of the early period with judging  $(qad\bar{a}')$  indicates that even these two disciplines/professions may be more similar to each other than initially expected. Unfortunately, the sources themselves are unclear about whether 'Aṭā' was a judge, a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}s$  or both—not withstanding the orthographic similarity between the words  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}s$  or both—ont withstanding the orthographic similarity between the words  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}s$  or both—in and  $qad\bar{\iota}s$  (قاض) in Arabic, their being almost identical if they were undotted.

In spite of a number of qussas who were also reputable legal scholars, reports distinguishing the two from each other persisted. Ibn al-Jawzī relates a report from the Basran legal scholar 'Abd Allāh b. 'Awn (d. 150/767) that in his city qasas surpassed fiqh in its popularity among the people.<sup>235</sup> He allegedly bemoaned that upon entering the mosque of Basra: "I found in it only one study circle devoted to fiqh; it was associated with Muslim b. Yasār. The Muwatta (Abu Dhabi, 2004), 4:821. Fasawī recorded a report from Sa'd b. al-Musayyab, one of the renowned  $fuqah\bar{a}$  of Medina, that Sulaymān b. Yasār, the brother of 'Aṭā', was a  $muft\bar{\imath}$  and that 'Aṭā' was only a judge.

<sup>231</sup> For a discussion of the relationship between the qussas and the qudat, see below, 126–131.

<sup>232</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 40:447-448.

<sup>233</sup> Ibn 'Abd al-Ḥakam, Futūḥ Miṣr, ed. C.C. Torrey (New Haven, 1922), 235; Wakīʻ, Akhbār al-quḍāt, ed. 'Abd al-'Azīz Muṣṭafā al-Marāghī (Cairo, 1947–1950), 3:224; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 72:278; Jūda, "Qaṣaṣ," 117.

<sup>234</sup> On Abū Yaḥyā al-A'raj, see the Appendix # 49. On Darrāj b. Sim'ān, see the Appendix # 81.

<sup>235</sup> On him, see Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 2:398-399.

rest of the mosque was taken over by quṣṣāṣ."236 Since Muslim b. Yasār died in 100/718 and Ibn 'Awn was born in 66/685, this report suggests that in Basra in the last quarter of the first/seventh century, the number of quṣṣāṣ proliferated noticeably. However, as in the case of reports discussed above, the distinction between fiqh and qaṣaṣ, here is so clearly alleged, does not seem to be as conspicuous as the report suggests, especially considering that both Muslim b. Yasār and Ibn 'Awn maintained close scholarly ties to the quṣṣāṣ. The report does indicate, nevertheless, that the designation "quṣṣāṣ" was ascribed in a tendentious manner to circles deemed disreputable. 237

Somewhat surprisingly, the only identified  $q\bar{a}ss$  who engaged in fiqh and who was generally derogated as a scholar was the Khārijī rebel Ṣāliḥ b. Musarriḥ. Tabarī noted that he gathered his followers to himself in his home region of Mosul in the province of the Jazīra and instructed them in Qur'ān recitation, taught them the requirements of the faith and delivered to them qasas ( $yuqri'uhum\ al-Qur'ān\ wa-yufaqqihuhum\ wa-yaqussu\ 'alayhim). This report claims then that Ṣāliḥ was a religious educator (<math>faqīh$ ) as well as an opposition leader and that his qisas, though they were used politically, were just one component of the propagation of his religious ideology. However, since he was a Khārijī, his reputation among future generations was not stellar even though

<sup>236</sup> Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 17 (translation taken from Swartz, 103).

Muslim b. Yasār taught <code>hadīth</code> to two famous and reputable Basran <code>quṣṣāṣ</code> Qatāda and Thābit al-Bunānī; see Mizzī, <code>Tahdhīb</code>, <code>27:552</code>. Ibn 'Awn learned <code>hadīth</code> from a number of <code>quṣṣāṣ</code>, including Rajā' b. Ḥaywa, Mujāhid b. Jabr, Sa'd b. Jubayr and al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, who became the <code>muftī</code> of Basra after Muslim b. Yasār; see Ibn Ḥajar, <code>Tahdhīb</code>, <code>2:398</code>, <code>4:74</code>. Moreover, Goldziher extrapolated from this tradition that the growth of <code>qaṣaṣ</code> circles led to the persecution of the street preacher; see his <code>Muslim Studies II</code>, <code>154-155</code>. This position cannot be supported by the report. In fact, while the report hints at Ibn 'Awn's despair at the trend in the proliferation of the number of <code>quṣṣāṣ</code>, Ibn al-Jawzī's choice to include it in a section on the "Commendable Character of <code>Qaṣaṣ</code> and <code>Wa'z</code>," and specifically between a report in which the great Medinan legal scholar Sa'd b. Musayyib (d. <code>91/709</code>) says of the <code>quṣṣāṣ</code> that they are people of prayer and a report from al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī which describes <code>qaṣaṣ</code> as a praiseworthy innovation, suggests that the report should not necessarily be interpreted negatively; see his <code>Quṣṣāṣ</code>, <code>17</code>.

Tabarī, Tārīkh, 2:881. Rowson translated yufaqqihuhum as he "taught...its [the Qur'ān's] interpretation;" see his Marwānid, 22:33. This is certainly a valid translation although I have opted to preserve the more technical sense of the term. Dhahabī gives a slightly modified version of Ṭabarī omitting Ṭabarī's reference to Ṣāliḥ's recitation of the Qur'ān. In this instance, the phrase yufaqqihuhum is best interpreted according to its technical sense for it has no antecedent specifically connecting it to Qur'ānic interpretation. See Dhahabī, Siyar, 4:148.

he was respected for his humility ( $k\bar{a}na\ l\bar{a}\ yarfa'u\ ra'sahu\ khush\bar{u}'\bar{a}^n$ ).<sup>239</sup> He is, albeit, the only example thus far of an identifiable  $q\bar{a}ss$  who engaged in fiqh yet was not regarded as a reputable scholar.

Judges (Qudāt)

<sup>239</sup> Balādhurī, Ansāb, ed. al-'Azm, 6:572.

<sup>240</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabagāt, 8:376.

<sup>241</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:28; Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 5:419; Ibn Manjuwayh, Rijāl Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim, ed. 'Abd Allāh al-Laythī (Beirut, 1987), 2:243.

<sup>242</sup> Jāḥiz, Bayān, 1:243.

<sup>243</sup> Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 5:351; Ibn Manjuwayh, Rijāl Muslim, 2:204.

At times, these discrepancies prompted me to omit scholars from my list of qussas, as was the case of Sulayman b. Ḥabīb (d. 126/743) who was known throughout the sources as the judge of the caliph Hisham b. 'Abd al-Malik but was identified only in Ibn Ḥibbān's Mashahr as a  $qass.^{247}$  At other times, a scholar generally known to be a qass was identified in a single source as a judge, as in the case of 'Uqba b. Muslim whom Ibn Abī Ḥatim identified as a judge or in that of al-Faḍl al-Raqāshī whom Ibn Qutayba identified as a judge. <sup>248</sup> In these cases, the scholars were listed among the qussas, not the judges.

The sources identify fourteen quṣṣāṣ of the Umayyad period as also having held the position of judge.<sup>249</sup> Among the most illustrious of this group of judges were Muʿādh b. Jabal, Abū al-Dardāʾ, Ibn Masʿūd and Zayd b. Thābit. Muʿādh was appointed by the Prophet to be judge in Yemen.<sup>250</sup> In Damascus, Abū al-Dardāʾ was appointed judge though by whom is uncertain.<sup>251</sup> Ibn

<sup>244</sup> Juynboll, Canonical, 45.

Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 47:93. Umar b. Gharāma al-'Amrawī, the editor of Ibn 'Asākir's  $T\bar{a}r\bar{i}kh \, mad\bar{i}nat \, Dimashq$ , noted that the manuscript read  $q\bar{a}d\!\!/$ i at the reference to  $q\bar{a}ss$ . He opted to emend the edition to read  $q\bar{a}ss$ .

<sup>246</sup> Juynboll, Canonical, 45. On Salama b. Dīnār, see the Appendix #87.

On him as a judge, see Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 2:1265, 1338; Wakī', Quḍāt, 3:210–212; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 2:87; Dhahabī, Siyar, 5:309. On him as a qāṣṣ, see Ibn Ḥibbān, Mashāhīr 'ulamā' al-amṣār (Beirut, 1959), 116.

<sup>248</sup> On 'Uqba, see Ibn Abī Ḥātim, Jarḥ, 6:316. On al-Faḍl, see Ibn Qutayba, Maʿārif, 475.

<sup>249</sup> They are: (6) Muʿādh b. Jabal, (10) Abū al-Dardāʾ, (11) ʿAbd Allāh b. Masʿūd, (18) Zayd b. Thābit, (19) Abū Hurayra, (28) Sulaym b. ʿItr, (31) Abū Idrīs al-Khawlānī, (35) ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. Ḥujayra, (39) Zurāra b. Awfā, (54) Marthad b. Wadāʿ, (61) Muslim b. Jundab, (67) Wahb b. Munabbih, (77) Tawba b. Namir, (89) Khayr b. Nuʿaym.

He allegedly told the Prophet that the standards for his judgments would be the Qur'ān, the practice of the Prophet (sunna), and, lastly, his own opinion; see Ibn 'Abd al-Barr, Istī'āb, 3:1404. See also Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 2:300.

<sup>251</sup> Some say that he was appointed by 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb, others by Muʿāwiya, and others that Muʿāwiya appointed him upon the command of 'Umar. For a summation of the Mas'ūd was the judge in Kufa and also supervisor of the treasury during the reign of 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb.<sup>252</sup> Zayd b. Thābit was also appointed by 'Umar and was remunerated for his work as a judge.<sup>253</sup>

Judging, though, appears to have been a burdensome affair. As a result, some reports show the disappointment certain qussas felt when appointed to judgeships. When the people congratulated Abū al-Dardā' on his appointment to judge, he replied: If the people knew what being a judge entailed they would detest it and loathe it. If they knew what was involved in calling people to prayer they would desire it and covet it."

Similar concerns over judging occupied Sulaym b. 'Itr, the  $q\bar{a}ss/q\bar{a}d\bar{\iota}$  of Egypt. He held the position of  $q\bar{a}ss$  for one year, from 39–40/659–60, until Muʻāwiya appointed him judge in 40/660.<sup>256</sup> Although he was generally considered a reputable scholar, his role as judge brought criticism on him, especially from 'Abd Allāh b. 'Amr b. al-'Āṣ. 'Abd Allāh expressed the general impression of the qussas and the judges when he told Sulaym b. 'Itr: "As for you Sulaym, when you were a  $q\bar{a}ss$ , you had two angels aiding you and reminding you; then you became a judge and you had two devils turning you away from the truth and positions, see Ibn 'Abd al-Barr, Istīʿāb, 3:1229–1230; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:341. See also Abū Zur'a al-Dimashqī, Tārīkh, 198.

<sup>252</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 33:63-64.

<sup>253</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 5:309; Wakī', Quḍāt, 1:108.

Ibn 'Umar refused being appointed judge by the caliph 'Uthmān. He told the caliph that there were three types of judges: "A man who judges in ignorance and ends up in hell-fire, a man who judges unjustly and the wind drags him to hell-fire (māla bihi al-hawā' fa-huwa fī-l-nār) and a man who works hard and judges correctly though he receives no benefit for it—no recompense for him nor blame against him." When 'Uthmān reminded him that his father had acted as judge, Ibn 'Umar retorted that his father had the Prophet to fall back on and the Prophet could ask Gabriel, while he had neither; see Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 4::36–137. For other variants of this tradition, see 'Abd al-Razzāq, Muṣannaf, 11:328; Ibn al-Ja'd, Muṣnad, ed. 'Āmir Aḥmad Ḥaydar (Beirut, 1990), 155; Ibn Abī Shayba, Muṣannaf, 4:540; 'Abd b. Ḥumayd, Muṣnad, 46.

Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 47:140. The responsibility of judging, as opposed to the one who calls people to prayer, was a burden that weighed so heavily on Abū al-Dardā' that, when he would give a judgment, he would ask the two parties to return to him and tell him their case once again. This prompted an observer, identified as a certain Ibn Mayrūd (Ibn Mas'ūd?), to exclaim: "Your judge is a quack (qaḍā'kumā mutaṭabbib)." See Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 47:141.

<sup>256</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 72:272–274. See also Ibn 'Abd al-Ḥakam, Mişr, 231; Wakī', Quḍāt, 3:221–222; Dhahabī, Siyar, 4:132; idem, Tārīkh, 5:409.

seducing you."<sup>257</sup> Sulaym himself appears to have preferred to be rid of the responsibility of the judgeship. One day he passed by the infamous Umayyad general and governor al-Ḥajjāj b. Yūsuf and his father. Yūsuf informed Sulaym that he planned to journey to the caliph, asking to convey any need that Sulaym may have. Sulaym said:

"Yes, my need is that you ask him to remove me from the position of judge." And Yūsuf said, "By God, I wish that all judges were like you, so how can I ask this?" Then [Yūsuf] went away and sat down. Al-Ḥajjāj, his son, said to him, "O father, who is this that you stood up for?" He said, "My son, this is Sulaym the judge of the people of Egypt and their  $q\bar{a}ss$ ." And he said, "God forgive you, father! You, Yūsuf b. Abū 'Aqīl, stand up for a man from Kinda or Tujīb?" And he [Yūsuf] said, "These are the kinds of people by whom the people ( $al-n\bar{a}s$ ) receive mercy." And he [al-Ḥajjāj] said, "The people are not corrupted towards the  $am\bar{i}r$   $al-mu'min\bar{i}n$  except by the influence of these people. They sit and young people sit with them; they call to remembrance the lives of Abū Bakr and 'Umar and they rise against the  $am\bar{i}r$   $al-mu'min\bar{i}n$ . By God if it were possible I would ask the  $am\bar{i}r$   $al-mu'min\bar{i}n$  to allow me to kill this and his likes." And Yūsuf said, "By God, O son, I think that God created you wretched." 258

According to the report, Sulaym sought to be removed from judging, although the reason why is not stated. Since Yūsuf assigns to him only two positions,  $q\bar{a}ssigns$  and judge, it is implied that Sulaym preferred to return to his position as  $q\bar{a}ssigns$ . By stating that he was representative of those who "sit and young people sit with them; they call to remembrance ( $yudhakkir\bar{u}n$ ) the lives of Abū Bakr and 'Umar and they rise against the  $am\bar{v}r$  al-mu' $min\bar{v}$ ," al-mu- $min\bar{v}$  al-mu-min al-mu-min al-mu-min an an-mu-min an-mu-min an-mu-min an-mu-min an-mu-min an-mu-min an-mu-min an-mu-min an-mu-min an-min an-min-min an-mi

<sup>257</sup> Ibn 'Abd al-Ḥakam, Miṣr, 235; Wakī', Quḍāt, 3:224; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 72:278; Jūda, "Qaṣaṣ," 119. See also above, 153.

<sup>258</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 72:273.

Jūda suggested that scholars preferred qaṣaṣ over judging because the former did not carry as much political baggage; see his "Qaṣaṣ," 118. This tradition, however, suggests that qaṣaṣ could be just as politically dangerous as judging.

Sulaym's request to be removed from the position of judge is echoed by other qussās/judges of the Umayyad period. Abū Idrīs al-Khawlānī (d. 80/700) was judge in Syria during the caliphate of 'Abd al-Malik.<sup>260</sup> When 'Abd al-Malik removed him from qasas and appointed him judge, he reportedly replied: "You have removed me from my flock (ra'īyyatī) and left me in that which I dread."261 However, once he was in the position of judge he argued that he be retained unless he was found to have been spreading lies.<sup>262</sup> In Egypt, 'Abd al-Rahmān b. Hujayra (d. 83/702) received 200 dīnārs per year for both gasas and judging. <sup>263</sup> His father, though, did not view the two positions as equanimous; when he learned that Ibn Hujayra had been appointed gāss he was pleased and said: "Praise God, my son has remembered [God] and has caused others to remember [God] (al-hamdu li-llāh dhakara ibnī wa-dhakkara)!" However, when he was appointed judge, his father said: "We belong to God! My son has perished and has caused others to perish (innā li-llāh halaka ibnī wa-ahlaka)!"<sup>264</sup> This exclamation is particularly informative since the statement used here to bemoan the appointment to the judiciary was used in another report to condemn

<sup>260</sup> Fasawī, Ma'rifa, 2:320; Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 5:277; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 26:137, 151, 152, 160, 166; Suyūtī, Huffāz, 1:26.

<sup>261</sup> Abū Zur'a al-Dimashqī, Tārīkh, 200; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 26:166.

<sup>262</sup> Ibid.

<sup>263</sup> Al-Kindī, Kitāb al-quḍāt alladhīna walū qaḍa' Miṣr, ed. Richard J.H. Gottheil (Paris, 1908), 15; Ibn 'Abd al-Ḥakam, Miṣr, 235; Wakī', Quḍāt, 3:229, 325; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 2:501. Ibn Ḥujayra reportedly also received 200 *dīnār*s annually as a treasurer ('alā bayt al-māl), as a stipend ('aṭā'uhu) and as an award (jā'izatuhu). Wadād al-Qāḍī showed that his payment as a judge, which equates to 16.6 *dīnār*s per month, is reasonable even though it is slightly higher than the payment of other judges of his time. However, she also noted that the even figures of 200 *dīnār*s for each category "make one a little uneasy." See her "The Salaries of Judges in Early Islam: The Evidence of the Documentary and Literary Sources," JNES 68:1 (2009), 22, 28.

Ibn 'Abd al-Ḥakam, Miṣr, 239; Wakī', Quḍāt, 3:229. Ibn 'Abd al-Ḥakam notes that the precise identity of the speaker is uncertain since there are two men known as Ibn Ḥujayra: Ibn Ḥujayra the Elder, who is 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Ḥujayra, and Ibn Ḥujayra the Younger, who is the Elder's son, 'Abd Allāh b. 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Ḥujayra; see Miṣr, 239. Wakī's report suggests that it was 'Abd Allāh b. 'Abd al-Raḥmān who was appointed over al-qaṣaṣ and the one who opines over the appointment to judging was 'Abd al-Raḥmān; see his Quḍāt, 3:229. I have chosen to identify the one who was appointed as Ibn Ḥujayra the Elder because he is the only one who was associated with qaṣaṣ independently of this report; see Wakī', Quḍāt, 3:225; al-Dūlābī, al-Kunā wa-l-asmā', ed. Abū Qutayba Nazar Muḥammad al-Fāriyābī (Beirut, 2000), 1:314; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 2:501; Maqrīzī, Khiṭaṭ, 4/1:31; Pedersen, "Islamic Preacher," 236. Jūda believed that the one appointed was the Younger; see his "Qaṣaṣ," 119.

Some qussas scholars sought to avoid appointments to the judiciary in the first place. Two Basran scholars and qussas, Bakr b. 'Abd Allāh and al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, sought to avoid being appointed judges.' When Bakr heard that he was to become a judge, he rationalized his way out of the appointment, saying: "By the God of whom there is only one, I do not have the knowledge for judging.... If I am trustworthy [in what I have just sworn before God], then you should not appoint me. If I am a liar [in what I have just sworn before God], then you should not appoint a liar."

Orators (Khutabā')

The khuṭba was an Islamic period public pronouncement allegedly maintaining vestiges of pre-Islamic judicial pronouncements and also showing similarities to  $qaṣaṣ.^{268}$  The khuṭba is most often regarded as the oration delivered at the time of the Friday congregational prayer and at other formal occasions, such as at the celebrations of the two mains feasts of al-Aḍḥā and al-Fiṭr.<sup>269</sup> During the Umayyad period, the term khuṭba was fluid in its application, used to describe pronouncements given at other times and occasions.<sup>270</sup> In general, however, the khuṭba appears to have been a rather formal and official pronouncement, especially in comparison to qaṣaṣ. For example, the purported first  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  of Egypt, Sulaym b. 'Itr (d. 75/694), was also identified as a khaṭīb

<sup>265</sup> Ibn Abī Shayba, Muṣannaf, 5:290; Ibn Sallām, Nāsikh, 4; al-Muḥāsibī, Al-ʿAql wa-Fahm al-Qurʾān, ed. Ḥusayn al-Quwwatlī (Beirut, 1971), 327.

<sup>266</sup> On Bakr b. 'Abd Allāh, see Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:208; Jāḥiz, Bayān, 1:100. On al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, see Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 2:1346.

<sup>267</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:208; Jāḥiz, Bayān, 1:100.

On the relationship between qaṣaṣ, judging and the khuṭba, see Pedersen, "Islamic Preacher," 233–235; 'Athamina, "Qaṣaṣ," 63; Jūda, "Qaṣaṣ," 118. On the question of the khuṭba as a practice with roots in pre-Islamic judging, see Wensinck, "Khuṭba," EI2, 5:74, citing C.H. Becker, Die Kanzel im Kultus des alten Islam, in Nöldeke-Festschrift, (Giessen, 1906), 331; Qutbuddin, "Khuṭba," 194.

<sup>269</sup> Qutbuddin, "Khutba," 180. See also Wensinck, "Khutba," EI2, 5:74; Pedersen, "Islamic Preacher," 226.

<sup>270</sup> Qutbuddin, "Khuṭba," 189–198.

because he gave the khuṭba on al-Aḍḥā and al-Fiṭr.<sup>271</sup> Normally though, Sulaym was known to be either a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  or a judge. This suggests that even at this early stage one difference between the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  and the khaṭīb was that the khaṭīb gave a more official oration, such as the 'īd orations.

In spite of this difference, the fact that the khuṭba could be delivered by a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  indicates that the difference between them was not so great as to preclude one from engaging in the work of the other. In fact, in terms of content, the khuṭba and the  $qis\bar{s}a$  in early Islam were quite similar. Tahera Qutbuddin noted that the khuṭba "roused warriors to battle, legislated on civic and criminal matters, raised awareness of the nearness of death and the importance of leading a pious life, called to the new religion of Islam, and even formed part of its ritual worship."<sup>272</sup> As was seen in the textual evidence in Chapter One, many of these same objectives characterized  $qas\bar{s}s$ . It is not surprising, then, for a scholar identified as a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}s$ , religious or martial, to have also given a khuṭba. A khuṭba of Abū al-Dardā' encouraging his listeners to live their lives for eternal and not temporal rewards exemplifies these common characteristics, for it was given in a military environment to the people of Damascus, at a time other than the Friday congregational prayer and drew upon themes of admonition and piety.<sup>273</sup>

In addition, similarities in style connected the khuṭba to the qiṣṣa. Jāḥiz intimated that the Raqāshī family of Baṣra, known for their affiliations with qaṣaṣ, was predisposed to be  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  because they were descendants of the khuṭabā' of the Persian royal house. <sup>274</sup> Since the content of the Islamic Basran Raqāshī family certainly differed from their pre-Islamic Persian ancestors, Jāḥiz is clearly speaking of other traits necessary in public speaking. His belief that this family was well-suited for qaṣaṣ indicates that he saw in the two forms of expression commonalities in style, not only content.

In light of these similarities, it comes as somewhat of a surprise that only nine qussas were explicitly identified as  $khutabas^{2.75}$ . It seems that the difference in formality may have been an important factor in this disparity. Even though, as Qutbuddin noted, a khutba was delivered in different settings, it

<sup>271</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 72:276. Jūda noted the similarities between the khaṭīb and the qāṣṣ and that their association with each other extended beyond the Umayyad period into the 'Abbāsid; see his "Qaṣaṣ," 120–121.

<sup>272</sup> Qutbuddin, "Khutba," 177.

<sup>273</sup> Azdī, Futūḥ, 389-390.

<sup>274</sup> Jāḥiz, Bayān, 1:308.

They are: (10) Abū al-Dardā', (11) Ibn Masʿūd, (28) Sulaym b. ʿItr, (41) Muṭarrif b. ʿAbd Allāh, (46) Kurdūs b. al-ʿAbbās, (62) Bakr b. ʿAbd Allāh, (63) Yazīd b. Abān, (66) al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, and (90) al-Faḍl b. ʿIsa.

still seems to have been a more formal pronouncement than <code>qaṣaṣ</code>. The degree of formality for the two was determined by the time and location of the pronouncements, the decorum expected at each of the sessions and the political sanction bestowed upon the speaker. In each of these factors, the <code>khuṭba</code> appears to have been more official and to have demanded more rigid parameters in its implementation. These distinguishing factors were a product more of the environment in which <code>qaṣaṣ</code> and <code>khaṭāba</code> were given than even of their style or content; an issue to be discussed more thoroughly in Chapter Three.

Admonishers (Wu"āz)

The association of qaṣaṣ with waʿz is evident from its usage in the Qurʾān. Pedersen noted that in the Qur'an wa'z was applied to the law of Moses (Sūrat al-A'rāf [7]:142), the gospels (Sūrat al-Nisā' [5]:52) and the Our'ān itself (Sūrat Āl ʿImrān [3]:132; Sūrat Hūd [11]:121), because each revelation was an admonition.<sup>276</sup> The term qaṣṣa was used in like manner in the Qur'ān with the qaṣaṣ of the lives of the pre-Islamic prophets as well as qaşaş of the Qur'an acting as a form of admonition and exhortation.<sup>277</sup> It was the common objective of admonition that bound the two forms of public expression together. Both the  $q\bar{a}ss$  and the  $w\bar{a}iz$  drew inspiration for their admonitions from pietistic themes, such as the renunciation of this world, the imminence of death and the final judgment. Since admonition of this type was a common component of religious education in general, other terms, such as dhikrā, 'ibra ("example", "lesson"), nasīha ("advice") or irshād ("right guidance"), can also be found as synonyms for wa'z.<sup>278</sup> For Ibn al-Muqaffa' (d.c. 139/756), the connection of the  $w\bar{a}'iz$  to the  $q\bar{a}ss$  stemmed from their common objective of recalling the end of time, the cessation of existence and the passage of time (yadhkuru al-zawāl wa-l-fanā' wa-l-duwal).279 The confluence of meaning for these terms makes <sup>276</sup> Pedersen, "Islamic Preacher," 227. On the Qur'ān as the wā'iẓ of God to the Muslims, see Ibn Sallām, Faḍā'il al-Qur'ān, eds. Marwān al-'Aṭiyya, Muḥsin Kharāba and Wafā' Taqī al-Dīn (Beirut, 1995), 2:283; Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 29:181–182, 184–185.

See the discussion of qasas utilizing the exemplar of the Prophet Muḥammad and the pre-Islamic prophets in Chapter One.

<sup>278</sup> B. Radtke, "Wā'iz," EI2, 11:56.

Ibn al-Muqaffa', al-Adab al-kabīr, ed. Aḥmad Zakī Bāshā (Beirut, 1994), 123. Ibn al-Muqaffa' mentions these two in passing in a passage describing his disdain for those who belittle the blessings of their friends out of envy: they belittle and spoil the blessing by telling the other that eventually his existence will cease and that time marches on. While the topics discussed by the wā'iz or the qāṣṣ may be difficult for the listener to take in, they are better drawing clear and fast lines of distinction between them difficult, especially in the early period.  $^{280}$

Considering the similarities between qa\$a\$ and wa\$z, we expect to find a large number of those who engaged in the former to be identified with the latter. Surprisingly this is not the case. Only seven qu\$s\$a\$z have, as of yet, been directly associated with the term wa\$z. Certainly, this does not mean that only seven made statements that were admonitory in tone. Just as was noted with  $taf\$a\bar{r}$ , this number indicates only those  $qu\$s\!a\$z$  who have been expressly affiliated with the term wa\$z or its derivatives. Pedersen alleged that the title  $q\bar{a}\$z$  preceded  $w\bar{a}$  iz as a designation for the one who gave admonitions.  $^{282}$  It may be for this reason that we find so few wu among the  $qu\$s\!a\$z$  of the Umayyad period. Regardless of the order of the designations, it appears that the title  $q\bar{a}\$z$  was more common.  $^{283}$

Two men who exemplify the complexity in differentiating between these various disciplines of public religious education are Bilāl b. Sa'd and Yazīd b. Abān. The  $q\bar{a}ss$  Bilāl b. Sa'd, one of the most eloquent (ablagh) of the wu" $\bar{a}z$  whose admonitions  $(maw\bar{a}$ 'izihi) addressed similar themes found in the statements of the  $quss\bar{a}s$ , such as the imminence of death and the need for religious knowledge and pious living, indicates that a  $q\bar{a}ss$  and  $w\bar{a}$ 'iz were distinguished by the same character traits. $^{284}$

Similarly, Yazīd b. Abān was a qāṣṣ and wāʿiz, as well as a khaṭīb. As a wāʿiz he was called upon by 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz to admonish him and he did so by means of the theme of the imminence of death—a topic common to the wuʿāz and the quṣṣāṣ.<sup>285</sup> This practice may be a vestige of the madḥ pre-Islamic poets gave to the rulers and to those seeking guidance from a sage.<sup>286</sup> A wāʿiz might be sought during times of despair, as 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz did upon the than such a "friend" who stoops to the level of trying to create displeasure and grief over the good that has come to a friend.

<sup>280</sup> Radtke stated that the distinction between a wāʿiz, qāṣṣ and mudhakkir was not clear until the 4th/10th century; see his "Wāʿiz," *EI*2, 11:56. See also Pedersen, "Islamic Preacher," 231; 'Athamina, "Qaṣaṣ," 53.

<sup>281</sup> They are: (28) Sulaym b. 'Itr, (36) Nawf b. Faḍāla al-Bakālī, (60) Bilāl b. Sa'd, (63) Yazīd b. Abān, (66) al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, (79) 'Abd Allāh b. Kathīr, and (104) 'Abd al-'Azīz b. Abī Sulaymān.

<sup>282</sup> Pedersen, "Islamic Preacher," 231.

<sup>283 &#</sup>x27;Athamina, "Qaşaş," 53.

<sup>284</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 10:485; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 4:293. For examples of Bilāl's admonitions, see Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 10:486; Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 84–85.

<sup>285</sup> Al-Jāḥiz, al-Maḥāsin wa-l-aḍdād (Beirut, 1950), 300; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 32:76.

<sup>286</sup> Pedersen, "Islamic Preacher," 231.

death of his son.<sup>287</sup> This summons, however, is not to be interpreted that the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  held an official appointment as a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$ .<sup>288</sup> While some  $qu\bar{s}s\bar{a}s$  were indeed appointed by the political administration, many seem to have engaged in  $qa\bar{s}a\bar{s}$  independently and to have done so because of their religious knowledge and skill. In the case of Yazīd b. Abān, he does not appear to have been officially appointed by 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz as his admonisher; rather, this activity seems to have developed out of Yazīd's reputation as a pious religious man.

The association of qaṣaṣ with wa'z confirms that admonition was a fundamental aspect of qaṣaṣ. While the two terms seem to have enjoyed a certain symbiosis in the early period, the role of admonition in the practice of the quṣṣāṣ continued beyond the Umayyad period and was expressed by a third term,  $nadh\bar{\nu}$ —a term the Qur'ān also applies to the Prophet.<sup>289</sup>

Mudhakkirūn

One role often associated with the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  is that of mudhakkir, "one who calls others to be cognizant of God." The primary lexical meaning for the verb dhakkara is "to remind," although in religious contexts it incorporates an exhortative element with the sense of reminding someone about God. This meaning can already be found in the Qur'ān.<sup>290</sup> Thus the term dhikr, eventually characterizing the practices of the ascetics, was used in the Qur'ān for "the admonishing preaching of the Prophet" and is, in this regard, quite similar to wa'z.<sup>291</sup> With the passage of time, terms such as dhakkara, haddatha, wa'aza and qassa came to describe specific religious phenomena, even then, by virtue of the similarities of their meanings within the Qur'ān, they maintained a close association with each other. In fact,  $q\bar{a}ss$  and mudhakkir are often used synonymously in the sources so that the requirements given by Abū Zayd al-Samarqāndī for a good mudhakkir were identical to those given by Ibn al-Jawzī for a good  $q\bar{a}ss$ .<sup>292</sup>

<sup>287</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 18:112. 'Umar also consoled others, including quṣṣāṣ, in their times of loss. See his words of consolation to 'Awn b. 'Abd Allāh; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 47:71.

<sup>288</sup> Pedersen held this interpretation. See his "Islamic Preacher," 231.

<sup>289</sup> It was said of Ṣaliḥ al-Murrī (d. 172/788): "He is no qāṣṣ; he is a nadhīr." See Jāḥiz, Bayān, 1:369. On Ṣāliḥ al-Murrī, see Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 2:189–190. For the Qur'ān's use of nadhīr for the Prophet, see Sūrat al-Baqara (2):119.

<sup>290</sup> Pedersen, "Islamic Preacher," 227–228, 231; Jūda, "Qaṣaṣ," 107.

Pedersen, "Islamic Preacher," 228, 231. See also Jūda, "Qaṣaṣ," 106–107. On the various applications and evolution of the term dhikr, see L. Gardet, "Dhikr," EI2, 2:223–227.

<sup>292</sup> Pauliny, "Quṣṣāṣ," 130.

The Prophet as Qāṣṣ and Mudhakkir

In addition to their association with each other in the Qur'an, the correspondence of gassa with dhikr is alluded to in a report from Aws b. Abī Aws that says that the Prophet "used to give gasas to us and call us to remember God, (yagussu ʿalaynā wa-yudhakkirunā)."<sup>293</sup> Therefore, the Prophet, by virtue of his own affiliation with these two disciplines, was upheld as a model for each. His grandson, al-Hasan b. 'Alī b. Abī Tālib (d. 49/669–70), apparently viewed these two practices precisely from this perspective.<sup>294</sup> When he happened upon a qāss in the Prophet's mosque in Medina, he asked: "What are you?" The man replied: "I'm a qāss, O son of the Messenger of God." Al-Hasan said: "You lie! Muḥammad is the qāṣṣ, for God said, "Relate qaṣaṣ ( fa-uqṣuṣ al-qaṣaṣ) [Sūrat al-A'rāf (7):176]." The man replied: "I am a mudhakkir." Al-Hasan repeated: "You lie! Muḥammad is the mudhakkir, for God said to him, "Remember that you are the mudhakkir (Sūrat al-Ghāshiya [88]:21)"." To this the man was left dumbfounded and said: "Then what am I?" Al-Hasan answered: "A fake (almutakkalif min al-rijāl)!"295 A similar report alleges that 'Umar confronted a qāṣṣ in much the same way as al-Ḥasan had, although with two important exceptions: 'Umar beat the man each time he claimed he was a qāṣṣ and a mudhakkir and he did not draw any comparisons to the Prophet.<sup>296</sup>

Two important conclusions can be drawn from these reports. First, both reports indicate that qa\$a\$ and dhikr were similar enterprises since the unidentified teacher believed that they both were accurate descriptions of his conduct. Secondly, in the report attributed to al-Ḥasan, usurpation of Prophetic authority is the stated offense. Al-Ḥasan excoriated the  $q\bar{a}\$\$$  by implying that he did not possess the authority to engage in this form of instruction. The report suggests that the  $q\bar{a}\$\$$  represented an impingement on the role of the Prophet by engaging in an activity that was reserved only for him. Furthermore, since this incident allegedly occurred after the Prophet's death—at the time, al-Ḥasan was only seven—it seems to imply unequivocally that any  $q\bar{a}\$\$$  or mudhakkir, even one who lived after the Prophet, was usurping the position of the Prophet. Clearly, by virtue of the large number of scholars identified as qu\$\$\$ and  $mudhakkir\bar{u}n$ , this sentiment failed to take hold within the community, though it may have contributed to the evolving negative image of the qus\$a\$.

<sup>293</sup> Ibn Abī Shayba, Muṣannaf, 5:289. On Aws b. Abī Aws, see Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 3:388.

<sup>294</sup> On al-Ḥasan, see L. Veccia Vaglieri, "al-Ḥasan b. 'Alī b. Abī Ṭālib," EI2, 3:240–243.

<sup>295</sup> Ya'qūbī, Tārīkh, 2:227–228; Goldziher, Muslim Studies II, 153–154.

<sup>296</sup> Ibn Shabba, Madīna, 1:9.

Statistical Analysis and Textual Evidence

Since the overlap in the two terms  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  and mudhakkir appears seminal, it is somewhat surprising that only seventeen  $qus\bar{s}s\bar{s}$ , or 16%, are directly connected by the sources to  $dhikr.^{297}$  In spite of this low number, the association between  $qas\bar{s}s$  and dhikr is well-established even in reports about the lives of the Companions of the Prophet. When 'Aṭā' b. Abī Rabāḥ, for instance, went with the Meccan  $q\bar{s}ss$  'Ubayd b. 'Umayr to visit 'Ā'isha, she said:

"You are the qāṣṣ of the people of Mecca?" He said, "I am 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr." She said, "O 'Ubayd, when you call others to remember [God], do so lightly for calling to remembrance kills, (yā 'Ubayd idhā dhakkarta, fa-akhiffa, fa-inna al-dhikr yaqtul)."<sup>298</sup>

In a report attributed to Ibn ʿAbbās, ʿUbayd b. ʿUmayr was depicted calling his listeners to remembrance [of God], (yudhakkiru al-nās ḥawlahu).<sup>299</sup> Another anecdote alleges that the Successor Ṭalḥa b. ʿUbayd Allāh b. Kurayz<sup>300</sup> said:

I saw 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr and 'Aṭā' b. Abī Rabāḥ talking to each other while the  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ was giving qaṣaṣ. So I said, "Do you not want to listen to the dhikr (the mentioning of God) and to be deemed worthy at the appointed time [before God]?"  $^{301}$

Each of these reports unequivocally associates qaṣaṣ to dhikr and two of them connect 'Ubayd directly to dhikr.

The affiliation of qaṣaṣ with dhikr persisted across the empire and throughout the Umayyad caliphate. Al-Aswad b. Sarīʻ, the purported first  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  of Baṣra, "used to call people to the remembrance of God (yudhakkir) in the inner section of the mosque." Sulaym b. 'Itr, the first to give qaṣaṣ in Egypt, was

<sup>297</sup> They are: (2) 'Abd Allāh b. Rawāḥa, (14) al-Aswad b. Sarī', (16) Tamīm al-Dārī, (25) 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr, (28) Sulaym b. 'Itr, (31) Abū Idrīs al-Khawlānī, (33) 'Abd Allāh b. Ghālib, (38) Ibrāhīm al-Taymī, (40) Sa'd b. Jubayr, (46) Kurdūs b. al-'Abbās, (60) Bilāl b. Sa'd, (66) al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, (68) Rajā' b. Ḥaywa, (80) Muḥammad b. Qays, (81) Darrāj b. Sim'ān, (94) Sumayr b. 'Abd al-Raḥman and (104) 'Abd al-'Azīz b. Abī Sulaymān.

<sup>298</sup> Ibn Abī Khaythama, Akhbār al-Makkiyyīn, 250–251. A variant in Ibn Sa'd reads: "Remembering is heavy (thaqīl)." See his Ṭabaqāt, 8:24. On 'Aṭā' b. Abī Rabāḥ, see J. Schacht, "'Aṭā' b. Abī Rabāḥ," *EI*2, 1:730.

<sup>299</sup> Ibn Abi Khaythama, Akhbār al-Makkiyyīn, 250-251.

<sup>300</sup> See Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 13:324–326.

<sup>301</sup> Țabarī, Tafsīr, 9:163; Ibn Kathīr, Tafsīr, 2:282.

<sup>302</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:41.

considered a mudhakkir as well as a qaṣṣ.  $^{303}$  Ibrāhīm al-Taymī called on people to remember God in sessions that he held in his home. These sessions were so spiritually moving that they left one of his listeners, Abū Wā'il (d. 99–101/717–20), trembling like a bird.  $^{304}$

Some of the qussās/mudhakkirūn expressed their dhikr through the repetition of religious phrases. Ka'b al-Ahbār alleged that anyone who says subhāna Allāh ("God be praised") and al-hamdu li-llāh ("Praise be to God") two hundred times will have his sins forgiven.<sup>305</sup> The Basran qāss, 'Abd 'Allāh b. Ghālib, continually repeated phrases like subhāna Allāh, al-hamdu li-llāh, and lā ilāha illā Allāh ("There is no god but God"). 306 Darrāj b. Sim'ān of Egypt advocated that his listeners "increase in remembrance of God until people say they are insane (akthirū dhikr Allāh ḥattā yaqūlū majnūn)."307 According to the opinion of the eminent Companion and qāṣṣ Ibn Masʿūd, the repetition of these religious phrases was a blameworthy innovation. He reportedly came across a group of people, either in a mosque or while on their way out of the city, listening to and repeating after a certain qāṣṣ named 'Amr b. Zurāra who was instructing them to say "God be praised (subhāna Allāh)" multiple times. 308 Ibn Mas'ūd rebuked the qāṣṣ and his followers, saying: "You are either better guided than the Messenger of God and his Companions or you are holding onto an error." 309 Yet, in spite of this reprimand from a man of impeccable reputation like Ibn Mas'ūd, the practice continued among the quṣṣāṣ as indicated in the reports about 'Abd Allāh b. Ghālib and Darrāj b. Sim'ān, as well as in a report about Abū Ṭu'ma Hilāl, another  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ of the second/eighth century, who, although he

<sup>303</sup> Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 5:409.

<sup>304</sup> Ibn Abī Shayba, Muṣannaf, 5:289; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 23:171. Abū Wā'il is Shaqīq b. Salama who died during the caliphate of 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz (r. 99–101/717–20); see Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 2:178–179.

<sup>305</sup> Abū Zur'a al-Dimashqī, Tārīkh, 1:373.

<sup>306</sup> Ibn Ḥanbal, Zuhd, 247. On him, see the Appendix # 33.

<sup>307</sup> Yaḥyā b. Maʿīn, Tārīkh, ed. Aḥmad Muḥammad Nūr Sayf (Mecca, 1979), 4:413; Ibn ʿAsākir, Dimashq, 17:220; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 8:479.

For the variant placing the event in a mosque, see Ṭabarānī, al-Mu'jam al-kabīr, 9:128. For the variant placing the event on the outskirts of the city, see 'Abd al-Razzāq, Muṣannaf, 3:222.

The report can be found in three slightly different versions in Tabarānī, al-Mu'jam al-kabīr, 9:128. See also 'Abd al-Razzāq, Muṣannaf, 3:222, Ibn Ḥajar, al-Maṭālib al-ʿāliya bi-zawāʾid al-masānīd al-thamāniya, ed. Saʿd b. Nāṣr b. 'Abd al-ʿAzīz al-Shithrī (Riyadh, 1998–1999), 12:518, and Abū Isḥāq al-Shāṭibī, whose version says that the one giving qaṣaṣ was telling them to say subḥāna Allāh and lā ilāha illā Allāh, each ten times; see his al-I'tiṣām (Cairo, 1913–1914), 2:28.

transmitted only a few <code>hadīths</code>, reported that the Prophet told his family: "If one of you was struck with some distress or sadness, let him say seven times, "God, God is my Lord. I do not associate anything with Him."<sup>310</sup>

Yet dhikr was not composed simply of the repetition of religious phrases. Other quṣṣāṣ associated dhikr with the performance of good deeds as well. The distinguished Syrian qāṣṣ Bilāl b. Sa'd argued for the excellence of dhikr in the form of acts of religiosity and kindness over that of mere words when he said: "There are two types of dhikr: dhikr of God by the tongue, which is good and beautiful, and dhikr of God when I do what is right and not what is wrong—this is the better of the two."311 In Egypt, Darrāj b. Sim'ān transmitted and interpreted a ḥadīth of the Prophet, that on the day of reckoning the people who horde will be divided from those who are generous; Darrāj classified the people of generosity as those who sat in dhikr sessions in the mosque.<sup>312</sup>

Later scholars reckoned that the affiliation of qaṣaṣ with dhikr in their time was a vestige of the practice of the early community. Ibn Ḥanbal (d. 241/855), in a section of his Zuhd on those who engaged in qaṣaṣ and specifically in a report that Ibn 'Abbās saw Tamīm al-Dārī give qaṣaṣ during the caliphate of 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb, glossed the verb yaquṣṣu with yudhakkiru.' Fākihī (d. 275/889), in an introduction to a brief section in his  $Akhb\bar{a}r$  Makka on the practice of the quṣṣaṣ, stated:

The  $q\bar{a}ss$  stood in the Holy Mosque after the morning prayers  $(al\text{-}sub\rlap/h)$  and called people to the mention God  $(fa\text{-}yadhkuru\,All\bar{a}h\,ta^s\bar{a}l\bar{a})$ , offered up supplications to Him  $(yad^s\bar{u})$  and encouraged faith in the people. This occurred behind the place where the  $im\bar{a}m$  stood  $(al\text{-}maq\bar{a}m)$  after he had finished.

According to Fākihī, mentioning God (dhikr) was the common practice in his time. Also, like Ibn Ḥanbal, he alleges that this practice dated back to the beginning of Islam and, in the case of his city, Mecca, back to 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr.' 315

<sup>310</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 74:100. A second version encourages the repetition of this phrase three times; see Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 74:100.

<sup>311</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 10:497.

<sup>312</sup> Ibn 'Adī, Kāmil, 3:114.

<sup>313</sup> Ibn Ḥanbal, Zuhd, 215. Later, Maqrīzī in his Khiṭaṭ, gave a similar report in which Tamīm was granted permission to yudhakkir; see Khiṭaṭ 4/1:28. See also Pedersen, "Islamic Preacher," 232–233.

<sup>314</sup> Al-Fākihī, Akhbār Makka, ed. 'Abd al-Malik b. 'Abd Allāh b. Duhaysh (Beirut, 1994), 2:338.

<sup>315</sup> Ibid.

Not all scholars, however, appreciated the confluence of gasas with dhikr, and some actually saw them as distinct disciplines. According to some reports, dhikr was a phenomenon incorporating religious knowledge ('ilm) while gasas sessions lacked any such value whatsoever. The distinguished Successor Muhammad b. Sīrīn (d. 110/728) entered the mosque in Basra and a  $q\bar{a}ss$  named Sumayr (Samīr?) b. 'Abd al-Rahmān was giving gasas in one corner while Humayd b. 'Abd al-Rahmān al-Himyarī was "mentioning religious knowledge (yadhkuru al-'ilm)" in another.316 Ibn Sirīn chose ostensibly Sumayr's session, sat down and became tired. Then someone came to him (atānī ātin) and said: "You leaned towards one of them and you sat down. If you had wanted, I would have shown you the place of [the angel] Gabriel with Humayd b. 'Abd al-Rahmān.'"317 The session of the qāss is first distinguished from the dhikr session, then disparaged throughout the report. First, the report does not elaborate on the details of the qaṣaṣ session, though it elevates the dhikr session over it because dhikr contained religious knowledge (dhikr al-'ilm). Secondly, the impotence of qaṣaṣ is depicted in its inability to stimulate the listener, for after Ibn Sīrīn sat with Sumayr he became tired, a consequence of boredom. Apparently, not all qussās were entertaining.<sup>318</sup> Lastly, the anonymous interlocutor confirms the supremacy of dhikr to qaşaş by stating that the angel of the revelation, Gabriel, was present in the former. The image is undeniable dhikr and qaṣaṣ are not only different enterprises, dhikr is decidedly superior.

The conviction that dhikr and qaṣaṣ were distinct enterprises and that dhikr was preferable is argued in two third/ninth century texts: Aḥmad b. 'Amr b. Abī 'Āṣim's (d. 287/900) al-Mudhakkir wa-l- $tadhk\bar{t}r$  wa-l-dhikr and Abū Ṭālib al-Makkī's (d. 386/998)  $Q\bar{u}t$  al- $qul\bar{u}b$ . Despite the title of Ibn Abī 'Āṣim's book suggesting its topic is dhikr, much of its content is concerned with the censure of qaṣaṣ. He argues, for example, against the legitimacy of qaṣaṣ in his time, stating that it is practiced in specially built prayer areas in the homes of the quṣṣāṣ. The  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  then attracts women and weak men to his sessions and fills their minds with all sorts of innovations. Ibn Abī 'Aṣim claims that the  $am\bar{t}r$  of the city has the responsibility to shut these sessions down. He advocates this position by citing anti-qaṣaṣ traditions. He gives multiple variants of a tradition stating that there was no qaṣaṣ at the time of the Prophet, Abū Bakr or

<sup>316</sup> On Sumayr (Samīr?) b. ʿAbd al-Raḥmān, see the Appendix # 94. Ḥumayd b. ʿAbd al-Raḥmān al-Ḥimyarī was a faqīh in Basra; see Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 7:381–383; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:497.

<sup>317</sup> Al-Dārimī, Sunan, eds. Fawwāz Aḥmad Zamarlī and Khālid al-Sab' al-ʿAlamī (Beirut, 1986), 1:110.

<sup>318</sup> On the issue of the danger of boredom in a qaṣaṣ session, see Chapter Three.

'Umar,<sup>319</sup> as well as variants of one claiming that there are only three type of people who give qaṣaṣ: the  $am\bar{u}r$ , the ma' $m\bar{u}r$  (the one appointed by the  $am\bar{u}r$ ) and the hypocrite,<sup>320</sup> and, finally, of another stating that permission from a governmental authority is required for giving qaṣaṣ. All of this is intended to encourage the authorities of his day to close down the qaṣaṣ sessions.

Ibn Abī 'Aṣim compares qaṣaṣ to dhikr, defending the latter as the legitimate form of religious education. In support of dhikr he lists Qur'anic verses and hadīths on the angels' desire to sit in dhikr sessions and on God's willingness to forgive those who attend dhikr sessions.<sup>321</sup> While the general theme of the incompatibility of dhikr and qaṣaṣ is clear in the work, Ibn Abī 'Aṣim cannot completely avoid the striking similarity between the two terms, qaşaş and dhikr, as seen in his citation of a report that Tamīm al-Dārī was the first qāṣṣ. The report states that when 'Umar, caving to Tamīm's persistent petitioning, granted him permission to give qaṣaṣ, the caliph asked him what he intended to do in his sessions. Tamīm answered: "I will recite the Qur'ān to them (agra'u 'alayhim al-Qur'ān), call them to remember God (udhakkiruhum) and admonish them (a'izuhum)."322 Ibn Abī 'Aṣim tried to avoid the clear association between qaṣaṣ and dhikr in this report by arguing that the qaṣaṣ of his day was unlike the type proposed by Tamīm. His use of the report suggests, however, that he recognized the integral relationship between dhikr and qaṣaṣ, at least in the earliest years of the community.

Ironically, Ibn Abī 'Aṣim was not the only third/ninth century scholar who advocated for dhikr while juxtaposing it to qaṣaṣ. His more famous contemporary, Abū Ṭālib al-Makkī, devoted a section of his  $Q\bar{u}t$  al- $qul\bar{u}b$  to expounding the differences between the two phenomena and, like Ibn Abī 'Aṣim, unabashedly supported the sessions of dhikr while censuring the sessions of qaṣaṣ. He did so by referring to reports of earlier scholars critical of the  $quṣs\bar{a}ṣ$  and qaṣaṣ. One of his most preferred sources was the scholar/ $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, although Makkī never identified him as a  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$ .

Makkī presented his position quite clearly. He established a hierarchy of religious meetings: "Attending the sessions of dhikr is better than prayer and prayer is better than attending the sessions of the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ."^{323}$  Dhikr sessions are

<sup>319</sup> Ibn 'Abī 'Āṣim, Mudhakkir, 62–66. For a more detailed analysis of this tradition see Chapter Four.

<sup>320</sup> Ibid., 67-81. For a more detailed analysis of this tradition see Chapter Four.

<sup>321</sup> Ibid., 53-60.

<sup>322</sup> Ibid., 66.

See Makkī, Qūt, 1:370, n. 6, which notes this reading in an alternate manuscript. In another edition of Makkī's Qūt al-qulūb, the statement is included as part of the text; see Qūt al-qulūb, ed. 'Aṣim Ibrāhīm al-Kayyālī (Beirut, 2005), 1:123.

better than all others because of their content. This was true from the time of the Prophet, his Companions and the Successors. Dhikr sessions were better because the attendees were interested in,

Knowledge of the faith ('ilm al- $\bar{l}m\bar{a}n$ ) and esoteric knowledge (i.e. gnosis, al-ma'rifa), along with the disciplines of communal relations (wa-' $ul\bar{u}m$  al-mu' $\bar{a}mal\bar{a}t$ ) and legal rulings (al-tafaqquh), known [only] by seeing from the heart (ba, $\bar{a}$ 'ir al- $qul\bar{u}b$ ) and by perceiving through the mind's eye (al-na,za rightarrow al- $yaq\bar{u}n$ ) the secrets of the hidden aspects of life ( $sar\bar{a}$ 'ir al- $ghuy\bar{u}b$ ).

The benefits of dhikr, therefore, included religious knowledge ('ilm al-īmān), practical application of the faith within the community ('ulūm al-muʿāmalāt and al-tafaqquh) and the exploration of the hidden truths (al-sarā'ir al-ghuyūb) of the faith (al-maʿrifa) only obtainable by deeper spiritual awareness (baṣā'ir al-qulūb wa-l-naṣar bi-ʿayn al-yaqīn). As a result of these benefits, Makkī believed that the one who attends the dhikr session enjoys an elevated status in paradise. In defense of his position, he cites a portion of Sūrat al-Aḥzāb (33): 35, "The male Muslims and the female Muslims and the male believers and the female believers," and interprets it as meaning that the term "Muslim" denotes a higher level of faith than the term "believer," mu'min.<sup>325</sup>

In contrast to the dhikr sessions are the qaṣaṣ sessions. According to Makkī the benefits found in the dhikr sessions were of no interest to the quṣṣāṣ ( $walaysa yurīdūna bihi majālis al-qaṣaṣ wa-lā yaʻnūna bi-dhalika al-quṣṣāṣ). <math>^{326}$  He cites reports from al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī who allegedly characterized the sessions of the quṣṣāṣ as innovation (bidʻa) $^{327}$  and as nothingness (farāgh).  $^{328}$  He claims: "If al-qaṣaṣ was a part of the dhikr sessions and if the quṣṣāṣ were among the 'ulamā', then Ibn 'Umar, with his piety and asceticism, would not have removed them from the mosque." However, according to a separate

<sup>324</sup> Makkī, Qūt, 2:196.

Makkī, Qūt, 2:198. Makkī's selection of this passage is revealing for it is the verse which immediately preceeds those verses over which the qāṣṣ and mufassir Muqātil b. Sulaymān was censured for utilizing isrāʾīliyyāt, see above 119 f.. For the relationship between the two terms "Muslim" and "mu'min" and their application to the earliest believers in Islam, see Fred Donner, Muhammad and the Believers (Cambridge, MA, 2010), 56–61.

<sup>326</sup> Makkī, Qūt, 2:196.

<sup>327</sup> Makkī, Qūt, 1:370, 2:196.

<sup>328</sup> Makkī, Qūt, 2:198.

<sup>329</sup> Makkī, Qūt, 2:196, see also 1:370. Ibn 'Umar is not the only early Muslim leader who allegedly removed the quṣṣāṣ from the mosque. 'Alī b. Abī Ṭalib is reported to have done tradition, Ibn 'Umar's stance on the qussas was not as antagonistic as Makkī portrayed. Al-Azraq b. Qays (d. 105-20/723-37) reportedly said: "I was sitting with Ibn 'Umar and the people  $(al-n\bar{a}s)$  were asking him questions while 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr was giving qasas (yaqussu). So Ibn 'Umar said, "Leave me alone with our mudhakkir ( $khall\bar{u}$  baynan $\bar{a}$  wa-bayna mudhakkirin $\bar{a}$ )"." This report not only portrays Ibn 'Umar as supportive of the  $q\bar{a}ss$  'Ubayd, it also expresses the synonymous relationship between the terms  $q\bar{a}ss$  and mudhakkir directly from Ibn 'Umar.

For Makkī, not only were the qaṣaṣ sessions themselves innovations, they contained within them specific practices considered innovations. He cites al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī in giving three examples: they allow men and women to meet together, offer supplications with loud voices and extend hands during supplications.<sup>331</sup> This tradition will be examined further in Chapter Three.

In addition to the accusation of innovation, Makkī argues that the qaṣaṣ sessions offer no benefits—they are nothingness, majālis al-farāgh. He cites two reports from al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī in defense of his opinion. The first illustrates the lack of content in the sessions, while the second emphasizes the social good accomplishable during the sessions of the quṣṣāṣ. As for the former, al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī reportedly said to Yazid al-Raqāshī and Ziyād al-Numayrī:

The sessions of dhikr are not like your session where one of you exhorts and preaches to his colleagues (yakhṭubu ʻala aṣḥābihi) and narrates ḥadīths as if they were stories (yasradu al-ḥadīth sardan). We, on the other hand, meet and remember the faith (fa-nudhakkiru al-īmān), reflect on the Qurʾān (natadabbaru al-Qurʾān), give legal rulings on the religion (natafaqqahu fī-l-dīn) and enumerate the blessings of God on us (nuʿuddu niʿam Allāh ʿalaynā). $^{332}$ likewise. Another report about 'Alī corroborates his passion for purifying the mosque of unseemly characters. He purportedly kicked a tailor out of the mosque. When he was informed that this man was the caretaker of the mosque, i.e. he cleaned the mosque and locked the doors to it, 'Alī refused to bend saying: "I heard the Messenger of God say: "Remove your modes of work from your mosques"." See Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 48:348.

<sup>330 &#</sup>x27;Abd al-Razzāq, Muṣannaf, 3:218. Al-Azraq b. Qays was a Basran scholar who died during the governorship of Khālid al-Qasrī over Iraq (105–120/723–37); Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:103–104.

<sup>331</sup> Makkī, Qūt, 2:196.

Makkī, Qūt, 2:203. Ibn al-Jawzī recorded a variant of this report traced back to Anas b. Mālik; see his Quṣṣāṣ, 129.

In this report al-Ḥasan described the quṣṣāṣ as a group exhorting, preaching and telling  $had\bar{\iota}ths$  in the form of stories. In essence, these sessions provide no real religious or spiritual benefit, and even when they attempt to engage in religious disciplines, like  $had\bar{\iota}th$  transmission, they betray their ineptitude by failing to include  $isn\bar{a}ds$  so that the  $had\bar{\iota}ths$  come across as simply stories. The dhikr sessions, on the other hand, engage in actual religious disciplines like Qur'ān recitation and fiqh, while also emphasizing spiritual matters by encouraging one to recount the blessings of God. In Makkī's view, only when compared to the sessions of the deplorable Mu'tazila do the qaṣaṣ sessions enjoy pride of place.

The qaṣaṣ sessions were not only futile because of their lack of content. They also led people away from participating in activities enhancing communal relations. The Basran  $had\bar{\iota}th$  scholar Muʻāwiya b. Qurra (d. 115/733) purportedly asked al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī:

"Do you prefer that I visit the sick or sit with a  $q\bar{a}s$ ?" Al-Ḥasan said, "Visit your sick." I (Muʻāwiya) said, "Do you prefer that I participate in a funerary procession or sit with a  $q\bar{a}s$ ?" He said, "Participate in your funerary procession." I said, "Should I help a man in need if he asks of me or sit with a  $q\bar{a}s$ ?" He said, "Go where you are needed so that you do something better than the sessions of nothingness ( $maj\bar{a}lis\ al-far\bar{a}gh$ )."  $^{334}$

In each case, al-Ḥasan prefers the activity offering some benefit to the community over the qaṣaṣ sessions which are empty, at least in their social setting.

In spite of Makkī's obvious animosity towards qaṣaṣ, the relationship between it and dhikr is more complicated than he implies. The gnarly relationship between the quṣṣāṣ and the mudhakkirūn is exemplified in al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, who is Makkī's exemplar for the mudhakkirūn. First, our sources indicate that al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī was himself a  $qāṣṣ.^{335}$  His position as a qāṣṣ may even be alluded to in a report that Makkī records whereby 'Alī b. Abī Ṭālib entered the mosque in Baṣra and began to kick out the quṣṣāṣ. Then he came upon al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī "who was speaking about this religious knowledge (yatakallamu fī hadhā al-ʿilm)." So 'Alī listened for a while and then left without removing him from the mosque. <sup>336</sup> The obvious intent of the tradition is to distinguish the type of teaching that al-Ḥasan gave—instruction Makkī

<sup>333</sup> Makkī, Qūt, 2:199.

<sup>334</sup> Makkī, Qūt, 2:198.

<sup>335</sup> See the Appendix # 66.

<sup>336</sup> Makkī, Qūt, 2:197.

Secondly, not only was al-Ḥasan himself considered a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$ , some of his closest colleagues were also numbered among the  $quss\bar{a}s$ . The precarious nature of the relationship of these men to both qasas and dhikr is exemplified in another of Makkī's reports. He says:

Al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī was one of the  $mudhakkir\bar{n}n$ . His sessions were dhikr sessions where he isolated himself in his house with his colleagues and his followers from among the ascetics, like Malik b Dīnār, Thābit al-Bunānī, Ayyūb al-Sijistānī, Muḥammad b. Wāsiʻ, Farqad al-Sanjī, and 'Abd al-Wāḥid b. Zayd, and would say, "Let us propagate the light  $(h\bar{a}t\bar{u}unshur\bar{u}al-n\bar{u}r)$ ." He spoke to them of this religious knowledge, the knowledge of the absolute truth (' $ilm\ al-yaq\bar{u}n$ ) and the potency in the desires of the heart, the putridity of actions and the evil delusions of the souls. <sup>338</sup>

Of the seven men identified by name, three of them—al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, Thābit al-Bunānī and 'Abd al-Wāḥid b. Zayd—were  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ . One of them, Thābit al-Bunānī, was widely-known as a  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$ .  $^{339}$  Clearly, therefore, the difference between a  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  and a mudhakkir, and even between these and the ascetics, as the report states, is less distinct than Makkī claims.

Lastly, while Makkī clearly disliked the qussas, he did not deny that they were of some benefit and that traditions traced back to early authorities of the community affirmed these benefits. He records that Ziyād al-Numayrī, a  $q\bar{a}s$  criticized earlier in his work, said:

I went to Anas b. Mālik when he was in the corner [of the mosque] and he said to me, "Give qaṣaṣ (quṣṣa)!" I said: "How, when the people allege that it is bid'a?" Anas said, "Nothing that recalls God is bid'a." [Ziyād] said, "So I gave qaṣaṣ and began to increase supplication in my qiṣaṣ hoping that he would concur  $(raj\bar{a})^a$  an yu'ammina." He (Ziyād) said, "So I began to give qaṣaṣ and he did concur (wa-huwa yu'amminu)." And they began to make the supplication like qaṣaṣ.<sup>340</sup>

<sup>337</sup> Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:389-390.

<sup>338</sup> Makkī, Qūt, 2:199-200.

<sup>339</sup> See the Appendix #83.

This tradition suggests that during the lifetime of the Companion of the Prophet Anas b. Mālik (d.c. 91-3/709-711), qaṣaṣ was already considered suspect. So much so, that Ziyād, who is not considered a reputable scholar in the sources, refused to engage in it until he received the support of Anas. In spite of Anas's positive opinion of qaṣaṣ, the report was used to Makkī's advantage by its allusion that qaṣaṣ was questionable from the earliest period and that it continued to have a seditious component which supplanted the orthodox practice of du 'a'.<sup>341</sup>

Despite Makkī's and Ibn Abī 'Aṣim's attempts at distinguishing <code>qaṣaṣ</code> from <code>dhikr</code>, the Muslims maintained the connection between the two. The synonymous use of the terms in the Qur'ān and the application of both terms to the Prophet as well as to some of his Companions confirm this fundamental association between them. Even three centuries after Makkī, the <code>quṣṣāṣ</code> were still associated with the <code>mudhakkirūn</code> as evidenced in the title of the most famous work on the <code>quṣṣāṣ</code>, Ibn al-Jawzī's <code>Kitāb al-quṣṣāṣ wa-l-mudhakkirīn</code>.

Ascetics

Even though Makkī, in his Qūt al-qulūb, indicates that later Sūfīs were antagonistic to the quṣṣāṣ, the ascetic tendencies characterizing Sufism are found

Makkī,  $Q\bar{u}t$ , 2:207–208; Pedersen, "Criticism," 220. The tension between the respectability of the qussas and their censure continued among later generations as reported by Makkī. He noted that Ibn Ḥanbal praised reliable qussas because "they mention the balance  $(al\text{-}m\bar{\imath}za\bar{\imath}n)$  and the punishments of the grave ('adhabal al-qabr)." However, according to Makkī's variant, when Ibn Ḥanbal was asked if he attended the meetings of the qussas he replied in the negative; see his  $Q\bar{u}t$ , 2:207. Later, Ibn al-Jawzī recorded a variant in which Ibn Ḥanbal, after praising the content of qasas as mentioned in al-Makkī, told Abū Bakr al-Marwazī that he recommended sitting at their meetings if they were reliable; see his Qussas, 19–20. Finally, a later variant found in Ibn Mufliḥ al-Maqdisī combines the two variants such that Ibn Ḥanbal tells Abū Bakr to sit with a reputable qas, but when Abū Bakr asks the master if he ever sat with them, he said, "no." See his  $\bar{A}dab$ , 2:83.

The relationship between qaṣaṣ and  $du'\bar{a}$  is complicated by the various meanings associated with each term. 'Athamina noted the integration of  $du'\bar{a}$ ' and  $qun\bar{u}t$  into qaṣaṣ as a political tool for cursing one's enemies, both internal and external; see his "Qaṣaṣ," 66. This text on Anas and Ziyād seems to suggest that the connection could also be apolitical.

Asceticism is, indeed, a general term used to describe various practices of a pious nature. Some qussas, for example, manifested their asceticism in acts of supererogatory devotion, such as extended prayer, Qur'ān recitation and dhikr. Ibrahīm al-Taymī, for instance, allegedly remained so long in motionless prayer that birds alighted on his back. Thābit al-Bunānī who was considered one of the most pious men (a'bad) of Basra also devoted long hours to prayer. Abd Allāh b. Ghālib committed himself to both dhikr and to long prayer vigils. Sa'īd b. Jubayr was known for his devotion to Qur'ān recitation. Tamīm al-Dārī, combining both prayer and recitation, purportedly recited the whole Qur'ān in one rak'a. Sa'ī

Some  $quss\bar{a}s$  expressed their asceticism by denying worldly goods, including food, money and human relations. Abū al-Dardā', for example, abandoned his

The connection between the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  and the ascetics has been established in Western scholarship for some time. See in particular Massignon, Essai, 141–152; MacDonald, "Ķiṣṣa," Elh, 1043–1044; Pedersen, "Islamic Preacher," 238–239, 241–242.

<sup>343</sup> Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 25.

Due to the large number of ascetics, I have not listed them here but have identified them by a (a) in the Appendix.

These statistics challenge Pauliny's allegation that the quṣṣās were not interested in piety but in more base objectives such as material gain and popularity; see his "Quṣṣāṣ," 127.

<sup>346</sup> Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:92.

<sup>347</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:231–232; Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 4:89; idem, Mashāhīr, 1:89.

<sup>348</sup> Ibn Ḥanbal, Zuhd, 247–248; Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 6:117–118.

<sup>349</sup> On Sa'd, see Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:377-378.

<sup>350</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 6:256.

job as a merchant because it did not accord with devotion to God. <sup>351</sup> He said to his colleagues: "I command you to give pious obedience to God and to asceticism in this world and to desire that which is God's. If you do this, God will love you for desiring what He has and people will love you for leaving them what the world has." Sulaym b. 'Itr, Ibrāhīm al-Taymī and Sa'īd b. Jubayr expressed their ascetic tendency through the more common avenue of seclusion from society and denial of worldly attractions. <sup>353</sup>

Two qussās, Abū al-Dardā' and Sham'ūn, displayed their piety by spurning conjugal relations. As for the illustrious Companion Abū al-Dardā', he devoted so many of his nights to prayer and fasting that his wife appealed to his "brother" Salman al-Farisi, saying, euphemistically: "Your brother does not have any need in this world." Salmān told Abū al-Dardā' to give God, his wife and his body their equal due. When Abū al-Dardā' told the Prophet of Salmān's advice, the Prophet said: "[Do] just as Salmān said."354 In similar fashion, Sham'ūn avoided his wife upon returning from battle by going to the mosque and devoting himself to prayer. When his wife asked him why he did so, he replied: "My heart still desires what has been described in His [God's] paradise: its clothes, its female companions and its niceties." The prospect of heavenly rewards—themes whose expression on the battlefield has already been attested through texts of martial qasas—still engaged him to the point that he was distracted from his temporal, marital relations. However, unlike Abū al-Dardā', who needed the intervention of the Prophet to change his mind, Sham'ūn assented to his wife's request. He confessed: "Of course, by God! You did not come to my mind. Now that I have remembered you, you deserve your rights from me."355

<sup>351</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 47:124, 156, 159.

Ibid., 47:141. This statement is quite similar to a Prophetic <code>hadīth</code> related from Sahl b. Sa'd al-Sā'idī which al-Nawawī included in his famous collection of forty <code>hadīths</code>. The tradition states that "a man came to the Prophet and said: 'O messenger of God, direct me to an act which, if I do it, will cause God to love me and people to love me.' He said, 'Renounce the world and God will love you, and renounce what people possess and people will love you.'" See <code>Sharh al-arba'in al-Nawawiyya</code>, composed by Aḥmad b. Sūda, 'Abd al-Qādir b. Shafrūn, Muḥammad al-Ṭayyib b. Kīrān and Muḥammad Banīs and edited by Najlā' al-Tijkānī (Rabat, 2010), 3:817.

<sup>353</sup> On Sulaym, see Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 72:275–276. On Ibrāhīm al-Taymī, see Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 4:7. On Sa'd, see Ibn Sa'd, Tabaqāt, 8:379.

<sup>354</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 47:115. For other examples of Abū al-Dardā's piety and asceticism, see Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 47:114, 124, 151, 156.

<sup>355</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 23:202.

Such absent-mindedness was not a trait of the Egyptian  $q\bar{a}ss$ /judge Sulaym b. 'Itr, known by the epithet "the ascetic" (al- $n\bar{a}sik$ ). In addition to his involvement in typical ascetic behavior such as absconding to the desert where he did not eat or drink for seven days, he was lauded for being able to recite the Qur'ān and have conjugal relations with his wife three or four times during the night. Upon his death, his wife stated: "He made his Lord happy and his wife happy."

Along with these various displays of asceticism, the  $quss\bar{a}s$ -ascetics were also reputed for being blessed in supernatural ways for their intense devotion. 'Abd al-Wāḥid b. Zayd, a colleague of al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, was miraculously rewarded for his piety. In spite of being paralyzed and bed-ridden, he was granted by God, in answer to his supplications, the temporary use of his faculties when he needed to use the restroom. Then, once he finished his ablutions, he was struck down again with paralysis.357 Sham'ūn also had miraculous acts attributed to him, like stilling a raging sea and recouping a needle that had fallen into the sea by appealing to God to return it to him. 358 When Mutarrif b. 'Abd Allāh was lied to, the perpetrator was struck dead.<sup>359</sup> Even death was not able to suppress the influence of their asceticism. The grave of the pious Sāliḥ b. Musarriḥ, the Khārijī rebel, became a pilgrimage site, while the soil from the grave of 'Abd Allāh b. Ghālib purportedly smelled like musk, prompting admirers to leave their pilgrimages to his grave-site with handfuls.<sup>360</sup> Even more astounding is the miraculous event of the death of Sa'īd b. Jubayr, whose head, after having been decapitated by al-Ḥajjāj, continued to say, "There is no god but God," until al-Ḥajjāj had Sa'īd's feet stuck into the mouth.361

While ascetic behavior is often associated with the denial of worldly pleasures, some qussas who were otherwise known for their piety appear to have shunned one of the traditional and easily discernible expressions of piety: the wearing of humble clothing—a practice possibly relating to the origins of

<sup>356</sup> Ibn 'Abd al-Ḥakam, Miṣr, 1:231; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 72:274-275.

Al-Jāḥiz, al-Burṣān wa-l-'urjān wa-l-'umyān wa-l-ḥūlān, ed. Muḥammad Mursī al-Khūlī (Cairo, 1972), 282–283; Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntaṭam fī tārīkh al-umam wa-l-mulūk, eds. Muḥammad 'Abd al-Qādir 'Aṭā and Muṣṭafā 'Abd al-Qādir 'Aṭā (Beirut, 1939), 7:268.

<sup>358</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 23:204. The miracle of the stilling of the sea finds a parallel in the well-known story of the miracle of Jesus's stilling of the sea (Matthew 8:23–27, Mark 4:39, Luke 8:22–25). The more enigmatic report about the needle betrays similarities with a lesser-known miracle of the Israelite prophet Elisha who recovered an iron axe head that had fallen into the water by causing it to float to the surface (2 Kings 6:1–7).

<sup>359</sup> Ibn al-Jawzī, Ṣifat, 3:222, 225.

<sup>360</sup> On Ṣāliḥ, see Ibn Qutayba, Maʿārif, 410. On ʿAbd Allāh, see Ibn Ḥanbal, Zuhd, 247.

<sup>361</sup> Ibn Qutayba, Ma'ārif, 445.

the term Sūfī.³6² Tamīm al-Dārī, Bakr b. 'Abd Allāh and Thābit al-Bunānī, for example, all reportedly wore nice and expensive clothes; another  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ, Abū al-Aḥwaṣ even wore silk.³6³ This disregard for expressing piety through the visibly appreciable renunciation of worldly pleasures was later affirmed by Ibn al-Jawzī in one of his criticisms of the quṣṣāṣ. He censured them for promoting weak  $had\bar{u}th$  that malign the rich and glorify poverty, though he asserted that the real scholars, the ' $ulam\bar{a}$ ', know the truth about this issue—a statement he supported with a Prophetic  $had\bar{u}th$  telling of the affluent Companions of the Prophet in paradise.³6⁴ Contrariwise, Ibn al-Jawzī also ironically asserted, following a famed Ḥanbalī predecessor, Ibn 'Aqīl, that the  $w\bar{a}$ 'iz dress in woolen clothes, have an emaciated body and eat little in order to draw attention away from his appearance and to his character and message.³6⁵ The reports of the conduct of some of the earliest quṣṣāṣ suggest that not every  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ- $w\bar{a}$ 'iz viewed their ascetic responsibilities in the same light.

One of the more common expressions of piety and penitence was weeping, al- $bak\bar{a}$ . Nine of the quss $\bar{a}$ s-ascetics were known for their weeping. Abū Idrīs al-Khawlānī emphasized the importance of weeping as a sign of penitence by saying: "Between heaven and hell is a desert that cannot be crossed except by the tears of the weepers." In Basra, two quss $\bar{a}$ s were known for their weeping: Thābit al-Bunānī asserted that the eyes that do not weep are no good and Yazīd b. Abān wept during his qas $\bar{a}$ s sessions.

Some quṣṣāṣ were not known as weepers yet they prompted weeping in their listeners. 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr caused the pious Ibn 'Umar to weep in his qaṣaṣ sessions, while Ibrāhīm al-Taymī evoked the same response in the Kufan

<sup>362 &</sup>quot;Taşawwuf," EI2, 10:313.

<sup>363</sup> On Tamīm, see Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 6:256; Ibn al-Jawzī, Ṣifat, 1:737; Dhahabī, Siyar, 2:447. On Bakr b. 'Abd Allāh, see Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:209. On Thābit, see Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:232. On Abū al-Aḥwaṣ, see Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:302.

<sup>364</sup> Ibn al-Jawzī, Mawdū'āt, 327–328.

<sup>365</sup> Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 26–27.

Meier has noted that the weepers, al-bakkā'ūn, were not a separate class of ascetics but were simply ascetics known for their copious weeping; see his "Bakkā'," EI2, 1:959–961.

<sup>367</sup> Ibn Kathīr, al-Bidāya wa-l-nihāya (Beirut, 1966), 2:53.

<sup>368</sup> On Thābit, see Abū Nuʻaym, Ḥilya, 2:366–367. On Yazīd, see Abū Nuʻaym, Ḥilya, 3:59–60; Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 75. In Yazīd's case, though, weeping was considered a liability since his devotion to worship (ʿibāda), characterized by his mourning, allegedly distracted him from being disciplined in ḥadīth; see Ibn Ḥibbān, Majrūḥīn, 3:98; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:404.

scholar Abū Wāʾil Shaqīq b. Salama. See In ʿAwn b. ʿAbd Allāhʾs sessions, weeping ruled both speaker and listener. ʿAwn reportedly wept until his beard dripped with tears. Salama b. Dīnār, himself a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$ , wept while attending 'Awn's sessions, and when asked why he was crying, he responded: "I learned ( $balaghan\bar{t}$ ) that the fire of hell does not touch the spot touched by tears shed because of one's fear of God." In contrast to these examples stands the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  Muḥammad b. Kaʿb, who reportedly hated to hear crying in his teaching sessions.

The Qāss as Scholar

The above analysis of the qussās and their associations with various religious disciplines reveals that the quṣṣāṣ of the Umayyad period were by no means merely popular religious teachers targeting the simple masses.<sup>373</sup> The contrary appears true. The qussās of this period included some of the most capable and respected religious authorities of the Islamic community.<sup>374</sup> Of the 108 names connected to qaṣaṣ, 74, or 69%, were generally considered reputable religious scholars (' $ulam\bar{a}$ '). This percentage includes only those who were considered reliable hadīth transmitters and is even higher if other scholars, such as Ka'b al-Aḥbār and 'Uthmān b. Abī al-'Ātika, who, for the most part, were viewed as legitimate scholars even though their reputations as hadīth transmitters were less than admirable, were added. Not only did the early qussās engage in virtually all aspects of the religiously-oriented activities of the community, they often played important roles in the development of the religious disciplines, notably Qur'an recitation, commentary, as well as figh and hadith. Furthermore, their involvement in the evolution of the foundations of the religion was supplemented with an interest in its practical outworkings, characterized by their associations with khaṭāba, waʿz, dhikr and asceticism.

The fine reputation of the early quṣṣāṣ was not lost on later Muslim scholars in spite of traditions disparaging the practice. Ibn al-Jawzī's Kitāb al-quṣṣāṣ

<sup>369</sup> On 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr, see Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 4:162, 169; Ibn al-Mubārak, Zuhd, 411; Abū Nu'aym, Ḥilya, 1:378; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 31:126. On Ibrāhīm al-Taymī, see Ibn Ḥanbal, Zuhd, 1:358; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 23:171.

<sup>370</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 47:69; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:338–339.

<sup>371</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 22:26.

<sup>372</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 7:419-420.

<sup>373</sup> For this view, see 'Athamina, "Qaṣaṣ," 54.

Jūda recognized this but stated that it applied primarily through the period of the Rāshidūn Caliphs; see his "Qaṣaṣ," 118.

wa-l-mudhakkirīn preserves this tension. He cites, in one instance, a tradition from Abū Qilāba 'Abd Allāh b. Zayd al-Jarmī (d.c. 104/722) who blamed the quṣṣāṣ for destroying religious knowledge ('ilm) and that one might sit with a  $q\bar{a}ss$  for a year and receive no benefit.<sup>375</sup> On the other hand, his list of the first gussās contains a number of reputable scholars of the early community.<sup>376</sup> Ibn al-Jawzī also related a number of reports from his Hanbalī master Ahmad b. Hanbal who praised the value of the qussās, in one instance describing them as "those who speak about paradise and hell, who arouse people to fear, and who are upright in intention and honest in matters of hadīth."377 Thus, even into the third/ninth century, the qussās were still considered capable of providing spiritual benefit to the community.<sup>378</sup> Dhahabī likewise recognized the reliability of the early qussās. He noted in his biography of Abū Idrīs al-Khawlānī that: "The  $q\bar{a}ss$  in the beginning had an outstanding image in both religious knowledge and practice." This anecdotal evidence is supported by the above statistical analysis of the qussās and by a comparison of the qussās to other religious disciplines and functions. These results also confirm the conclusions drawn in Chapter One about the textual diversity in qaṣaṣ. The associations of the qussās mirror their sayings, including tafsīr, ḥadīth, and figh sayings about the prophets and pietistic sayings. When taken together, the sayings of the quṣṣāṣ and their associations suggest that the quṣṣāṣ of the Umayyad period were predominantly mainstream and orthodox scholars.

<sup>375</sup> Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 132.

<sup>376</sup> Ibid., 42-52.

<sup>377</sup> Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 19 (translation taken from Swartz, 104). For other reports from Ibn Hanbal, see Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ 19–20.

Ibn al-Jawzī's concern was with how qaṣaṣ had been overtaken by unscrupulous men, and he clearly believed that this was a later progression which did not necessarily apply to the earliest quṣṣāṣ; see his Quṣṣāṣ, 20–21, 129–130. Studies on the quṣṣāṣ which depend largely on Ibn al-Jawzī's Kitāb al-quṣṣāṣ tend to overstate the negative image of the quṣṣāṣ, even when noting that Ibn al-Jawzī was supportive of the earliest quṣṣāṣ. This leaves the false impression that the quṣṣāṣ had always been largely unreliable scholars. See Goldziher, Muslim Studies II, 153–155 and especially Pauliny, "Quṣṣāṣ," 126–127.

<sup>379</sup> Dhahabī, Siyar, 4:275.

Qaṣaṣ Sessions: The Skills and Conduct of the Quṣṣāṣ

While many people of early Islam were known as religious teachers of various specializations, only a limited number, one hundred and nine according to this research, were identified as qussas. It appears that one important reason for this was that the qussas were not simply educators of religion, be it Qur'an recitation, tafsas, hadasth, and so forth, or morale officers for the military; they were performers. Of course, this is not meant to imply that they were, by virtue of being performers, merely showmen, "popular" preachers or charlatans. It does suggest, though, that a reputable qass was expected to possess more than religious knowledge ('ilm); he was to add to this skill the requisite oratorical skills for drawing out of his listeners some type of response, such as one to greater piety or to valor in battle.

To be sure, these traits were not characteristic of the qussas only. As we noted in the previous chapter, other public speakers, notably the khutabas, were also expected to possess knowledge and oratorical skills. The khutbas, for instance, certainly entailed aspects of a performance, namely direct address to an audience, elevation of the speaker above the audience, a strong-voiced and eloquent speaker, and even props, such as a sword or a bow. The khutbas, however, was a formal monologue; the khatabsilos was the speaker/performer and the audience listened. With the qussas, conversely, the performance was less formal and more interactive, incorporating both speaker and listener, so that qasas sessions took on lives of their own, sometimes to their detriment. In this sense, the performance aspect of the qasas session is one factor setting it apart from other religious sessions and presentations.

<sup>1</sup> See Qutbuddin, "Khuṭba," 180–181, 204–222.

<sup>2</sup> Qutbuddin, "Khuṭba," 204–214. While the leaning on the sword or bow by the khaṭīb was apparently a remnant of the practice of pre-Islamic judges, it certainly added to the performance of the khuṭba, in the least by conveying an image of authority for the khaṭīb. On the use of swords or bows, see Wensinck, "Khuṭba," EI2, 5:74; Qutbuddin, "Khuṭba," 210–211.

Wensinck noted that the audience was to listen and be silent. He quoted a tradition in Bukhārī: "He who says to his neighbor, 'listen,' has spoken a superfluous word." See Wensinck, "Khuṭba," *EI*2, 5:75. Qutbuddin showed that sometimes the audience could respond aloud with short answers to questions posed by the khaṭīb, though most often the questions were rhetorical; see her "Khuṭba," 216.

As is true with any public performance, a number of factors were important in a qa\$a\$ session. For our purposes, these factors fall under two rubrics: skills and conduct. Skills reflect the set of skills and traits that the  $q\bar{a}\$\$$  possessed, or at least that the ideal  $q\bar{a}\$\$$  possessed. These skills fall into three categories:  $lis\bar{a}n$ ,  $bay\bar{a}n$  and lim.

Additionally, the execution of a qaṣaṣ session entailed more than a qualified practitioner. The conduct of the session was also important in establishing its traditions and reputation, in both positive and negative ways. Expectations of proper behavior, the locations and times of the sessions, as well as the presence of malpractice in the sessions are just a few of the factors contributing to establishing the reputation of the qaṣaṣ sessions and, by extension, the quṣṣāṣ. Alongside these issues of the conduct of the session lay, subtly yet still discernibly, the question of the degree of formality in qaṣaṣ sessions; this is an issue that will be addressed throughout the analysis of the conduct of the quṣṣāṣ.

Skills

The effective performance of qaṣaṣ depended on a skilled practitioner. The set of skills that exemplified the skills an ideal  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  must possess was said to belong to one of the most respected  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  of the Umayyad period, Bilāl b. Saʻd. Bilāl enjoyed a stellar reputation as a  $had\bar{a}th$  transmitter and was known as "the Qur'ān reciter of Syria" as well as "the admonisher  $(w\bar{a}\lq iz)$  of Damascus." Not only did he excel in the religious sciences, he was also admired for his piety, and was, by all accounts, an outstanding scholar. In addition to all of this, he was the exemplary  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$ .

According to Ibn Ḥibbān, Bilāl possessed the three traits necessary for qaṣaṣ: "He was among those who was given lisān, bayān and 'ilm in qaṣaṣ." This means that he possessed a speaker's voice with its concomitant linguistic abilities (lisān), rhetorical skill (bayān) and religious knowledge ('ilm). The combination of these skills allowed him to produce "polished qaṣaṣ"—he is described as being hasan al-qaṣaṣ. Although these three traits, as a group, have been attributed only to Bilāl, the report clearly implies that the reason for his being such an effective  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  was that he possessed these traits and, therefore, they represent the skills that exemplified the ideal quṣṣāṣ in the Umayyad period. Indeed, gradations of these skills can be found among many of the early qussas. The skills thus provide us with a paradigm for identifying the specific characteristics expected in the qussas.

<sup>4</sup> See the Appendix # 6o.

<sup>5</sup> Ibn Ḥibbān, Mashāhīr, 115.

<sup>6</sup> Abū Zur'a al-Dimashqī, Tārīkh, 1:607; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 10:482; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 4:292.

Ilm

We have already seen in Chapter Two that the qussas were spread throughout the religious space of the early Islamic community, having been associated with at least nine other religious disciplines in the community. The discussion there showed that a significant number of the qussas of the early period were considered by the community to be reputable scholars noted for their 'ilm in such disciplines as Qur'an recitation, tassas, hadasth and sasing then that one of the traits distinguishing Bilāl b. Sa'd as a sas was his possession of religious knowledge, 'ilm.' And according to Abū Zur'a al-Dimashqī, there was no conflict between Bilal's possession of 'ilm and sas, as Bilāl to him "was one of the 'ulamā' in the caliphate of Hishām and was a sas of polished sas."

The  $qussas_s$  continued to play an active role in the religious education of the early community, and the fear that the community lost 'ilm with the passing away of the first generation of believers was a concern for many, and even affected the  $qussas_s$ . This concern prompted Yazīd b. Abī Sufyān to ask 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb to send people to him (i.e. in Syria) who taught the people the Qur'ān and the legal requirements of the faith (yu'allimuhum al-Qur'ān wayufaqqihuhum). Two of the three whom 'Umar sent to Yazīd were renowned scholars who were identified as  $qussas_s$ : Mu'ādh b. Jabal and Abū al-Dardā'. Later, the Basran qass 'Abd Allāh b. Ghālib considered his role as a qass to

<sup>7</sup> Ibn Ḥibbān, Mashāhīr, 115.

<sup>8</sup> Abū Zur'a al-Dimashqī, Tārīkh, 1:607.

<sup>9</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 11:80-81.

<sup>10</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 47:124, 137. The third scholar sent to Syria was 'Ubāda b. al-Ṣāmit.

include three objectives: teaching religious knowledge, warning others of the nearness of death and reminding the community that it was continually losing righteous believers to death, challenging them, presumably, to take up the mantle of that lost generation. He said: "We complain to you about the foolishness of our dreams and we give qaṣaṣ of our religious knowledge (naquṣṣu 'ilmanā), the closeness of our deaths and the departure of the righteous from among us." His last point echoes the statement of Ibn 'Abbās at the passing of the scholar/qāṣṣ Zayd b. Thābit: "Today a great amount of religious knowledge died." According to the qāṣṣ/scholar Saʿīd b. Jubayr, the damage to the community from the lack of religious knowledge was also a product of poor scholars; he was asked: "Why do the people perish?" He answered: "Because of their 'ulamā'." He answered: "Because of their 'ulamā'."

Along with those mentioned above, a number of qussas of the Umayyad period were celebrated for their religious knowledge. In Syria, Muʻadh and Abū al-Dardā' were joined by Kaʻb al-Aḥbār who was known for his 'ilm and wisdom¹⁴ and Abū al-Dardā' himself praised Kaʻb saying: "The son of the Ḥimyarī has much knowledge."¹⁵ The eminent Syrian scholar Makḥūl (d. 112–7/730–5) commended Abū Idrīs al-Khawlānī, the  $q\bar{a}ss$ , for his great religious knowledge.¹⁶ Later, in Syria, the two stepsons of Kaʻb al-Aḥbār, Nawf b. Faḍāla and Tubayʻ b. 'Āmir, were considered among the 'ulamā' of the region.¹† In Baṣra, Muṭarrif b. 'Abd Allāh said that he preferred 'ilm over 'ibāda, worship—a sentiment that later Islamic scholars did not normally associate with the qussas.¹® Mecca, prior to the turn of the first century, boasted the  $q\bar{a}ss$  Mujāhid b. Jabr as one of its great scholars.¹9 Meanwhile, Medina, in the first quarter of the second/eighth century, contained renowned qussas/'ulamā', such as Muḥammad b. Kaʻb al-Qurazī, ²⁰ Muḥammad b. Qays al-Madanī²¹ and 'Abd al-Raḥmān b.

<sup>11</sup> Ibn Ḥanbal, Zuhd, 247; Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 6:118.

<sup>12</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 5:311. See also Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:659–660.

<sup>13</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:380; Mizzi, Tahdhīb, 10:365.

Ibn Ḥajar, Iṣāba, 5:650–651; idem, Tahdhīb, 3:471. See also Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 47:113.

<sup>15</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Tabagāt, 9:449; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:471.

<sup>16</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 26:161–162. On Makḥūl, see Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 28:464–474.

On Nawf, see Ibn Hajar, Tahdhīb, 4:249–250. On Tubay', see Ibn Sa'd, Tabaqāt, 9:455.

<sup>18</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:142.

<sup>19</sup> Ibid., 8:28.

<sup>20</sup> Al-ʿIjlī, Maʿrifat al-thiqāt, ed. ʿAbd al-ʿAlīm ʿAbd al-ʿAzīm al-Bastawī (Medina, 1985), 2:251; Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 5:351; Ibn Manjuwayh, Rijāl Muslim, 2:204; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:685.

Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 7:511; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:681.

al-Qāsim.<sup>22</sup> The association of these qussas with religious knowledge certainly confirms its importance as an expected character trait of the early  $q\bar{a}s$ .

Lisān

The scholar who possessed lisān, literally "a tongue," is one who possessed a public speaker's voice. This incorporated a number of vocal qualities, such as volume, melodiousness and even fluency. In the case of Bilāl b. Sa'd, his description as having "a tongue" for qaṣaṣ meant that he possessed a loud voice, kāna jahīr al-ṣawt.<sup>23</sup> This trait was particularly important for Qur'ān recitation, especially in an age devoid of artificial amplification.<sup>24</sup> According to one tradition, the Prophet himself was the first to recite the Qur'ān with a loud voice and this was allegedly the reason for the revelation of Sūrat Banī Isrā'īl (17):110, "Don't speak loudly in thy prayer and don't be silent; adopt a middle course."<sup>25</sup> Other traditions claim that Ibn Mas'ūd was the first person to recite the Qur'ān loudly.<sup>26</sup> As a matter of fact, strength of voice was a characteristic of the quṣṣāṣ from the beginning: Tamīm al-Dārī, for example, was one of only two men (the other being Mu'ādh al-Qāri') who aroused the people from sleep because of the power of his voice in Qur'ān recitation.<sup>27</sup>

It seems having a loud voice that projected in qaṣaṣ and recitation would be appreciated at all times. Even in the third/ninth century, strength of voice was still considered an essential trait for the  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$ . Ibrāhīm b. Hānī, an apparent contemporary of al-Jāḥiẓ (d. 255/869), said: "Among the tools that complete the practice of qaṣaṣ is that the  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  be blind and a mature man (shaykh) whose voice travels far." While the need for the third trait of a loud voice seems logical, the former two are somewhat more perplexing, although they may intend to promote greater respect for the  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$ .

Yet not always was a loud voice in qaṣaṣ and recitation appreciated. When the  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  Ziyād al-Numayrī visited Anas b. Mālik, he was asked to recite from the Qur'ān. In his recitation, he raised his voice causing Anas to throw down a cloth that was covering his face and exclaim: "What is this? What is this? They Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 5:339; Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 7:62.

<sup>23</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 10:481; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 4:292.

<sup>24</sup> Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 4:292.

<sup>25</sup> Ibn Isḥāq, al-Sīra al-nabawiyya, ed. Ṭāhā 'Abd al-Ru'ūf Sa'd (Beirut, 1990), 2:155.

<sup>26</sup> Ibn Isḥāq, Sīra, 2:156.

<sup>27</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Tabaqāt, 6:258.

<sup>28</sup> Jāḥiz, Bayān, 1:93. I was not able to identify Ibrāhīm b. Hānī beyond the comments made by Hārūn, the editor, at 1:93, n. 4.

never used to act in this manner!" Why Ziyād's loud recitation was received so negatively while other qussas of the time were praised for theirs in unclear. It is worth noting, though, that, according to the tradition mentioned above, the Prophet himself was told to speak with a voice of medium strength in order to avoid driving people away with loud volume and drawing them too close by being soft. Anas's opposition could be rooted in a tradition like this. It is also possible that the overall reputation of the scholar influenced how his lisas was evaluated since Tamīm and Bilāl, both of whom were respected in the community, were commended for their strength of voice, while Ziyād, who was generally scorned by the community, was reprimanded.

A second praiseworthy vocal quality possessed by the quṣṣāṣ was melodiousness or sweetness, of particular importance in Qurʾān recitation. The qāṣṣ and famous Qurʾān reciter Ibn Masʿūd was reportedly one of four men whom the Prophet endorsed for the beauty of his recitation.<sup>31</sup> Later, the pious caliph 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz praised Muslim b. Jundab, a "Successor" and qāṣṣ, for his beautiful recitation of the Qurʾān: "He who takes pleasure in listening to an exquisite recitation of the Qurʾān, let him listen to the recitation of Muslim b. Jundab (man sarrahu an yasmaʿa al-Qurʾān ghaḍḍan, faʾl-yasmaʿ qirāʾat Muslim b. Jundab)."<sup>32</sup> Qurʾān recitation was not the sole domain where a rapturous voice was esteemed. 'Umar b. Dharr, for example, was blessed with such an enchanting voice that during the ḥājj, when he said the talbiya (labbayka Allāhumma labbayk), all other pilgrims fell silent due to the magnificence of his voice.<sup>33</sup>

A third component of someone's  $lis\bar{a}n$  was his fluency in language. By the far the most well-known possessor of this trait was the Basran  $q\bar{a}ss$  Mūsā b. Sayyār. Jāḥiz recorded that he was equally fluent in Arabic and Persian. In his  $tafs\bar{i}r$  sessions, he commented on a verse in Arabic to the Arabs on his right side and then in Persian to the Persians on his left. Jāḥiz said of him: "Two languages when they meet in one tongue will cause harm to the tongue's owner, but not in the case of Mūsā." This ability prompted Jāḥiz to call him one of the wonders of the world. Mūsā's linguistic abilities were not the only example

<sup>29</sup> Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 118 (translation taken from Swartz, 203).

<sup>30</sup> Ibn Isḥāq, Sīra, 2:155.

<sup>31</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 33:62.

<sup>32</sup> Jāḥiz, Bayān, 1:368. See also Ibn Mujāhid, Sabʿa, 59–60; Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 7:257; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:66.

<sup>33</sup> Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 21:337; Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 9:537.

Jāḥiz, Bayān, 1:368. See also Goldziher, Muslim Studies II, 153; Massignon, Essai, 146; Pellat, "Kāṣṣ," Elz 4:734; idem, Le milieu basrien, 110–111; 'Athamina, 'Qaṣaṣ," 61.

of the proficiency of his  $lis\bar{a}n$ . Jāḥiz also ranked him among the best Qur'ān reciters of his era.  $^{35}$

Joining Mūsā as an exemplar of fluency among the quṣṣāṣ was his younger contemporary and fellow Basran Qatāda b. Di'āma. Qatāda b. Di'āma was the son of a Bedouin father and a non-Arab mother who, however, was raised among the Bedouin—a muwallada. As a result, Qatāda was known to have been adroit in Arabic. This strength prompted him to relate hadāth with proper Arabic and inspired his students to do likewise. While Qatāda was sought out for his prowess in Arabic in Iraq, the  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  Muslim b. Jundab was leaving his mark on the language itself in Medina. Muslim, who was previously mentioned for the rapturous tone of his voice, ostensibly contributed to the evolution of the Arabic language in the city of Medina by being the first to pronounce the hamza there  $(k\bar{a}na \ ahl \ al-Mad\bar{u}na \ l\bar{a} \ yahmiz\bar{u}na \ hatt\bar{a} \ hamaza \ Ibn \ Jundab)$ .

The possession of a strong, melodious and fluent  $lis\bar{a}n$  was no doubt an admirable and sought after trait for a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$ , only within the proper parameters. Too little or too much of a good thing appears to have been deemed detrimental. On the one hand, according to the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  Bakr b. 'Abd Allāh, taciturnity compromised eloquence: "Lengthy periods of silence bring speech impediments." Such a sentiment emanating from a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  may come as little surprise. On the other hand, excess  $lis\bar{a}n$ , as in the case of the loudness of Ziyād's voice, was scorned. This latter point, though, surfaced as a criticism of misconduct in some  $qas\bar{s}s$  sessions rather than as a general condemnation of the  $qus\bar{s}s$ , as will be discussed below.

Bayān

A third skill possessed by the qāṣṣ Bilāl b. Sa'd was bayān—a skill including rhetorical abilities and style of speech.<sup>40</sup> While there may be some overlap between bayān and lisān, bayān, here is concerned more with style while lisān seems to emphasize mechanics and tone quality. As a result, bayān most often manifested itself in one's eloquence—a trait that also characterized other

<sup>35</sup> Jāḥiz, Bayān, 1:368.

<sup>36</sup> Yāqūt, Mu'jam al-udabā', 6:202.

<sup>37</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:229.

<sup>38</sup> Ibn Mujāhid, Sab'a, 59–60; Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 7:257. The sporadic use of the hamza persisted through the mid-second/mid-eighth century; see Abbott, Studies II, 92.

<sup>39</sup> Jāḥiz, Bayān, 1:272.

<sup>40</sup> On bayān, see G.E. von Grunebaum, "Bayān," El2, 1:1114–1116. On Bilāl b. Sa'd possessing bayān, see Ibn Ḥibbān, Mashāhīr, 115.

forms of public expression such as wa'z and  $khit\bar{a}ba.^{41}$  Al-Awzā'ī, for example, said that Bilāl was the most eloquent admonisher he had ever heard (wa-lam  $asma'w\bar{a}'iz^{an}$  qattu ablagha minhu). And just as was true with the trait of  $lis\bar{a}n$  finding exemplars in the early  $quss\bar{a}s$  like Tamīm al-Dārī,  $bay\bar{a}n$  among the  $quss\bar{a}s$  also dates to the earliest purveyors of the phenomenon and continued to be a sought after trait after the Umayyad period.

The first  $q\bar{a}ss$  of Mecca, 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr, was praised for being eloquent and well-spoken ( $bal\bar{\iota}gh^{an}$  wa- $fas\bar{\iota}h^{an}$ ).<sup>43</sup> In Medina, Muslim b. Jundab not only received praise for his contribution to language development and the beauty of his Qur'ān recitation, i.e. his  $lis\bar{a}n$ , he was also numbered among the most eloquent scholars (al- $fusah\bar{a}$ ) of this time.<sup>44</sup> This seemingly fundamental association between linguistic style and qasas persisted beyond the Umayyad period such that the 'Abbasid-era  $q\bar{a}ss$  Abu 'Umar Muḥammad al-Bāhilī al-Basrī (d.300/912) was also known for "the delicacy of his linguistic style."

 $Bay\bar{a}n$  as a component of the style of the individual  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  extended further than his own personal linguistic skills into the style of the sessions over which he presided. His rhetorical style therefore influenced how he framed his qisas. As was observed in Chapter One, one method adopted by a number of qusas was to express their qisas through rhetorical questions. Ibrāhim b. Yazīd, for example, asked his audience who among them expected to be kept from trials in this life knowing that even the prophet Abraham faced trials. Abū Idrīs al-Khawlānī, in order to launch into a qisas about John the Baptist, asked those around him if they knew who was the best person in terms of food (man kana atyab al-nas taraman). The unidentified qass who interpreted the verse of the smoke did likewise by asking his audience: "Do you know what that smoke is?" And al-Faḍl b. T̄sā told his audience to "ask the earth, "Who divided your days and planted your trees and harvested your fruit?"

For the necessity of eloquence in the khuṭba, for example, see Qutbuddin, "Khuṭba," 205–206.

<sup>42</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 10:485; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 4:293.

&#x27;Ijlī, Ma'rifa, 2:118. 'Ubayd's eloquence continued in his son, 'Abd Allāh, though he was not identified as a qāṣṣ. He was said to have been "among the most eloquent people of Mecca (min afṣaḥ al-nās min ahl Makka)." See Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:34.

Ibn Mujāhid, Sab'a, 59–60; Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 7:257; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:66.

<sup>45</sup> Pedersen, "Islamic Preacher," 236.

<sup>46</sup> Țabarī, Tafsīr, 13:228 (at Sūrat Ibrāhīm [14]:35–36). See Chapter One, 36–37.

Ibn Abī Shayba, Muşannaf, 7:74; Ibn Kathīr, Bidāya, 2:53. See Chapter One, 37–38.

<sup>48</sup> Țabarī, Tafsīr, 25:111 (at Sūrat al-Dukhān [44]:10–12). See Chapter One, 31.

<sup>49</sup> Jāḥiz, Bayān, 1:308. See Chapter One, 16–17.

Some quṣṣāṣ, like Yazīd b. Abān and 'Awn b. 'Abd Allāh, turned such questions back to themselves.<sup>50</sup> Yazīd b. Abān, in fact, posed questions to both himself and his audience. He asked himself: "Woe to you, Oh Yazīd! Who is going to reconcile you with your Lord? Who is going to fast for you and pray for you?" Then in an effort to elicit tears for the foreboding approach of death, he asked his listeners: "Why do you not weep?"<sup>51</sup>

By using the rhetorical and pedagogical device of posing questions to the audience, these quspastasp

This component of performance in a qaṣaṣ session is fully evident in the actions of the unidentified  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  from Jordan who was with Muʻāwiya b. Abī Sufyān in al-Jābiya. This  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  held sessions and: "If a man on the fringes of the group stood up to leave, he said, 'Would you like me to tell you the words which shake the throne of God and the trees of paradise?' We said, 'Certainly.'" Once the  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  realized that he was losing his audience, he did what any good performer or speaker does: he changed pace and tactic in order to draw the attention of his audience back to him. He accomplished this by implying that he was privy to some type of "inside" information and was willing to divulge it to his audience. Falling for the tease, the crowd stayed, saying, "Certainly." This is performance par excellence.

The ability of some qussas to purposefully and effectively manipulate the emotions of the audience was further testament to the importance of style as an aspect of performance in qasas. This type of bayan, or rhetorical ability, was clearly a facet of the qasas concern with performance, reflecting his awareness of the emotional wants and needs of the audience. Two qussas, Saʿīd b. Jubayr and 'Aṭā' b. Yasār, were particularly adept at swaying the emotions of their audiences, swinging them between the poles of sadness and joy. It was

<sup>50</sup> On 'Awn, see Chapter One, 21.

<sup>51</sup> Abū Nuʿaym al-Iṣfahānī, Ḥilya, 3:59–60; Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 75. See Chapter One, 21–22.

<sup>52</sup> Ibn Abī Shayba, Muṣannaf, 7:74. See Chapter One, 32–38.

<sup>53</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 68:128. See Chapter One, 29–30.

said of both that they gave qiṣaṣ that made their listeners cry, then told qiṣaṣ making them laugh.<sup>54</sup> These men appear to have kept their audiences needs in mind and to have left them emotionally satisfied from the performance.

This was precisely the advice 'Ā'isha allegedly gave to 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr, the first  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ of Mecca. She told him to lighten up on the people with his qaṣaṣ because it was "heavy" ( $thaq\bar{u}l$ ) with the potential of boring them. <sup>55</sup> Furthermore, since boredom was a potential consequence of qaṣaṣ, 'Ā'isha recommended to 'Ubayd that he only give qaṣaṣ every other day in order to allow the people to rest. <sup>56</sup> An alternate version of this tradition cautions of an even more damaging consequence for the listener. In it, 'Ā'isha tells 'Ubayd that he go easy in his qaṣaṣ because "dhikr kills." <sup>57</sup> She also reportedly told Ibn Abī al-Sā'ib, the  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ of the people of Medina, to give qaṣaṣ three times a week, so as not to bore the people and to only interrupt them and speak to them if they asked him. <sup>58</sup> Indeed the same sentiment has also been attributed to 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz. <sup>59</sup>

Certainly boredom is the death knell of any performance. While some religious rites, by virtue of their obligatory nature, always draw the faithful into attendance, a boring  $q\bar{a}ss$  had a bleak future. Ā'isha's concern is one that has already been addressed in Chapter Two. There we noted that qasas maintained a close connection with dhikr (recollection) and wa's (admonition) such that the difference between it and these two phenomena was at times indiscernible. It appears, though, that the light-heartedness 'Ā'isha advocated and Sa'īd and 'Aṭā' seem to have perfected was one characteristic setting qasas apart from these other disciplines. Thus, while wa's and dhikr always struggled to entertain because the admonition that is characteristic of them has always been, and still remains, as 'Ā'isha said, "heavy" ( $thaq\bar{u}l$ ), qasas, with its potential for levity, transcended that barrier. Herein lays the importance of bayan to qasas.

Not all scholars concurred on the importance of cheerfulness in meetings of religious instruction, however. The medieval scholar Ibn al-Jawz $\bar{i}$ , drawing on

On Sa'd, see al-Ibshīhī, al-Mustaṭraf fī kull fann mustaẓraf, ed. Mufīd Muḥammad Qumayḥa (Beirut, 1983), 2:505. On 'Aṭā', see Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 40:447.

<sup>55</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:24; Ibn Abī Khaythama, Akhbār al-Makkiyyīn, 248.

<sup>56</sup> Fākihī, Akhbār, 2:339.

<sup>57</sup> Ibn Abī Khaythama, Akhbār al-Makkiyyīn, 250-251.

<sup>58</sup> Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 6:217; Ibn Shabba, Madīna, 1:13; Ibn Ḥibbān, Ṣaḥīḥ, 3:258. In an almost identical version of the report, for which Ibn 'Abbās is the transmitter, there is no mention of Ibn Abī al-Sā'ib and the verb that he uses is not qaṣṣa but ḥaddithu; see Bukhārī, Ṣaḥīḥ, 5:2334. See also Abū Ya¹lā, Musnad, 7:448; Ṭabarānī, *Du*ʿāʾ, 37; Ibn Abī Ḥātim, Ilal, 2:248.

<sup>59</sup> Ibn Rajab, Jāmi' al-'ulūm wa-l-ḥikam, eds. Shu'ayb al-Arnā'ūţ and Ibrāhīm Bājis (Beirut, 1997), 267.

traditions from 'Alī b. Abī Ṭālib and al-Sha'bī, advocated that the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  refrain from connecting too closely with his audience through humor and interpersonal associations; 'Alī purportedly commanded: "Do not mix learning with laughing, for the people will not be able to assimilate it (learning)."<sup>60</sup>

Clearly, the  $q\bar{a}ss$ , as a performer, had as his goal the assimilation of his message by his listeners. In addition to using humor to achieve this goal, some qussās allegedly employed saj', commonly known as rhymed prose and another somewhat controversial practice in Islam.<sup>61</sup> As Frolov has pointed out, saj' was widespread prior to and subsequent to the rise of Islam in spite of being shunned by some Muslims. 62 Thus, even though it was condemned after the rise of Islam for its association with the pre-Islamic soothsayers (kuhhān), in reality it continued to be used throughout the early period and beyond.<sup>63</sup> In the tradition mentioned above, 'Ā'isha, or possibly Ibn 'Abbās, warned the Medinan  $q\bar{a}$ şş Ibn Abī al-Sā'ib to not bore the people with his qaşaş; she also warned him to avoid saj' in his statements, arguing that the Prophet did not do this and his Companions hated it.64 Regardless of the authenticity of this tradition, it certainly implies that the quṣṣāṣ used saj' and seeks to limit its practice. Jāḥiz, on the other hand, specifically identified the  $q\bar{a}$ ss al-Fadl b. Īsā al-Riqāshī as having used saj'in his qaṣaṣ.65 As 'Athamina has noted, Jāḥiz did not oppose the use of saj; rather, he saw in its rejection an attempt to repulse any potential influence exerted by the kuhhān al-'arab of the Jāhiliyya. Once this potential threat was suppressed, saj' was allowed.66

According to al-Najm,  $saj^c$  was an important method used by the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  to influence their listeners, to play on their emotions and to draw them into their pronouncements. <sup>67</sup> 'Athamina, however, believed that the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ 's use of  $saj^c$  in statements to the masses was counter-productive and "interfered with the instructional aims to which qaṣaṣ was devoted," since the people, because of their limited and possibly non-existent education, were not able to understand

<sup>60</sup> Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 136.

Frolov, following Goldziher, argued that the identification of saj 'as "rhymed prose" is accurate when applied to later expressions such as maqāmāt or rasā'il, but that saj 'in earlier times was "nothing but primitive verse." See his Arabic Verse, 98.

See his excellent summary of the use of saj in early Islam and the mixed response by Muslim scholars to it, even in regard to its use in the Qur'ān; Arabic Verse, 105–110.

<sup>63</sup> Ibid.

<sup>64</sup> Ibid.

<sup>65</sup> Jāḥiz, Bayān, 1:290. Abū Nuʿaym gives examples of al-Faḍl's sajʿ sayings; see his Ḥilya, 6:223–224; al-Najm, Quṣṣāṣ, 75–76.

<sup>66 &#</sup>x27;Athamina, "Qaṣaṣ," 62. He is citing here Jāḥiz, Bayān, 1:289–290.

<sup>67</sup> Al-Najm, Quṣṣāṣ, 68-69, 73, 75.

their statements.<sup>68</sup> The reality seems to lie somewhere between these two poles. In fact, in spite of the above traditions, it does not seem that  $saj^c$  was a major component of qaṣaṣ. It is noteworthy, for instance, that there are no examples of  $saj^c$  among the qaṣaṣ listed in Chapter One. Furthermore, it is hard to imagine that the tradition attributed to 'Ā'isha forbidding the quṣṣāṣ to use  $saj^c$  was transmitted (or, for that matter, fabricated) if  $saj^c$  had not been perceived, at least in some circles, as potentially damaging to broad segments of society. If the masses failed to understand  $saj^c$  (for instance), then little need for a tradition prohibiting it remained. In addition, the widespread use of  $saj^c$  in early Islam, including its presence in the Qur'ān, in statements prior to battles, in orations by prominent men of early Islam, such as Abū Bakr, Ibn al-Zubayr and al-Ḥajjāj, and in other forums, suggests that it was readily comprehensible by the simple folk of the time.<sup>69</sup>

A third and equally contentious expression of  $bay\bar{a}n$  in  $qa\bar{s}a\bar{s}$  was poetry. In spite of reports demeaning poetry, like that from the Prophet alleging that he liked neither poets nor the insane/possessed  $(majn\bar{u}n)$ ,  $^{70}$  poetry remained important in the Islamic community, even during the lifetime of the Prophet, who used Ḥassān b. Thābit as "his accredited panegyrist." The community's knotty rapport with poetry is evident in the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  al-Aswad b. Sarī's relationship with the Prophet. According to Ibn 'Abd al-Barr, al-Aswad, the eventual first  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  of Basra, was a polished poet  $(sh\bar{a}s\bar{s}m\mu hsin)$ ," and indeed the one recorded example of his  $qis\bar{s}s\bar{s}$  is a verse of poetry. His attachment to poetry was, in fact, long, harkening back to the era of the Prophet. He allegedly recited poetry to the Prophet, except when 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb entered into their presence. At such times, the Prophet told al-Aswad to stop his recitation because 'Umar "is a man who does not like trivial pleasures ( $hadh\bar{a}$  rajal  $l\bar{a}$  yuhibb  $al-b\bar{a}til$ )."

Along with al-Aswad, two other qussas gave poetry as part of their qasas. Abū Hurayra, a contemporary of al-Aswad and also close Companion of the Prophet, gave a qissa including a poem about the virtues of the Prophet.<sup>76</sup> In

<sup>68 &#</sup>x27;Athamina, "Qaşaş," 62.

<sup>69</sup> For the extent of the use of saj' in early Islam, see Frolov, Arabic Verse, 105–134.

<sup>70</sup> Fākihī, Akhbār, 4:87.

<sup>71</sup> T. Fahd, "Shā'ir," EI2, 9:226-227.

<sup>72</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:41; Ibn 'Abd al-Barr, Isti'āb, 1:89; Abū Nu'aym al-Isfahānī, Ma'rifat al-ṣaḥāba, ed. 'Ādil b. Yūsuf al-'Azzāzī (Riyadh, 1998), 1:270.

<sup>73</sup> Ibn 'Abd al-Barr, Istīʿāb, 1:89.

See a discussion of this qiṣṣa/poem in Chapter One, 25.

<sup>75</sup> Abū Nuʻaym, Maʻrifa, 1:271.

<sup>76</sup> Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 25:13-14. See Chapter One, 39.

Basra, the eminent al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī gave a qiṣṣa containing verses on the meaning of death.

Some qussas were known to be poets although it is unclear if they ever used poetry as part of their qasas. Indeed, the various perceptions of poetry found throughout the community are reflected in the reputations of these qussas/poets. For the reputable Qatāda, his expertise in poetry was an advantage and was sought after by other scholars of his time. For 'Imrān b. 'Iṣām and al-Nahhās b. Qahm, on the other hand, their involvement in poetry seems to have in no way ameliorated their bad reputations.

Dharr's eloquence and usefulness in the political struggles of the community seems to have been bequeathed to his son 'Umar, and it is through his experience that the danger associated with qaṣaṣ becomes evident. 'Umar, whom we have already encountered as one who possessed a spell-binding

<sup>77 &#</sup>x27;Abd al-Razzāq, Muṣannaf, 3:220. See Chapter One, 23.

<sup>78</sup> Yāqūt, Mu'jam al-udabā', 6:202; Ibn Khallikhān, Wafayāt, 2:513–514.

On 'Imrān, see Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:320; Appendix # 32. On al-Nahhās, see Fākihī, Akhbār, 1:307; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:243; Appendix # 103. It is noteworthy that al-Nahhās, who was considered an untrustworthy ḥadīth transmitter, has only a few ḥadīth connected to him, one of which is that the Companions of the Prophet recited poetry while circumambulating the Kaʿba. This practice apparently had roots in the pre-Islamic period as attested in Hishām b. al-Kalbī's Kitāb al-aṣnām in which he noted that Quraysh would circumambulate the Kaʿba while reciting verses in praise of their three goddesses (Manāt, Allāt and al-ʿUzza), verses which became known notoriously as the "Satanic Verses." See Hishām b. al-Kalbī The Book of Idols, trans. by Nabih Amin Faris (Princeton, 1952), 16–17.

<sup>80</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Tabaqāt, 8:410; Khalīfa, Tārīkh, 280; Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 2:1055.

<sup>81</sup> Tabarī, Tārīkh, 2:1055.

<sup>82</sup> Khalīfa, Tārīkh, 280.

voice, was, like his father, an eloquent ( $bal\bar{u}gh$ )  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  and effective propagandizing force. He gave  $qa\bar{s}a\bar{s}$  and incited the supporters of the Umayyads in Wāsiṭ against the 'Abbāsids in 132/750.83 He was joined in this venture by al-'Awwām b. Ḥawshab, and it was by virtue of their apparent effectiveness in rousing the populace against the 'Abbāsids that they were two of the three men who were not granted amnesty when the region fell to the new dynasty.84 'Umar's life, though, was eventually spared because of the intercession of Ziyād b. 'Ubayd Allāh.85

It is worth noting that 'Umar and al-'Awwām were quite similar in scholarly reputation and political practice. Both men were considered reputable  $had\bar{u}th$  and religious scholars and both engaged in a somewhat usual "qaṣaṣ" practice of inciting soldiers to fight. However, according to the sources, only 'Umar was a  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$ , and a major trait possessed by 'Umar not by al-'Awwām was the former's possession of eloquence and a beautiful voice. It may be, then, that 'Umar's  $bay\bar{a}n$  was the trait that set him apart from al-'Awwām as a  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$ .

Conduct

The performance of the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  depended not only on his own skills as a scholar and speaker, it also incorporated practical aspects associated with the conduct of the session itself. The conduct in a qasas session included both the actions of the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  as well as the format of his sessions. Five issues appear to be particularly relevant in this regard: the decorum of the session, the posture of the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$ , the location of the sessions, the times they were held and various malpractices of the qussas. It is these five features that the sources emphasize when describing the sessions themselves. An attendant issue lingering just below the surface of each of these is a question about the degree of formality of the qasas sessions, i.e. the degree to which a qasas session was a formal or informal meeting, aspects located in a number of the practices of the qussas.

Decorum

The type of decorum expected in a qaṣaṣ session indicates much about how the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}s$  were perceived by the community. The Meccan legal scholar 'Aṭā' b. Abī Rabāḥ (d.c. 115/733) described the etiquette expected in a qaṣaṣ session by comparing it to the most formal expression of religious education, the official sermon (khutba). His evaluation suggests that the difference between the khutba and the qissa is based on the conduct/decorum of the session rather than the content of the teaching, particularly in regard to the degree of formality expected in each. Ibn Jurayj (d. 150/767) posed the problem to 'Aṭā':

<sup>83</sup> Țabarī, Tārīkh, 3:69–70; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 16:94; Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 8:404–405.

<sup>84</sup> Țabarī, Tārīkh, 3:69–70; Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 8:404–405.

<sup>7</sup> Tabarī,  $T\bar{a}r\bar{k}h$ , 3:69–70. Why 'Umar was spared and al-'Awwām was not is unclear. Could it be that his prowess as a  $q\bar{a}ss$  made him particularly valuable to Ziyād?

"So, the qaṣaṣ of the qāṣṣ, is something different than the khuṭba of the imām on Friday. Can I engage in dhikr to God while listening to him (i.e. the qāṣṣ) and trying to pay attention to him?" He ['Aṭā'] said, "Yes. You can sit with him if you want and leave him if you want and raise your voice during some of the recollections." I [Ibn Jurayj] said, "So if someone sneezed and said 'al-ḥamdu li-llāh', can I bless him?" He said, "Certainly." I said, "Can another person and I talk while listening to him?" He said, "Yes, but if you praised God (tasabbuḥ) and recalled God (tadhakkur), this would be preferable to me."87

'Aṭā' confirmed for Ibn Jurayj that the atmosphere in the qaṣaṣ session was more lax and freewheeling than the khuṭba. Since the Friday oration of the  $im\bar{a}m$  was a formal meeting, strict decorum, in particular silence and attention to the oration, was preserved.<sup>88</sup> In the qaṣaṣ sessions, conversely, little discipline was required.

According to 'Aṭā', the laxity in the qaṣaṣ session was expressed in a number of ways. First, the  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  did not demand one's full attention. While sitting in his session, the listener engaged in his own religious exercise of dhikr and essentially ignored the instruction of the  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$ . Thus, secondly, the listener came and went as he saw fit and said his dhikr audibly and not simply to himself. This aspect of the atmosphere in the qaṣaṣ session was apparent in the sessions of the Jordanian  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  at al-Jābiya with Muʿāwiya. At some point in the session, someone stood up to leave the session, obviously having felt no obligation to wait until the  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  was finished. Be Thirdly, interaction between the attendees was also allowed so that if someone sneezed, he received a blessing, and was able to carry on a conversation with a friend (if he desired).

However, while 'Aṭā' portrayed the qaṣaṣ session as an unfettered affair such that one did almost as he pleased in it, this did not mean that he believed one

<sup>86</sup> On 'Aṭā', see J. Schacht, "'Aṭā' b. Abī Rabāḥ," EI2, 1:730.

<sup>87 &#</sup>x27;Abd al-Razzāq, Muṣannaf, 3:218. Ibn Jurayj is 'Abd al-Malik b. 'Abd al-'Azīz b. Jurayj; on him, see Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 18:338–354.

<sup>88</sup> See above 153, n. 3.

<sup>89</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 68:128.

act in a laissez-faire manner. In fact, according to this report, 'Aṭā' personally maintained that one actively and reverently participate in the session, suggesting that he viewed the session as worthy of respect and demureness.

Yet 'Aṭā' allegedly did not always uphold his own standard. A certain Ṭalḥa b. 'Ubayd Allāh b. Kurayz (n.d.)<sup>90</sup> saw 'Aṭā' engaged in a conversation with the distinguished scholar and  $q\bar{a}ss$  'Ubayd b. 'Umayr while another, unidentified  $q\bar{a}ss$  was giving his qasas near-by. Ṭalḥa said to 'Aṭā' and 'Ubayd:

"Do you not want to listen to the dhikr and to be deemed worthy at the appointed time [before God]?" They ('Aṭā' and 'Ubayd) looked at me (Ṭalḥa) and then continued their conversation. So I (Ṭalḥa) repeated it to them and they continued their conservation. So I did it a third time and they looked at me and said, "That [meaning, "listening"] is for prayer time." Then they recited the verse: "And when the Qur'ān is recited, give ear to it and heed it" (Sūrat al-A'rāf [7]:204).91

The two scholars, one of whom, 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr, was himself a famous  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$ , felt no compulsion to listen to the unidentified  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  because the conditions that demanded silence and giving heed, i.e. prayer time and the recitation of the Qur'ān, did not exist during the  $qas\bar{s}s$  session. Nonetheless, while 'Aṭā' and 'Ubayd upheld the letter of the law, they did not abide by its spirit, even according to 'Aṭā''s own opinion, which, as was mentioned above, encouraged active participation in the session.

Not only was interaction between the attendees during a qaṣaṣ session apparently acceptable, it also appears that qaṣaṣ sessions were in essence interactive sessions in which the  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  allowed for and, at times, even encouraged input and questions from the audience. As we saw in Chapter One, the Prophet, while giving qaṣaṣ from the pulpit of the mosque, allowed Abū al-Dardā' to interject a question about the meaning of a verse from the Qur'ān.  $^{92}$  Ibn 'Umar also interrupted Ibn Mas'ūd while he was standing and giving qaṣaṣ by asking him about "the straight path (al-ṣirāṭ  $al-mustaq\bar{u}m$ )." $^{93}$  Likewise, the eminent

<sup>90</sup> Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 13:424–426. He is not to be confused with the famous Ṭalḥa b. 'Ubayd Allāh b. 'Uthmān; see W. Madelung, "Ṭalḥa b. 'Ubayd Allāh," *EI*2, 10:161–162; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 13:412–424.

<sup>91</sup> Țabarī,  $Tafs\bar{u}r$ , 9:163; Ibn Kathīr,  $Tafs\bar{u}r$ , 2:282. Tha labī identified the speaker as a Qur'ān reciter (al- $q\bar{u}r\bar{u}$ ); see his Kashf, 4:321.

<sup>92</sup> Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 14:311–312, 45:483. See also the discussion of the qissa in Chapter One, 23.

<sup>93</sup> Ibn Waḍḍāḥ, Bidaʻ, 177.

Syrian  $q\bar{a}ss$  Abū Idrīs al-Khawlānī purportedly sat on the steps of the mosque in the evenings where he gave qasas, related  $had\bar{u}th$  and fielded questions from his listeners who sat on the steps below him. Habū Idrīs also gave qasas in the mosque in response to inquiries made by those who attended Qur'ān recitation and study circles in the mosque. When a group came across a sajda verse, they sought out Abū Idrīs to recite the verse for them. He then led them in prostrations repeating the sajda up to twelve times, presumably in order to solidify the proper recitation of the verse in the minds of the inquirers. Then, when the circle of students finished their recitation, Abū Idrīs began giving qasas. At some later time, this order was reversed so that qasas came first and the recitation came afterward (thumma quddima al-qasas ba'da dhālika wa akhkharū al- $qir\bar{a}$ 'a).

These reports indicate that qaṣaṣ sessions were collegial affairs, promoting interaction between the  $q\bar{a}ss$  as teacher and his students. Only when the student was obstinate or directly challenged the teaching of the  $q\bar{a}ss$  does the  $q\bar{a}ss$ seem to have taken offense. Thus, we have the example of the Prophet's frustration with Abū al-Dardā' for repeating the same question as if the Companion was surprised by the Prophet's response and not entirely convinced of its validity.97 Also, Abū Idrīs al-Khawlānī allegedly expelled a student from his qaşaş session when the student challenged him on a hadīth that he related.98 Even the report we encountered in Chapter One about the unlearned  $q\bar{a}ss$ whom al-Sha'bī confronted for having alleged that the end of days would be announced by two trumpets instead of one indicates that the qussas faced limits in the amount of opposition they allowed in their sessions.<sup>99</sup> Nevertheless, qasas sessions were essentially teaching sessions fostering an environment of open inquiry. This aspect set it apart from other public pronouncements, namely the khutba, both decidedly more formal and requiring a level of decorum not demanded in qaṣaṣ sessions.

<sup>94</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 26:163.

The text gives no indication about the content of his qaṣaṣ but it seems safe to say that it had something to do with Qur'ān recitation and interpretation (tafsūr) since this was the context in which he gave his qaṣaṣ, not unlike those of the Prophet and Ibn Mas'ūd.

<sup>96</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 26:162–163. It seems likely that the last portion of the report which tells of the reversal of order merely indicates that when a group would come to Abū Idrīs he would give qaṣaṣ (tafsīr?) to them before answering their question about the recitation of the verse or that he would answer their question in the process of giving qaṣaṣ. It is unclear what prompted the change.

<sup>97</sup> See Chapter One, 23.

<sup>98</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 26:163.

<sup>99</sup> See Chapter One, 30.

Posture

The distinguished scholar Adam Mez claimed that the difference between "official" preachers, by whom he meant "the Friday preacher," and "unofficial" preachers, or as he calls them elsewhere, "popular" preachers, was that "while the former preached standing, the latter did so sitting on a stool." However, he also noted that the early qussās of Egypt combined both positions by reciting the Qur'an while standing and delivering qasas while seated. 101 Later, Merlin Swartz, building on Mez's evaluation, noted that 'Umar b. al-Khattāb's decision to allow Tamīm al-Dārī to relate gasas while standing indicated that Tamīm was acting in an official capacity, as opposed to "the free qāss" who gave his qaṣaṣ while seated. <sup>102</sup> Indeed, the fact that the sources, at times, emphasize whether a  $q\bar{a}ss$  was standing or sitting does seem to imply that there is a connection between that posture and how "official," or formal, the qaṣaṣ session was. In the case of the report of 'Umar granting permission to Tamīm, standing may be a sign he had been "officially appointed." 103 Yet, as we have noted above, qaşaş sessions were conducted along a graded line of formality, such that even when standing, certain expectations in decorum were not enforced, although we expected the posture of standing to have required greater decorum from both the speaker and the audience than the posture of sitting. In spite of this, the distinction between an "official," or formal, meeting and an "unofficial," or informal, meeting does not seem to have hinged on the posture of the  $q\bar{a}ss$  as either standing or sitting; other factors seem to have been active.

The sources preserve for us a number of references to the posture of the qussas of early Islam while they related qasas. According to a tradition about the Prophet, as we have already seen above, he gave a qissa, engaging in Qur'ānic exegesis, while standing at the pulpit of the mosque. Ibn Mas'ūd also stood when giving qasas on Mondays and Thursdays, as was noted above as well. Another Companion of the Prophet Abū Hurayra gave a qissas while standing on Friday, the day of congregational prayer, as did an unknown qassas identified only as Abū Shayba. Tamīm al-Dārī was granted permission from

<sup>100</sup> Mez, Renaissance, 331–332. Swartz followed Mez in this assessment, see his translation of Ibn al-Jawzī's Quṣṣāṣ (108, n. 2).

<sup>101</sup> Mez, Renaissance, 332.

<sup>102</sup> See Swartz's translation of Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 108, n. 2.

<sup>103</sup> Ibid.

<sup>104</sup> See above 168, n. 92.

<sup>105</sup> See Chapter One, 14, 46.

<sup>106 &#</sup>x27;Abd al-Ghanī al-Maqdisī, Aḥādīth al-shi'r, ed. Khayr Allāh al-Sharīf (Damascus, 1993), 53.
On Abū Shayba, see Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 11:290.

the Caliph 'Umar to give qaṣaṣ once a week while standing.<sup>107</sup> This was eventually increased by 'Uthmān to three times a week while standing.<sup>108</sup> The first  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ of Egypt, Sulaym b. 'Itr, as well as one of his successors, Marthad b. Wadā'a, also gave qaṣaṣ while standing.<sup>109</sup>

These examples show that the meaning behind standing when giving qa$a$ is unclear. First, standing when giving qa$a$ was practiced both during the Friday meeting, as in the case of Abū Hurayra and Abū Shayba, and at other times during the week, as in the case of Ibn Mas'ūd and Tamīm al-Dārī. Moreover, the day when the Prophet, Sulaym b. 'Itr and Marthad b. Wadā'a gave qa$a$ is unknown. Thus, contrary to Mez's assessment, "official" status was not necessarily connected to standing when preaching on Friday. Secondly, even when standing, the qu$a$a$, namely the Prophet and Ibn Mas'ūd, interacted with their audiences suggesting that their sessions were conducted according to a lesser degree of formality than what was expected from the "official" khutba, for example.

Although a number of qussas gave their qisas while standing, the default posture of qasas seems to have been sitting down. This practice, like that of giving qasas while standing, allegedly found precedent in the practice of the Prophet. Furthermore, the practice of sitting while giving qasas existed during the time of the Prophet's Companions, as evident in reports about 'Abd Allāh b. Rawāḥa, Abū Dharr, Ibn Mas'ūd and al-Aswad b. Sarī'. III In fact, most references to qasas sessions tell of the  $q\bar{a}ss$  and his listeners seated together. As we noted above, Abū Idrīs al-Khawlānī, for example, gave qasas while sitting on the steps of the mosque where he received and answered questions from his listeners. Illa This practice appears to be more of an informal and, therefore, unofficial forum for qasas, even though the public nature of his discourses and his position as an appointee of 'Abd al-Malik as both a  $q\bar{a}ss$  and a judge suggested that while his sessions seemed to be "unofficial," he himself may have been "official." The  $q\bar{a}ss$  Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Sulamī expressed

<sup>107</sup> Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 22.

<sup>108 &#</sup>x27;Abd al-Razzāq, Muşannaf, 3:219. For more analysis of this tradition, see Chapter Four.

<sup>109</sup> For Sulaym, see Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 72:277; Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 128. For Marthad, see Fasawī, Ma'rifa, 2:248.

<sup>110</sup> See the discussion about the Prophet seated while giving qaṣaṣ in Chapter Four.

On 'Abd Allāh, see Makkī, Qūt, 2:204. On Abū Dharr, see Majlisī, Biḥār, 22:395. On Ibn Mas'ūd, see Ṭabarānī, *al-Mu'jam al-kabū*r, 9:128. On al-Aswad, see Ibn al-Mubārak, Zuhd, 1:232.

For other examples, see 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr (Jāḥiẓ, Bayān, 1:367); Sulaym b. 'Itr (Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 72:273), and Ibn Hujayra (Dulābī, Kunā, 1:314).

<sup>113 &#</sup>x27;Abd al-Razzāq, Muṣannaf, 7:74; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 26:163. See also the Appendix # 31.

the reality clearly when he admonished his own students: "Do not sit with the quṣṣāṣ except with Abū al-Aḥwāṣ (lā tajālasū al-quṣṣāṣ ghayr Abī al-Aḥwaṣ)."<sup>114</sup>

All this seems to indicate that attempting to describe a session as either "official" or "unofficial" or as either "formal" or "informal" based on the posture of the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  as standing (i.e. official/formal) or seated (i.e. unofficial/informal) is, at the very least, imprecise. If "official" is meant to indicate a governmentally-appointed preacher, for instance, then we have examples of appointed  $qu\bar{s}s\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  who gave their sessions while standing (i.e. Tamīm al-Dārī) as well as while sitting (i.e. Abū Idrīs al-Khawlānī). Furthermore, the designation between "formal" and "informal" also seem indistinct because, in comparison to the "formal" khutba, the qasas session, whether the  $q\bar{a}ss$  was standing or sitting, was in its essence informal since it allowed for interaction between the speaker and the audience, as 'Atā' noted in the report discussed above and as we have seen in the practices of some qussas, most notably the Prophet himself who gave qasas while standing at the pulpit of the mosque and while seated in a circle of students. <sup>115</sup>

Location

<sup>114</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:293.

It may also be helpful to note that a similar debate about standing and sitting was waged around the Friday khuṭba during the reign of al-Walīd b. 'Abd al-Malik in which the qāṣṣ and Umayyad political advisor Rajā' b. Ḥaywa capitulated that he was unable to correct the Umayyad caliphs' practice of sitting during the first sermon and standing during the second since they believed, erroneously according to him, that this was the custom of the caliphs dating back to 'Uthmān; see Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 2:1233–1234.

<sup>116</sup> Ibn Abī Khaythama, Akhbār al-Makkiyyīn, 1:160.

<sup>117</sup> Jāḥiz, Bayān, 1:367-368.

<sup>118</sup> For Ibn Mas'ūd, see Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 33:52. For Abū Idrīs al-Khawlānī, see Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 26:151, 160.

Tabarānī, al-Muʿjam al-kabīr, 9:128. The matn does not indicate that the mosque was in Kufa but the fact that the first transmitter of the tradition, al-Aswad b. Hilāl, was Kufan suggests that it was.

Basra and another Basran, 'Abd Allāh b. Ghālib, gave qaṣaṣ there in "the congregational mosque (al-masjid al- $j\bar{a}mi$ '). <sup>120</sup> On the other side of the empire, Sulaym b. 'Itr, Egypt's first  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  gave qaṣaṣ in the mosque of Fusṭāṭ (the mosque of 'Amr b. al-'Āṣ). <sup>121</sup> Since these sessions were held in the main mosque of the city, we deduce that the  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  must have been a reputable man in the community in order to have his name connected so firmly with the primary mosque of the city, and, indeed with some of the more famous mosques of the empire, and, furthermore, that the rulers of the city were aware, at the very least, of his sessions in the mosque.

Not only did  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  work in mosques of the cities of the empire, they also delivered their qaṣaṣ in tribal mosques. The mosque of the Banū Nabhān in Kūfa at one point housed the  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  Abū 'Amr.¹²² There was even a mosque in Kūfa known as the "the mosque of the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ " where people congregated to listen to qaṣaṣ; it was also known as the Mosque of Abū Dāwūd and was located in the tribal district of Wādi'a.¹²³ In Basra, a few  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  were associated with tribal mosques. Zurāra b. 'Awfā, for example, the pro-Umayyad  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  known as one of the  $im\bar{a}ms$  of the people of Baṣra gave his qaṣaṣ at the mosque of the Banū Qushayr.¹²⁴ Likewise, the anti-Umayyad  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  'Imrān b. 'Iṣām gave qaṣaṣ in the mosque of the Banū Qubay'a.¹²⁵

Even though holding a session in a mosque appeared to grant the session a certain degree of legitimacy, the precise location of the session within the mosque also seems to have influenced perceptions of the sessions conveying a feeling of respect for or criticism of the relevant  $q\bar{a}ss$ . Certainly, when the Prophet was said to have given qasas from the pulpit of the mosque, both his own reputation and the place where he spoke demanded the respect of the audience, as was true for others who spoke from the pulpit. In addition, the practice in Mecca, during at least the lifetime of 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr, was that the  $q\bar{a}ss$  stood behind the  $maq\bar{a}m$ , presumably meaning the  $maq\bar{a}m$  Ibrāhīm. 126 Therefore, by simply mentioning that the  $q\bar{a}ss$  conducted his session near such

<sup>120</sup> On al-Aswad, see Ibn Saʻd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:41; Ibn ʿAbd al-Barr, Istīʿāb, 1:89–90. On ʿAbd Allāh, Abū Nuʻaym, Ḥilya, 2:291.

<sup>121</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 72:273.

<sup>122</sup> Al-Khaṭīb al-Baghdādī Mūḍiḥ awhām al-jamʻ wa-l-tafrīq, ed. 'Abd al-Mu'ṭī Amīn Qal'ajī (Beirut, 1987), 2:394.

<sup>123</sup> Țabarī, Tārīkh, 2:656.

<sup>124</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:150; Ibn Ḥanbal, Zuhd, 1:247; Dhahabī, Siyar, 4:516.

<sup>125</sup> Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 6:159.

<sup>126</sup> Fākihī, Akhbār, 2:338. On the maqām, see A.J. Wensinck, "al-Masdjid al-Ḥarām," *EI*2, 6:708–709 and M.J. Kister, "Makām Ibrāhīm," *EI*2, 6:104–107.

a highly honored place in the mosque, the report projects greater status upon the  $q\bar{a}ss$ .

Other traditions express the opposite sentiment and seem to marginalize the qussas by confining them to the deep corners of the mosque. Al-Aswad b. Sarī' in Basra allegedly held his sessions in the back-part (muakkhar)/corner  $(n\bar{a}hiya)$  of the mosque, and even then, though sitting in the furthest reaches of the mosque, the noise from his session was heard by others. The Basran  $q\bar{a}ss$  Sumayr b. 'Abd al-Raḥmān also gave qasas in the corner of the mosque. These references to space and the access to space carry meaning. By noting that a  $q\bar{a}ss$  was on the pulpit or at a recognized position in the mosque, such as behind the  $maq\bar{a}m$   $Ibr\bar{a}h\bar{u}m$ , or that he held his sessions at the "back-part" or "corner" of the mosque, the reports convey a clear impression about the legitimacy, or at least about the status, of his sessions. Some reports, like those describing qussas speaking from the stairs of the mosque, do not portray a distinct image concerning the status of the qasas and his session and, therefore, may reiterate the flexibility inherit in qasas.

Not all qaṣaṣ meetings, though, were held in mosques. This fact, however, was not unusual for teachers and mirrored the varied practices of the scholarly community in general. As Nabia Abbott has noted, scholars and judges in early Islam often held sessions in their homes and legal rulings were even handed down in the marketplace. Thus, even "official" or "formal" meetings were held outside the mosque. A strikingly similar situation obtained with the quṣṣāṣ. We know of one qāṣṣ, the Basran Zurāra b. Awfā, who held his qaṣaṣ sessions in his home and that the governor al-Ḥajjāj b. Yūsuf allegedly attended some of his sessions. Furthermore, quṣṣāṣ also worked in the marketplace  $(s\bar{u}q)$  as indicated in a report about the caliph 'Alī b. Abī Ṭālib being impressed

<sup>127</sup> Ibn al-Mubārak (Zuhd, 1:232) and Ibn Sa'd (Ţabaqāt, 9:41) say he was in the back-part of the mosque. Ibn Sallām says he was in the corner; see his Gharīb, 4:304.

<sup>128</sup> Dārimī, Sunan, 1:110.

<sup>129</sup> Ibn Mas'ūd (Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 33:52), Abū Idrīs al-Khawlānī (Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 26:163) and Abū Shayba (Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 68:128) gave qaṣaṣ from the stairs of the mosque.

<sup>130</sup> Abbott, Studies II, 13. See also the report of Ibn 'Abbās holding sessions in his house in which he would give legal rulings, teach and interpret the Qur'ān and even feed his guests; see Balādhurī, Ansāb, ed. al-'Azm, 3:63.

<sup>131</sup> Ibn Ḥanbal, Zuhd, 247; Abū Nuʻaym, Ḥilya, 2:293; Ibn al-Jawzī, Ṣifa, 3:230. It is not entirely clear if the sessions that al-Ḥajjāj attended were qaṣaṣ session or were of another type; see Ibn Saʻd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:150–151.

with the religious knowledge of a  $q\bar{a}ss$  holding sessions in the  $s\bar{u}q$  of Kufa.<sup>132</sup> Among the more odd places where a  $q\bar{a}ss$  gave qass was "the wilderness (al-barriyya)."<sup>133</sup>

Besides the open spaces of Mt. 'Arafat, the locations of the sessions mentioned above suggest that the sessions themselves were small, and if small, then they were limited in attendance and presumably somewhat exclusive. Indeed, in one instance, when Ibn 'Umar sat with 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr, the session was so private that when some inquirers interrupted them asking Ibn 'Umar questions of legal import, he shunned them saying: "Leave us and our  $q\bar{a}$ , alone ( $khall\bar{u}$   $baynan\bar{a}$  wa-bayna  $q\bar{a}$ , payra In light of the locations where the early qu, payra held their sessions, the assumption that the early qu, payra addressed the masses and enjoyed wide, popular appeal may have been overstated.

Time

Just as the locations of the qaṣaṣ sessions varied so did the times when they met. We have already encountered some references to when qaṣaṣ was given. For example, the Prophet appears to have given qaṣaṣ at various times. Earlier citations of his qaṣaṣ do not specify the times this occurred and a later scholar, Ibn Rajab (d. 795/1392), confirmed that the Prophet did not have a specific time for qaṣaṣ, although he added that he did so on Fridays and holidays (fa-inna al-nabī lam yakun la-hu waqt<sup>un</sup> muʿayyin<sup>un</sup> yaquṣṣu ʿalā aṣḥābihi fī-hi ghayr khuṭbatihi al-rātiba fī-l-jumaʿwa-l-aʿyād).<sup>138</sup>

<sup>132</sup> Wakī', Quḍāt, 2:196; Abū Nu'aym, Ḥilya, 4:148–149; Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 25; Suyūṭī, Taḥdhūr, 193. See the discussion in Chapter Four.

<sup>133 &#</sup>x27;Abd al-Razzāq, Muşannaf, 3:222.

<sup>134</sup> Ibn Khāllikān Wafayāt, 2:70.

<sup>135</sup> Ibn Ḥanbal, Zuhd, 1:304.

<sup>136</sup> Bukhārī, Şaḥīḥ, 2:588.

<sup>137</sup> Ibn Abī Khaythama, Akhbār al-Makkiyyīn, 251.

<sup>138</sup> Ibn Rajab, Jāmi', 267. Ibn Rajab alleged that the Prophet would give tadhkīr whenever it was needed (innamā kāna yudhakkiruhum aḥyān<sup>an</sup> aw 'inda ḥudūth amr yaḥtāja ilā tadhkīr 'indahu); see his Jāmi', 267. According to a report recorded by Ibn Qayyim al-Jawziyya,

Qasas, in fact, was given on almost any day of the week in early Islam. Ibn Mas'ūd did so twice a week, on Mondays and Thursdays. 139 A handful of reports about Tamīm al-Dārī give mixed information on when he was allowed to give qasas. Some reports allege that 'Umar b. al-Khattāb told him to give qasas only once a week though the day varied, with one report claiming it was Friday and another Saturday. 140 The first report claims that he was later allowed by 'Uthmān to increase this to twice per week. 41 Another report claims that Tamīm gave qasas twice a week and that 'Uthmān increased this to three times per week, though without specifying days. 142 Likewise, 'Ā'isha allegedly told a qāss to give qasas once a week and, if he desired, to increase that number to twice or even three times a week. 143 A slight variation of this routine, still approximating three times per week, was suggested by 'Ā'isha for the Meccan qāṣṣ 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr. She told him to give qaṣaṣ every other day so that his listeners would not get bored.<sup>144</sup> The option for giving qaṣaṣ twice or three times a week persisted into the caliphate of 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz who, on one occasion, commanded a qāss to give qasas on Tuesday or Saturday, but also ostensibly allowed for qaṣaṣ three times per week.<sup>145</sup> It is quite evident, therefore, that there was no consensus as to when qaṣaṣ was given. It appears that it occurred at a number of possible times and that the sources themselves were unsure about its routine.146 al-khuṭba al-rātiba ("the established khuṭba") is the traditional Friday sermon, as opposed to the al-khuṭba al-ʿāriḍa ("the non-essential khuṭba") which is a supererogatory sermon; see his Zād al-maʿād, ed. Shuʿayb al-Arnāʾūṭ and ʿAbd al-Qādir al-Arnāʾūṭ (Beirut, 1979), 1:191.

<sup>139</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 33:180.

<sup>140</sup> See both reports in Ibn Shabba, Madīna, 1:11.

<sup>141</sup> Ibn Shabba, Madīna, 1:11.

<sup>142</sup> Ibid., 1:12.

<sup>143</sup> For 'À'isha, see Ibn Shabba, Madīna, 1:13. A strikingly similar tradition was attributed to Ibn 'Abbās in which he uses the phrase ḥaddith al-nās, instead of quṣṣ, which is the command in the reports from 'À'isha. However, Ibn 'Abbās, in the same tradition, instructed that the teacher should give qaṣaṣ as well, "taquṣṣu 'alayhim." This suggests that these may be two variants of the same tradition. See Bukhārī, Ṣaḥīḥ, 5:2334.

<sup>144</sup> Fākihī, Akhbār, 2:339.

<sup>145</sup> Ibn Rajab, Jāmi', 267.

In fact, qaṣaṣ seems to have maintained its flexibility into the medieval period when Ibn al-Jawzī gave his presentations which were a combination of Qur'ān recitation, a khuṭba and wa'iz, in sessions allegedly attended by thousands on Thursdays and Saturdays; see Pedersen, "Islamic Preacher," 240–241. See also Swartz's Introduction to Ibn al-Jawzī's Quṣṣāṣ, 34–35.

This same flexibility can be seen in the time of day when <code>qaṣaṣ</code> was given. On at least two occasions during the first few decades of Islamic history, the session was held after the <code>maghrib</code> prayers. During the lifetime of Ibn Masʿūd, an unidentified <code>qāṣṣ</code> appears to have assembled his listeners in the evening between the <code>maghrib</code> and the 'ishā' prayers. <sup>147</sup> Tamīm al-Dārī, during the caliphate of 'Uthmān, also allegedly gave his <code>qaṣaṣ</code> at this time, although another report claims that he was told by 'Umar to give <code>qaṣaṣ</code> twice: "mornings and evenings (<code>bukra wa-ʻashiyya</code>)." <sup>148</sup> Similarly, 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr, the first <code>qāṣṣ</code> in Mecca, gave <code>qaṣaṣ</code> once a day after the morning (<code>subḥ</code>) prayer <sup>149</sup> and/or twice a day after the morning (<code>al-ṣubḥ</code>) and afternoon prayers (<code>al-ʻaṣr</code>). <sup>150</sup> Also, while 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz allowed the <code>quṣṣāṣ</code> to give <code>qaṣaṣ</code> three times a week, as mentioned above, they allegedly only held sessions one time during the day. <sup>151</sup> The 'Abbāsid <code>qāṣṣ</code> al-Qāsim b. Mujāshi' adopted the practice of giving <code>qaṣaṣ</code> once a day after the evening prayer, when speaking against the Umayyads. <sup>152</sup>

However, the practice alluded to in the reports about Tamīm and 'Ubayd giving qaṣaṣ twice a day seems to have emerged as the most common custom of the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  of the Umayyad period. The two times a day were usually around the morning (al-fajr or al-ṣubh) and afternoon (al-ʿaṣr) prayers. While 'Ubayd seems to have been the first to be connected with giving qaṣaṣ at these specific times, others maintained the practice. The famous Saʿīd b. Jubayr and two Medinan  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ , 'Aṭā' b. Yasār (d. 103/721) and his older contemporary Salama b. Dīnār (d. 130-40/747-57), all purportedly held their qaṣaṣ sessions at these times. Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Sulamī held sessions during these times, teaching twenty verses of the Qurʾān in each session. 154

Slight variations on this routine did occur, though. 'Abd al-Malik, in fact, commanded that his qussas give qasas in the morning (al-ghadat) and the

<sup>147 &#</sup>x27;Abd al-Razzāq, Muşannaf, 3:221.

<sup>148</sup> For the report about 'Uthmān, see Ibn Wahb, al-Jāmi' fī-l-ḥadīth, ed. Muṣṭafā Ḥasan Ḥusayn Muḥammad Abū al-Khayr (Al-Dammam, Saudia Arabia, 1996), 2:664. For the report about 'Umar, see Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 11:81.

<sup>149</sup> Fākihī, Akhbār, 2:338.

<sup>150</sup> Fasawī, Ma'rifa, 1:542.

<sup>151</sup> Ibn Rajab, Jāmi', 267.

<sup>152</sup> See the Appendix # 100.

On Sa'd, see Ibn Sa'd, Tabaqāt, 8:377; Dhahabī, Siyar, 4:336. On 'Aṭā', see Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 40:447 and the Appendix # 59. On Salama, see Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 22:20; Ibn al-Jawzī, Muntaẓam, 8:32; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 11:272; Dhahabī, Siyar, 6:101; al-Ṣafadī, al-Wāfī bi-l-wafayāt, eds. Aḥmad al-Arnā'ŭṭ and Turkī Muṣṭafā (Beirut, 2000), 15:199.

<sup>154</sup> Ibn Saʻd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:291.

evening (al-'ashiyya). Another report even alleged that the practice of teaching the Qur'ān after morning prayer began in the reign of 'Abd al-Malik with Hishām b. Ismā'īl al-Makhzūmī and his  $mawl\bar{a}$  Rāfi'. However, later qussas, such as the Medinan Muslim b. Jundab and the Basran Zurāra b. Awfā, continued to give qassas twice a day, and Muslim, who, as was mentioned above, was known for his fine recitation of the Qur'ān, used this time to teach his audience thirty verses of the Qur'ān. 157

Malpractices

The danger with qaṣaṣ was that it existed on a fine line between virtue and vice. The traits and set of skills advocated for an effective  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  were, when misused, the same traits that led to his excoriation. Thus, loudness of voice easily became a scourge when the session as a whole became loud. The weeping that signified piety and devotion was interpreted as dissimulation when done en masse. The gaiety encouraged in a  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  became irreverence when entertainment superseded religiosity. And, eventually, the negative expressions of these generally positive tendencies came to define the practice of qaṣaṣ as a phenomenon, while the orthodox manifestations of the practice came to represent the exception, not the rule. The examples of misconduct attributed to the quṣṣāṣ range from the relatively innocuous, such as the pride of the  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$ , to the more deplorable, such as mixing genders in the same session and even allowing women to give qaṣaṣ.

Pride: "Know me (i'rifūnī)!"

A number of reports accuse the qussas of pride and, therefore, of trying to attract attention to themselves unjustifiably. This accusation is expressed ubiquitously by alleging that the real, though unspoken, objective of the qas is to declare, "Know me!" This charge proposes to expose a flaw in the qas that is more seminal than merely undisciplined or inappropriate behavior in his sessions. According to these reports, the  $q\bar{a}$ ss himself is to blame for improper motives. <sup>158</sup>

<sup>155</sup> Maqrīzī, Khiṭaṭ, 4/1:30.

Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 18:24. 'Athamina claimed that Rāfi' was a qāṣṣ citing the second Badrān edition as his source; see his "Qaṣaṣ," 6o. I was unable to locate this edition but was able to check the first Badrān edition ([Damascus, 1911–1913], 5:295) which does not identify Rāfi' as a qāṣṣ nor does the more recent al-'Amrawī edition. Hishām b. Ismā'īl b. Hishām al-Makhzūmī was a religious scholar, father-in-law to 'Abd al-Malik b. Marwan, who appointed him governor of Medina, and grandfather to the future caliph Hishām b. 'Abd al-Malik; see Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 7:240–241.

<sup>157</sup> On Muslim, see Ibn Mujāhid, Sab'a, 59, 82. On Zurāra, see Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:150.

When Tamīm al-Dārī requested the permission of 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb to give <code>qaṣaṣ</code>, 'Umar told him that in giving <code>qaṣaṣ</code> he only wanted to say: "I am Tamīm al-Dārī, so know me (<code>anā Tamīm al-Dārī</code>, <code>fa-i'rifūnī</code>)!" According to another variant of the report, 'Umar underscored the tendency towards increased pride through giving <code>qaṣaṣ</code> by telling Tamīm that giving <code>qaṣaṣ</code> is "slaughter" (<code>al-dhabḥ</code>); by it, Tamīm exalted himself (to the level of Pleiades), to the extent that God would need to humble him.

This same opinion was ascribed to 'Alī b. Abī Ṭālib when he purportedly criticized an unnamed Kufan  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ. 'Alī described the  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ by saying: "This one is saying, "Know me!" So know him ( $inna\ h\bar{a}dh\bar{a}\ yaq\bar{u}lu\ i'rif\bar{u}n\bar{i}\ fa-i'rif\bar{u}hu$ )!"<sup>161</sup> A variant of the report alleges that 'Alī asked the  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ to identify himself by his kunya. When he replied, "Abū Yaḥyā," 'Alī answered, "You are Abū I'rifūnī!"<sup>162</sup> 'Alī's sardonic alteration of the  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ's kunya conveys, in no uncertain terms, his disapproval of the  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ. Other variants portray the  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ in an even more

The sources also indicate that similar expressions using the Arabic root 'r-f were used as means for announcing one's identity to an audience. Two examples from quṣṣāṣ illustrate this practice. Abū Dharr al-Ghifārī identified himself to those people of Mecca who did know him (li-man 'arafanī) as "Jundab b. Junāda" and to those who did not yet know him (li-man lam ya'rifnī) as "Abū Dharr." See al-Ṭūsī, Ikhtiyār ma'rifa al-rijāl (Rijāl al-Kashī), ed. al-Sayyid Mahdī al-Rajā'ī (Qumm, 1984), 1:115. It must be noted here, however, that this was not said in a qaṣaṣ session. Ibn Mas'ūd also announced his identity in this way and did so in a qaṣaṣ session though he was not the qāṣṣ of the session. After listening to a qāṣṣ who was leading his audience in the repetition of dhikr phrases, Ibn Mas'ūd, who disagreed with the practice of the qāṣṣ, announced his presence to the group, before correcting their qāṣṣ, by saying: "He who knows me, knows who I am. As for he who does not know me, I am 'Abd Allāh b. Mas'ūd (man 'arafanī fa-qad 'arafanī wa-man lam ya'rifnī, anā 'Abd Allāh b. Mas'ūd)." See 'Abd al-Razzāq, Muṣannaf, 3:221.

<sup>159</sup> Ibn Wahb, Jāmi', 2:664; Al-Tamīmī, al-Miḥan, ed. Yaḥyā Wahīb Jabbūrī (Tunis, 2006), 245.

<sup>160</sup> Ibn Shabba, Madīna, 1:10, 12; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 11:81.

<sup>161</sup> Ibn Wahb, Jāmi', 2:663; Ghazāli, Iḥyā', 1:69.

&#x27;Abd al-Razzāq, Muṣannaf, 3:220. Some variants do not identify Abū Yaḥyā beyond his kunya; see al-Naḥḥās, al-Nūṣikh wa-l-mansūkh, ed. Muḥammad 'Abd al-Salām Muḥammad (Kuwait, 1987), 47–48, 52; Ibn al-Jawzī, Nawāṣikh al-Qurʾān (Beirut, 1984), 30–31. Others identify him as either 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Dāb (Ibn Salāma, al-Nūṣikh wa-l-mansūkh, ed. Zuhayr al-Shāwīsh and Muḥammad Kanʿān [Beirut, 1984], 18–19; Ibn Ḥazm, al-Nūṣikh wa-l-mansūkh, ed. 'Abd al-Ghaffār Sulaymān al-Bandārī [Beirut, 1986], 6; Ibn Bashkuwāl, Ghawāmiḍ al-asmāʾ al-mubhama al-wāqiʿa fī mutūn al-aḥādīth al-musnada, eds. ʿIzz al-Dīn 'Alī al-Sayyid and Muḥammad Kamāl al-Dīn ʿIzz al-Dīn [Beirut, 1986], 4:259) or Abū Yaḥyā al-Muʻarqab (Ibn Bashkuwāl, Ghawāmiḍ, 4:257–258, Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:82–83).

unfavorable light noting that 'Alī reprimanded him only when he discovered that the  $q\bar{a}ss$  did not know the difference between the abrogating and abrogated verses of the Qur'ān. <sup>163</sup> These latter variants not only depict the  $q\bar{a}ss$  as a man of pride, they also allege that his pride was wholly unjustified.

Loudness

While a strong voice was a meritorious quality of the  $q\bar{a}$ , it came with limits. In fact, loud volume among the qu, a was not universally appreciated. a This is allegedly complained to Ibn Umar about a  $q\bar{a}$ , who held his session

<sup>163</sup> Naḥḥās, Nāsikh, 48, 51–52; Ibn Salāma, Nāsikh, 18–19; Ibn Ḥazm, Nāsikh, 5–6. Abū Nu'aym claimed that Ibn Mas'ūd said the same thing though I have not been able to confirm this. The closest report that I have been able to find is the one mentioned above in n. 158. That report, however, does not mention the issue of abrogation.

<sup>164</sup> Țabarānī, al-Mu'jam al-kabīr, 12:264.

<sup>165</sup> Makkī, Qūt, 2:218; Ghazālī, Iḥyā', 1:69.

<sup>166</sup> Ibn Sallām, Nāsikh, 3; Ṭabarānī, al-Mu'jam al-kabīr, 10:259; Naḥḥās, Nāsikh, 51; Ibn Salāma, Nāsikh, 19.

<sup>167</sup> Makkī recorded a report from Sufyān (al-Thawī?) in which the <code>hadīth</code> scholar allegedly said: "If you see a man stressing the pronunciation of the <code>hadīth</code> in the meeting then know that he is saying, 'Know me.' (<code>idha ra'ayta al-rajul yushaddid fī alfāz al-hadīth fī-l-majlis, fa-i'lam innahu yaqūlu i'rifūnī)."</code> See Makkī, Qūt al-qulūb, ed. Sa'd Nasīb Makārim (Beirut, 1995), 1:357. The report itself is somewhat suspect since I found it only in Makārim's edition of Qūt al-qulūb. Al-Mawārdī used the phrase "Know me" to apply to any person who claims to be a scholar even though they know nothing; see his <code>Adab al-dunya wa-l-dīn</code>, ed. Muṣṭafā al-Saqqā (Cairo, 1955), 40–41.

<sup>168</sup> See also the discussion above, 157–159.

right outside her home. She told Ibn 'Umar: "This guy disturbed me and made it so that I was not able to hear a sound (hādhā qad ādhānī wa tarakanī lā asma' al-ṣawt)." Ibn 'Umar resolved the situation by beating the qāṣṣ.

A number of reports about the practices of the qussas of Basra tell of inordinate volume from the qass and his sessions. From the very beginnings of qasas in Basra, the decibel level of the session was a problematic issue. Al-Aswad b. Sarī', the first qass of Basra, was rebuked by Mujālid b. Mas'ūd al-Sulamī (d. 36/656) because his session became loud and was a distraction to others in the mosque. Mujālid's rebuke was humbly accepted by the attendees who replied in conciliation: "We receive your advice." Later, and again in Basra, al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī reproved a qass for allowing three negative innovations (bidas) in his session: mixing men and women together, raising hands, and raising voices.  $^{172}$

Not all qussas, however, were guilty of raising their voices. The reputable Bakr b. 'Abd Allāh wept while giving qasas after the morning prayer on the Day of the Standing at 'Arafat during the pilgrimage. Even though he wept, he did not raise his voice.'

Raising Hands

As the above report from al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī stated, the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  of his era engaged in another behavior provoking even greater debate about its legitimacy, namely the raising of hands. The relative importance of this topic is reflected in the amount of ink it received in the early  $had\bar{t}th$  compilations, all containing sections devoted to it. These sources contain citations about its practice during funeral processions  $(jan\bar{a}za)$ ,  $land{tabular}$  during the  $land{tabular}$  during  $land{tabular}$

<sup>169</sup> Ibn Shabba, Madīna, 1:15. Another variant of the report suggests that the qāṣṣ disturbed 'Ā'isha while she was involved in an act of supererogatory devotion: "This guy disturbed me with his qaṣaṣ and distracted me from performing my supererogatory prayers (hādhā qad ādhānī bi-qaṣaṣihi wa shagalanī 'an subḥatī)." See Makkī, Qūt, ed. Madkūr and al-Najjār, 1:371; Ghazālī, Iḥyā', 1:185. The term subḥa seems to mean either the act of using prayers beads for the repetition of phrases of praise to God or of praying superogatory prayers; see Lane, Arabic-English Lexicon (Repr. Beirut, 1997), s-b-ḥ.

<sup>170</sup> On Mujālid, see Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 27:227.

<sup>171</sup> Ibn al-Mubārak, Zuhd, 1:232-233.

<sup>172</sup> Makkī, Qūt, 2:197.

<sup>173</sup> Ibn Ḥanbal, Zuhd, 304.

<sup>174 &#</sup>x27;Abd al-Razzāq, Muṣannaf, 3:469-470; Tirmidhī, Sunan, 3:388.

<sup>175</sup> In particular, during the khuṭba given when praying for rain; see Bukhārī, Ṣaḥīḥ, 1:315.

<sup>176</sup> Bayhaqī, Sunan, 2:211–212. Qunūt has multiple meanings depending upon the context in which it is used; see A.J. Wensinck, "Kunūt," EI2, 5;395.

during an eclipse of the sun,<sup>177</sup> upon seeing the Ka'ba during the haijj,<sup>178</sup> and, of course, during prayer itself.<sup>179</sup> While raising hands may have been appropriate at certain times, it remained a topic of debate in the community.<sup>180</sup>

In regard to the  $quss\bar{a}s$ , it seems that raising hands was actually a common practice in their sessions and just as there were various opinions as to its legitimacy in other acts of religious devotion, it was also controversial as part of the gasas sessions. We know of at least two leading scholars of the first century, 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz and 'Atā' b. Abī Rabāh, who attended gasas session with all joining the  $q\bar{a}ss$  in raising their hands.<sup>181</sup> The distinguished Companion Ibn 'Umar seems to have held mixed views on the necessity of raising hands, based on the degree of one's attachment to the gasas session in question. According to one report, 'Abda b. Abī Lubāba (d.c. mid-late second/eighth century) claimed that he prayed the afternoon prayer (al-'aṣr) with Ibn 'Umar. 182 Afterwards, Ibn 'Umar turned his back to the qāṣṣ and began to relate ḥadīth. Then the  $q\bar{a}ss$  raised his hands in supplication (yad'u) while Ibn 'Umar did not. 183 A second report states that 'Ubayd Allāh b. Abī Yazīd (d. 126/744) said: "I saw Ibn 'Umar raising his hands while with the  $q\bar{a}ss$ ." <sup>184</sup> In another tradition, al-Qāsim b. Muḥammad (d. 112/730), whose son 'Abd Allāh was a qāṣṣ, said: "I saw Ibn 'Umar in the meeting of a  $q\bar{a}ss$  raising his hands while in supplication  $(\gamma ad^{c}\bar{u})$ , until they were even with his shoulders." <sup>185</sup>

<sup>177</sup> Ibn Khuzayma, Ṣaḥūḥ, ed. Muḥammad Muṣṭafā al-Aʻzamī (Beirut, 1970), 2:310.

<sup>178</sup> Țaḥāwī, Sharḥ, 2:176-178.

<sup>179 &#</sup>x27;Abd al-Razzāq, Muṣannaf, 2:247–252; Bukhārī, Ṣaḥīḥ, 1:257–259; Muslim, Ṣaḥīḥ, 2:612; Abū Dāwūd, Sunan, 1:191, 289, 303; Ibn Mājah, Sunan, ed. Muḥammad Fu'ād 'Abd al-Bāqī (Cairo, 1952–53), 1:279–282, 2:1271–1272; Nasā'ī, Sunan, 2:121–123, 205–206, 231–234; Tirmidhī, Sunan, 2:35–44.

<sup>180</sup> See, for example, Abū Dāwūd, Sunan, 1:197. In an excellent overview of the issue of raising hands, Swartz, drawing in part on Goldziher, argued that the mixed perception of the practice may have been a product of its pre-Islamic usage in both pagan and monotheistic traditions, "those who opposed raf" al-yadain were those who were aware of, and concerned about, its pagan roots; those who admitted it were those, on the other hand, who saw its monotheistic background or, at least, saw in it nothing incompatible with monotheistic conceptions." See Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 120, n. 5.

<sup>181</sup> On 'Umar, see Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣās, 36; idem, Sīrat 'Umar ibn 'Abd al-ʿAzīz, ed. Muḥibb al-Dīn al-Khaṭīb (Cairo, 1912), 172. On 'Aṭā', see Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 35–36.

&#x27;Abda b. Abī Lubāba was a Kufan legal scholar who allegedly met Ibn 'Umar in Syria. Ibn Ḥajar does not record a death date for him but does give a report which indicates that he was alive in 123/740; see his Tahdhīb, 2:644.

<sup>183 &#</sup>x27;Abd al-Razzāq, Muşannaf, 3:218.

<sup>184</sup> Ibid., 3:220. For 'Ubayd Allāh, see Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 19:178–179.

<sup>185</sup> Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 33–4. For al-Qāsim, see Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:419–420.

Ibn 'Umar's practice indicates that the deciding factor regarding the necessity of raising hands depended on whether or not one was an active participant in the session. Ibn 'Umar, for example, did not raise his hands when he turned his back to the  $q\bar{a}ss$  (wa-ja'ala zahrahu nahwa  $al-q\bar{a}ss$ ), indicating that he excused himself from the session. Conversely, he raised his hands if he was attending the session ('inda  $al-q\bar{a}ss$ ). These two reactions to the raising of hands clearly suggest that the practice was expected only when in attendance at a qasas session. In fact, as we have seen above, similar standards applied to other religious practices. During prayer time or Qur'ān recitation, silence was expected. At other times, like during qasas sessions, neither silence nor paying attention was obligatory.  $^{186}$

In addition to the unidentified quṣṣāṣ who presided over the sessions mentioned above, a number of other named qussās allowed raising hands in their sessions. Egypt's Sulaym b. 'Itr, the first  $q\bar{a}ss$  of the province, raised his hands in his qaṣaṣ while he was invoking God  $(du'\bar{a}')$ .<sup>187</sup> Across the empire in Basra, al-Aswad b. Sarī', that city's first qāṣṣ, raised his hands although he was rebuked for it by Mujālid b. Mas'ūd. 188 The practice appears to have continued in Basra with the famous al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī. He raised his hands with their backs upward during the  $du'\bar{a}'$  portion of his qaṣaṣ session and then closed his session with a special prayer after finishing his "story (hadīth)." 189 However, a separate report claims that al-Ḥasan held the exact opposite opinion about the quṣṣāṣ raising their hands. According to Makki's Qūt al-qulūb, which we have already noted above as being particularly antagonistic towards the quṣṣāṣ, al-Ḥasan allegedly described the raising of voices and the extending of hands in du'ā' by the gussās as bid'a.<sup>190</sup> Yet, even here, the meaning is not entirely clear, for al-Ḥasan at one time reportedly admitted that qaṣaṣ was bid'a, then confessed that it was, in fact, a good innovation: "How many a prayer is answered, request granted, companion won, and how great is the knowledge received through it (al-qaṣaṣ bidʻa, wa-niʻmat al-bidʻa kam min daʻwa mustajāba, wa-su'l muʻṭā wa-akh mustafād, wa-'ilm yuṣāb)."191 Al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī's precise opinion on the quṣṣāṣ and their practices seems nuanced, at best, or indiscernible, at worst.

<sup>186</sup> See above, 166-169.

<sup>187</sup> Maqrīzī, Khiṭaṭ, 4/1:30.

<sup>188</sup> Ibn Sallām, Gharīb, 4:304.

<sup>189</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Tabaqāt, 9:167. See also Pedersen, "Criticism," 218.

<sup>190</sup> Makkī, Qūt, 2:197.

<sup>191</sup> Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 18 (translation taken from Swartz, 103). It is important to note here that care must be taken in interpreting reports about the quṣṣāṣ from al-Makkī since he often betrays a distinct anti-quṣṣāṣ bias. This could be the case here since Makkī's variant

Things became formalized during the caliphate of 'Abd al-Malik b. Marwān who made the ostensibly discretionary practice of raising hands during invocation compulsory, ordering all the qussās of his empire to raise their hands in invocation during their sessions, mornings and evenings. 192 Indeed, both qasas and raising hands appear to have been controversial topics during 'Abd al-Malik's reign and he attempted to set the situation straight in one fell swoop. He proudly exclaimed to Ghudayf b. al-Hārith al-Kindī al-Himsī, a Companion of the Prophet, that he united the people together in raising their hands on the pulpit during Friday prayers and during qasas after the morning and afternoon prayers (innā gad jama'nā al-nās 'alā amrayn...raf'u al-aydī 'alā al-manābiri yawm al-jum'a wa-l-qaşaş ba'd al-şubh wa-l-'aşr). Ghudayf, however, was not impressed. So, when 'Abd al-Malik told Ghudayf that he wanted him to raise his hand on the pulpit, Ghudayf refused and rebuked the caliph, telling him that his decree was a sign that he was falling into bid'a (amā innahumā amthalu bidʻatikum ʻindī, wa-lastu mujībaka ilā shay<sup>in</sup> minhumā). When ʻAbd al-Malik asked why he disagreed with the order, Ghudayf responded with a Prophetic tradition: "No group of people makes some new innovation without removing something in the sunna similar to it. Therefore, adhering to the sunna is better than making some new innovation (mā aḥdatha qawm<sup>un</sup> bidʻat<sup>an</sup> illā rafaʻa  $mithlah\bar{a}min\,al$ -sunna, fa-tamassuk $^{un}bi$ -sunna $t^{in}khayr^{un}minihd\bar{a}thi\,bid$ 'a $t^{in}$ ). $^{n193}$

While it is not clear what happened to Ghuḍayf in light of his open refusal to abide by a caliphal decree, the seriousness with which 'Abd al-Malik took his order is evident by his dismissal of the famous Abū Idrīs al-Khawlānī from his position as  $q\bar{a}ss$  because he also refused to abide by the order.<sup>194</sup> In spite of the official decree, the raising of hands during religious practices continued to be an issue of dispute in the Umayyad period. The Basran Isḥāq b. Suwayd (d. 131/748) expressed, in poetry, his objection to a  $q\bar{a}ss$  who raised his hands frequently:

does not have the description of qasas as a good innovation but rather simply that qasas is bid'a; see his  $Q\bar{u}t$ , 2:197. Whether Makki omitted this description or Ibn al-Jawzī added it cannot be determined at present.

<sup>192</sup> Magrīzī, Khiṭaṭ, 4/1:30.

<sup>193</sup> Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 28:172–173. See also the variants in Ibn Shabba, Madīna, 1:10; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 48:82; Suyūṭī, Taḥdhīr, 203. We will look at this tradition again in an analysis of qaṣaṣ as bidʻa in Chapter Four. Ghuḍayf is said to have died in the caliphate of 'Abd al-Malik b. Marwān; see Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 23:112–116; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:377.

<sup>194</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 26:166.

I swear by the One who created the heavens, The strata, and who created me, I pray to God and I neither moved my hands When I prayed nor my tongue Being fully convinced That the one to whom I pray sees me. For He sees and hears what I say So if I rely on Him, that is enough for me. 195

For Isḥāq, he was content with the fact that God saw him and heard him even if he did not speak or make demonstrable movements with his hands. Though he may not have interpreted the practice as a negative innovation and a violation of Prophetic sunna, as did his predecessor Ghuḍayf, the practice was, in Isḥāq's opinion, unnecessary in light of God's omniscience.

Mixed-gender Meetings

Some qussas engaged in the even more reprehensible conduct of allowing men and women to mix together in their sessions, the third innovation attributed to them by al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī. Indeed, when Abū al-Tayyāḥ (d. 130/747) complained to al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī about the conduct of the qasas sessions, he named this issue first in his list of their offenses. The practice appears to have persisted beyond the Umayyad period such that the mother of the famous Abū Ḥanīfa, for example, refused to accept the ruling of her famous son, preferring the advice of the qass whose sessions she frequented. The conduction a partition separate them.

It merits stress here that the issue of dispute was the mixing of genders and not that women attended qaṣaṣ sessions. In fact, in one instance, women convened their own qaṣaṣ session presided over by their own qāṣṣ (qāṣṣa?), the mother of the famous al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī. Usāma b. Zayd (d. 153/770)<sup>199</sup> related that his mother saw al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī's mother giving qaṣaṣ to women (ra'aytu

<sup>195</sup> Yaḥyā b. Maʿīn, Tārīkh, 4:178.

<sup>196</sup> Makkī, Qūt, 1:297; Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 97; Suyūṭī, Taḥdhūr, 227. Abū al-Tayyāḥ is Yazīd b. Ḥumayd; see Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:409.

<sup>197</sup> Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 108.

<sup>198</sup> Ibid., 142.

<sup>199</sup> Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 2:347-351.

 $umm\ al$ -Ḥasan  $taquṣṣu\ 'al\bar{a}\ al$ -nis $\bar{a}$ '). $^{200}$  She is the only woman from the rise of Islam until the close of the Umayyad period who is reported to have given qaṣaṣ legitimately to women. She was not, however, the only woman to give qaṣaṣ.

An even more scandalous situation than men and women meeting together in a qa$a$ session was that of a woman giving qa$a$ to men and, while doing so, reciting the Qur'ān in intonation (alhan). Making this egregious behavior worse, her mawla, the distinguished Kufan scholar and qa$a$ 'Awn b. 'Abd Allāh, condoned her actions.

The event comes to us in two reports. First, al-Mughīra b. Miqsam (d.c. 136/753)<sup>201</sup> reported that when 'Awn stopped giving qaṣaṣ: "He ordered his female servant to give qaṣaṣ and to sing (amarajāriya lahu taquṣṣu wa-tuṭribu)." Al-Mughīra sent him a message saying: "You are among a trustworthy people (min ahli bayt ṣidq). God did not send His Prophet with foolishness (bi-l-humq) and this thing that you are doing is foolish."<sup>202</sup> The prospect that a distinguished scholar allowed such a thing continued to be scandalous into the late medieval period when Ibn al-Jawzī refused to believe that these events happened in this way. He sought to preserve 'Awn's dignity by alleging that he did not command the female servant to sing in front of the men, rather, to him personally, alone (munfaridan). Nonetheless, Ibn al-Jawzī admitted that al-Mughīra's reprimand showed that he did not approve of even that behavior.<sup>203</sup>

'Awn employed a female servant named Bushrā, who recited the Qur'ān in intonation (bi-l-alḥān). He ['Awn] said to her one day, "Recite to my colleagues (iqra'ī 'ala ikhwānī)!" She recited with a voice of grief and sadness (bi-ṣawt rajī 'ḥazīn). So I [Thābit] saw them (the listeners) throwing off their turbans and crying. And he ['Awn] said to her one day, "O Bushrā, I have given you 1000 dīnār because of your wonderful voice. Now go. No

<sup>200</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabagāt, 10:442.

<sup>201</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Tabaqāt, 8:456; 'Ijlī, Ma'rifa, 2:293; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:138–139.

<sup>202</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 47:89.

<sup>203</sup> Ibn al-Jawzī, Talbīs Iblīs, ed. Al-Sayyid al-Jumaylī (Beirut, 1985), 297–298.

one owns you but me and you are free, for the sake of God (idhhabī fa-lā yamlikuki 'alayya aḥad<sup>un</sup> fa-anti ḥurrat<sup>un</sup> li-wajh Allāh)."<sup>204</sup>

Thabit then noted that she remained in Kufa until she died.<sup>205</sup>

Regardless of the intent of the transmitters, both accounts affirm that  $qa\bar{s}a\bar{s}$  was a performance and, according to Mughīra, the performance aspect of the practice at times crossed over into sheer folly. In both instances, though, the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  was not the only performer. As was noted above, the show also featured the audience. This was, therefore, an interactive performance at its peak with both actor and observers contributing flamboyantly to the performance. The female servant gave  $qa\bar{s}a\bar{s}$ , sang and recited the Qur'ān in intonation and the listeners tossed off their turbans and wept.<sup>206</sup> To an outside observer, like Mughīra or, even later on, Ibn al-Jawzī, the whole scenario is that of a show, and a reprehensible one at that.

Swooning

An equally controversial practice ostensibly occurring during the qaṣaṣ sessions was the losing of consciousness by those in the session at the reading of the Qur'ān, i.e. swooning. Condemnations of swooning can be traced back to early Companions of the Prophet, such as 'Ā'isha, <sup>207</sup> Ibn 'Umar<sup>208</sup> and the other daughter of the first caliph, Asmā' bt. Abī Bakr. <sup>209</sup> Another Companion, Anas b. Malik, claimed that the Khawārij were the ones who fainted—an assessment appearing to be a tendentious ascription of any controversial practice to them. <sup>210</sup> In fact, the practice was so questionable that Ibn Sīrīn believed it to be a sham. In order to determine the genuineness of the display, he proposed that the swooners "sit on a wall and the Qur'ān will be recited to them from beginning to end. If they swooned, they [would fall and] die. Then the situation will be as they said it was." <sup>211</sup> A more effective, although potentially fatal, test was not to be found.

<sup>204</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 47:89.

<sup>205</sup> Ibid.

<sup>206</sup> It should be noted that reciting the Qur'ān in intonation (alḥān al-ghinā') was not always condemned. 'Aṭā'b. Abī Rabāḥ allegedly said that it was permissible and based his opinion on a tradition from the qāṣṣ 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr who related that the Prophet David would recite while playing music and that the echo of his music and recitation would cause him to weep; see Fākihī, Akhbār, 3:24–25.

The connection between the quṣṣāṣ and swooning, however, is tenuous. The only report that directly connects the two comes from a certain Qays b. Jubayr al-Nahshalī, who alleged: "The swooning that occurs at the quṣṣāṣ comes from Satan (al-saʻqa ʻinda al-quṣṣāṣ min al-Shaytān)." This report, though, is problematic on two levels. First, the identity of Qays b. Jubayr is unknown—a fact that led Ibn Ḥajar, drawing from Ibn Ḥazm, to claim that he was Qays b. Jabtar. Secondly, the earliest citation that I have been able to find of this tradition is in Ibn Abī Shayba's (d. 235/849) Muṣannaf and it does not mention the quṣṣāṣ simply saying: "Swooning is from Satan (al-saʻqa min al-Shaytān)." The first

She reportedly said: "The Qur'ān is more dignified than to have men lose their minds when it is read, but as God said (al-Qur'ān akram an tanzifa 'anhu 'uqūlu al-rijāl, wa lakinnahu kamā qāla Allāh), 'Whereat shivers the flesh of those who fear their Lord, so that their flesh and their hearts soften to the remembrance of God (al-Zumar [39]:23)." See Ibn Sallām, Faḍā'il al-Qur'ān, 214–215; Ibn Baṭṭāl, Sharḥ Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī, ed. Yāsir b. Ibrāhīm (Riyadh, 2000), 10:282; al-Zamakhsharī, Rabī' al-abrār, ed. 'Abd al-Amīr Muhannā (Beirut, 1992), 4:301; Ibshīhī, Mustaṭraf, 1:225.

<sup>208</sup> He said: "We fear God but do not fall down (innanā li-nakhshaʿAllāh wa mā nasquṭ)." See Ibn Baṭṭāl, Sharḥ, 10:282.

She was asked if the first believers (al-salaf) lost consciousness at the recitation of the Qur'ān and she said: "No, but they used to weep (lā, wa-lakkinahum kānū yabkūn)." See Ibn Battāl, Sharh, 10:282.

<sup>210</sup> Ibn Sallām, Faḍāʾil, 215; Zamakhsharī, Rabī', 4:302. It is important to note here that the rise of the quṣṣāṣ was also connected by some to the Kharijites. This issue will be addressed below in Chapter Four.

<sup>211</sup> Ibn Baṭṭa, al-Ibāna 'an sharī'at al-firqa al-nājiya, eds. Riḍā b. Na'sān Mu'ṭī et al. (Riyadh, 1994), 3:200; Ibshīhī, Mustaṭraf, 1:225.

<sup>212</sup> Ibn Baṭṭa, Ibāna, 3:200; Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 118; Ibshīhī, Mustaṭraf, 1:225.

The orthographical similarity between Jubayr (جبير) and Jabtar (جبير) is obvious; see Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:446.

<sup>214</sup> Ibn Abī Shayba, Muṣannaf, 7:207.

citation adding the  $quss\bar{a}s$  to the report is that of Ibn Batta (d. 387/997). It remains possible, then, that this report was only later attached to the  $quss\bar{a}s$ .

Qasas Sessions

Each of these instances of misconduct shows how the performance of a qaṣaṣ session might easily go awry. In the face of mounting cases of malpractice such as these, the reputation of the quṣṣāṣ suffered. Yet not all was lost. To be sure, if the qāṣṣ effectively balanced the three skills of 'ilm, lisān and bayān, and kept his sessions under reasonable control, he joined the ranks of the best of the quṣṣāṣ, if not the best of the scholars in general, of their time, as the example of Bilāl b. Sa'd illustrates.

The qussas of early Islam, then, seem to have existed in a constant state of flux between respectability and impropriety. As we saw in Chapter Two, this tension was manifested in reports challenging the efficacy of the qussas as religious scholars, in spite of a significant amount of evidence that a large percentage of the early qussas were well-respected scholars. And, as has been shown above, the performance aspect of a qasas session exacerbated this tension by demonstrating how admirable traits easily became detrimental when not utilized properly. All of this contributed to a very mixed view of the early qussas teetering between seeing them as conformist scholars or as innovators. As we will see now, the debate about whether the qussas were conformists or innovators incorporated a number of issues, foremost among them being the question of when qasas originated and, concomitantly, if qasas was at all a negative innovation (bid'a).

<sup>215</sup> Ibn Batta, Ibāna, 3:200.

The Quṣṣāṣ: Conformists or Innovators?

Yet this rather positive image differs from other reports that paint a much more negative picture of the qussas, some of which we have already encountered. The most salient of these reports fall into three groups: those that place the origins of qasas among later Companions of the Prophet; those that connect it to political movements; and those that describe it as an (negative) innovation, sometimes identified by the term bidsas, foisted upon the community. The first group of reports implies that qasas was a late and, thus, new phenomenon that cannot be traced back to the Prophet and his sunna. The second group shows disapproval of qasas by connecting it to the internal religio-political strife (fitna) and the emergence of the sectarian Khawārij, both of which hit the community hard. The last group makes of qasas a (negative) innovation, with some of them going as far as describing its emergence in apocalyptic terms.

The existence of competing sentiments regarding qasas and the early qussas challenges their image as reputable, conformist scholars, suggesting that they were essentially innovators—a new and destructive development in the community. Two areas are particularly relevant for distinguishing the degree of conformity versus innovation in qasas; the issues of precedence and politics. As for the former category, conformity and innovation in the Islamic tradition are often presented as a product of precedence in the history of the community so that the earlier a judgment on the acceptability of a particular practice was adduced the more certain the community was of its authority. If, for example, a practice was be traced to the time of the Prophet, or better yet to the Prophet himself, then its existence in later periods was defended based upon its precedence. Precedence, therefore, influenced the perception of certain phenomena as being conformist, not innovative. This sentiment seems to be operative in reports discussing the origins of qasas as well as in those that describe it as bida, since the term implies that the practice had no precedent in the early community.

An additional factor relevant to the perception of the qussas as conformists or innovators relates to their political affiliations. Traditions attributing the qussas's origins to the fitna and to the Khārajites as well as those seeking to limit their practice, as in the case of a tradition restricting its legitimate implementation to the  $am\bar{u}r$  or his representative, all carry a decidedly political tone. These connect the qussas to controversial political movements in the community and intend to impart the impression that they were instruments of a destructive development in the community.

The issues of precedence and politics contributed to the emergence of contrasting views of the qussas and can be seen in the three groups of reports mentioned above and that will be analyzed below: reports about the origins of qasas; reports about their connections to political developments; and reports about them as innovators. The following analysis of these three groups will begin by tracing references to the existence of qasas from the time of the Prophet through the reigns of the first four caliphs. The end of this period is the terminus ad quem for the current chapter since, according to these reports, qasas was an established practice, in religious and political terms, by then. We have no reports, for example, alleging that qasas originated after this period.

Qaşaş at the Time of the Prophet

The Prophet as a Qāṣṣ

In Chapter One, we encountered a few reports connecting the Prophet to qaṣaṣ, one being the enigmatic report of Companions of the Prophet asking him for qaṣaṣ, resulting in the revelation of Sūrat Yūsuf.<sup>2</sup> We also came across a report of the Prophet giving qaṣaṣ as an exposition of Sūrat al-Raḥmān (55):46 and discussing its meaning with the eminent Companion Abū al-Dardā'.<sup>3</sup> Other reports claim that the Prophet gave qaṣaṣ while seated and surrounded by his listeners. These last two reports are worthy of further analysis since they are relevant for dating the beginning of qaṣaṣ.

<sup>1</sup> One of the more well-known illustrations of this principle is the concern raised by some compilers of the Qur'ān that they were engaging in something that the Prophet had not done; see A.T. Welch, "al-Ķur'ān," *El*2, 5:404–405.

<sup>2</sup> See Chapter One, 33-35.

<sup>3</sup> See Chapter One, 23.

The account of the Prophet giving qaṣaṣ while standing at the pulpit and interpreting Sūrat al-Rahmān (55):46 comes to us in multiple variants. In spite of these variants, the gasas component of the report persisted and may reveal an historical kernel of truth since the gasas portion of the account is incidental to the overall objective of the report. Clearly, the primary objective is to explain the existence of an alternate Qur'anic recitation associated with the Companion Abū al-Dardā' and not to either affirm or deny the existence of gasas at the time of the Prophet. The gasas aspect of the report, therefore, is tangential to it and, by virtue of this fact, presents an easy target for excision by later redactors, especially in light of a steadily-evolving skepticism towards the quṣṣāṣ, as well as the existence of alternate descriptions of the Prophet's conduct on the pulpit as "reciting" or even that he made the statement while in his house and not at the pulpit.<sup>4</sup> In spite of the possibility for redaction, the qaṣaṣ element in the report was preserved and was still in circulation well into the late medieval period as evidenced in its inclusion in Ibn Kathīr's (d. 774/1373) commentary. Not until 'Alī b. Sultān Muḥammad al-Qārī (d. 1014/1605) was the qaşaş variant expressly glossed with "relating hadīth to the people and admonishing them (yuḥaddithu al-nās wa-ya'izuhum)."6

Similar issues seem to apply to a second report about the Prophet giving qaṣaṣ from the pulpit of the mosque. According to this report, Abū Qatāda [al-Anṣārī] (d. 54/673) related that while the Prophet was giving qaṣaṣ a man entered and sat down. A conversation ensued between him and the Prophet ending with the Prophet declaring the legal injunction: If you enter the mosque and [the prayer session] has already begun, then perform two rakʿas before you sit. As in the case of the above report about Abū al-Dardāʾ, the qaṣaṣ aspect of this tradition is incidental to its primary objective of elucidating the proper procedures for joining belatedly prayer sessions and therefore interpretable as historically sound. However, in this instance, only a variant

<sup>4</sup> For a variant which describes his actions as reciting, see Ibn Abī Shayba, Muṣannaf, 1:49. For a variant which claims that the Prophet made the statement while in his house, see Ibn Fuḍayl, Duʿā', 174.

<sup>5</sup> Ibn Kathīr, Tafsīr, 4:280.

<sup>6</sup> Al-Qārī al-Harawī, Mirqāt al-mafātīḥ (Beirut, 1992), 5:213.

<sup>7</sup> On Abū Qatāda, see Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:573-574.

<sup>8</sup> Ṭabarānī, al-Muʻjam al-kabīr, 3:241. A qaṣaṣ text from ʻUbayd b. ʻUmayr alleged that even the Prophet, on at least one occasion, forgot to pray the correct number of rakʻas; see Chapter One, 43–44.

recorded by al-Ṭabarānī (d. 360/971) described the Prophet as giving qaṣaṣ from the pulpit. Every other reference, many predating al-Ṭabarānī, makes no mention of qaṣaṣ. It appeared then that the qaṣaṣ element was inserted later. One might be tempted to attribute this insertion to later quṣṣāṣ seeking to justify their practice by establishing a precedent for it in the sunna of the Prophet; yet the isnad of the report contains no identifiable qāṣṣ. Furthermore, since qaṣaṣ was, by al-Ṭabarānī's time, well on its way to being widely disparaged, it seems odd that an insertion of this type went unchallenged. Nonetheless, this report is intriguing if for no other reason than being an example of how qaṣaṣ still apparently garnered enough support in the early to mid-fourth/tenth century to be associated with the Prophet.

A second cluster of reports alleges that the Prophet held qaṣaṣ-sessions, seated and surrounded by students. Ibn Abī Shayba, in a section of his Muṣannaf entitled "On going to the quṣṣāṣ and sitting with them, and those who did this," recorded that the Companion Aws b. Ḥudhayfa al-Thaqafī (d. 59/678) said: "We sat with the Messenger of God, and he gave qaṣaṣ and admonished us (innā la-quʻūd 'inda rusūl Allāh wa-huwa yaquṣṣu 'alaynā wa-yudhakkirunā)." This report claims that the Prophet presided over teaching sessions including qaṣaṣ and dhikr. Beyond this, it provides no other information about the session, not even a context for it. However, a variant of this report does offer a context for the Prophet's qaṣaṣ and indicates that the primary intent of the report was for the explication of a specific legal ruling and not simply a description of those who visited the quṣṣāṣ.

According to this variant, the Prophet gave an order to have an enemy killed. However, upon learning that the man previously testified, "There is no god but God," the Prophet reversed his ruling, saying: "Go and leave him alone, for I was commanded to fight people until they say, "There is no god but God." If they say this, then their blood and money are off limits (fa-idha faʿalū dhālika ḥaruma dimāʾuhum wa-amwāluhum)."<sup>11</sup>

<sup>9</sup> The citations for this tradition are numerous. See Mālik, Muwaṭṭa', ed. Muḥammad Muṣṭafā al-A'zamī (Abu Dhabi, 2004), 2:225–226; 'Abd al-Razzāq, Muṣannaf, 1:428; Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 37:202; Bukhārī, Ṣaḥīḥ, 1:170, 391; Muslim, Ṣaḥūḥ, 1:495.

<sup>10</sup> Ibn Abī Shayba, Muşannaf, 5:289.

Ibn Abī Shayba, Muṣannaf, 6:480. The tradition can be found in many other sources. Ibn Hanbal cites only the longer tradition; see his Muṣnad, 26:86–88. Ibn Mājah included the tradition in his section entitled "The Book of Dissension (fitan): the chapter on desisting [from fighting] the one who says, 'There is no god but God.'" See his Sunan, 2:1295. Obviously he considered the objective of the tradition to be the rules of engagement in dealing with unbelievers. See also Ṭaḥāwī, Sharḥ, 3:213. See also Ṭabarānī for a variant

The Prophet with a Qass

Not only does it appear that the Prophet engaged in qaṣaṣ, he was ostensibly not the only  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  of his time. In a widely-spread tradition in many variants, it is said that the Prophet preferred attending a session of religious education in the mosque to freeing slaves, mentioned in text number 34 in Chapter One. At times the variants clearly identify the session as a qaṣaṣ session. However, even in those variants not directly connecting the tradition to qaṣaṣ, the variant often maintained an indirect association to the practice of qaṣaṣ, suggesting that this component of the report may be historically reliable.

One variant unequivocally identifying the meeting as a qaṣaṣ session alleges that when the Prophet passed by a  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  in his session, the  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  stopped his qaṣaṣ in an apparent act of deference to the Prophet. The Prophet, however, commanded him to resume, saying: "Give qaṣaṣ, for sitting [in that qaṣaṣ-session] from the time of the prayer of daybreak until sunrise is preferable to me than freeing four slaves, and sitting in this place after the evening prayer until the setting of the sun is preferable to me than freeing four slaves." This report contends unequivocally that not only was qaṣaṣ practiced during the time of the Prophet, it met with his definite approval.

which states that the Prophet was not giving qaṣaṣ when he was approached with this issue, but rather was sleeping; see his al-Muʻjam al-kabīr, 1:217.

<sup>12</sup> See Chapter One, 47.

<sup>13</sup> Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 36:507; Ṭabarānī, al-Mu'jam al-kabīr, 8:260; Suyūṭī, Durr, 5:382.

The identity of Kurdūs the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  of Kufa is uncertain. Ibn Ḥanbal records two variants of the tradition. In one he is identified simply as Kurdūs and in the other he is said to be a later transmitter named in the  $isn\bar{a}d$  of the tradition, inquired as to the specific type of that session, he was told it was a qaṣaṣ session.<sup>15</sup>

The initial ambiguity surrounding the identity of the session along with the presence of the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  Kurdūs as the first identified transmitter of the tradition indicates that any subsequent identification of the session as a qasas session betrays a pro-qasas bias and was therefore a self-serving interpolation. However, the eminent  $had\bar{t}th$  scholar Shu'ba, who criticized the qussas for their mendacity, transmitted the tradition with no apparent redaction, including both his confession of uncertainty as to the session's identity and its subsequent identification as a qasas-session. Here, even his opposition to the qussas did not goad him into glossing the qasas element of the tradition. Shu'ba clearly had the opportunity to redact the tradition away from qasas, yet he did not seize it, preferring to be faithful to the tradition even when it contained aspects with which he may have disagreed. This also implies, for our purposes, that the qasas context of the tradition continued to be understood as such, even though the text of the tradition itself did not explicitly state what type of session it was.

The persistence of the qaṣaṣ element in the same tradition is evident in another group of variants, most were transmitted on the authority of Anas b. Mālik; they state that the people in the session were "mentioning God"  $(yadhkur\bar{u}na\ All\bar{a}h)$ .<sup>17</sup> Here again, despite the absence of any explicit mention of qaṣaṣ in these variants, one notes four factors that allude to qaṣaṣ's lingering influence upon the tradition. First, each of the variants traced back through Anas b. Mālik was transmitted from him by quṣṣāṣ: Qatāda, Thābit al-Bunānī or Yazīd al-Raqāshī.<sup>18</sup> Second, in a variant ascribe to Abū Umāma, the session is Kurdūs b. Qays; see his Musnad, 25:235–237. For a discussion of the different opinions, see the Appendix # 46.

<sup>15</sup> Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 25:236–237; Dārimī, Sunan, 2:411; Ibn Kathīr, Tafsīr, 3:81. Bayhaqī recorded the tradition in his al-Sunan al-kubrā in the section on the decorum of judges (kitāb adab al-qāḍī) in which he identified Kurdūs as a judge; see his Sunan, 10:88–89. In his Shu'ab, Bayhaqī identified the session as a majlis al-dhikr, see 1:410.

<sup>00</sup> Shu'ba's opposition to the qussas, see G.H.A. Juynboll, "Shu'ba b. al-Ḥadjdjādj," El2, 9:491–492.

<sup>17</sup> For variants of this group transmitted by Anas, see Abū Dāwūd, Sunan, 3:324; Abū Yaʻlā, Musnad, 6:119, 7:128, 7:154; Ṭaḥāwī, Sharḥ, 10:52–53; Ṭabarānī, Duʻā', 524–525. For variants of the same report but transmitted by Abū Umāma, see Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 36:521–522; Ṭabarānī, Duʻā', 525. For a variant from Abū Hurayra, see Ṭabarānī, Duʻā', 525. These variants also differ in the number of slaves to be freed, either four or eight.

<sup>18</sup> That the tradition was transmitted by both reputable (Qatāda and Thābit) and irreputable (Yazīd) students of Anas indicates that it was widely transmitted.

said to have included the repetition of religious phrases like " $All\bar{a}hu$  akbar" and " $L\bar{a}$   $il\bar{a}ha$   $ill\bar{a}$   $All\bar{a}h$ ," indicative not only of dhikr sessions, also found in qaṣaṣ sessions. <sup>19</sup> Third, Makkī, in his decidedly anti-qaṣaṣ  $Q\bar{u}t$  al- $qul\bar{u}b$ , identified the speaker of the session as 'Abd Allāh b. Rawāḥa, whom, though Makkī fails to do so, we have identified as a  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ.$  <sup>20</sup> Lastly, and most importantly, Abū Dāwūd's decision to include this variant in his chapter on qaṣaṣ ( $b\bar{a}b$   $f\bar{i}$ -l-qaṣaṣ), in spite of the lack of any reference to qaṣaṣ within the variant, signifies that the tradition was still well connected to qaṣaṣ in the third/ninth century. <sup>21</sup>

Still another variant, though different in its primary aim, also maintains a decidedly strong connection to qaṣaṣ. The famous traditionist and Qur'ān reciter Sulaymān b. Mihrān al-A'mash (d. 148/765) transmitted this tradition. He reported that the people (soldiers?) of Basra ( $ahl\ al$ -Baṣra) disagreed on the topic of qaṣaṣ and so they asked Anas b. Mālik:

"Did the messeger of God give qaṣaṣ?" He replied, "The Prophet was sent with a sword and to fight, but I heard him [also] say, "Sitting with a group that mentions God  $(yadhkur\bar{u}na\ All\bar{a}h)$  after the afternoon (`aṣr) prayer until sunset is preferable to me than the world and all that is in it."  $^{23}$

This variant is similar to the previous variants in its emphasis on the preferability of religious sessions to the material goods of this world. It differs, however, in its overarching intent. The broader question posed here lies in a comparison of qaṣaṣ and  $jih\bar{a}d$ . Nevertheless, even when the tradition seemed to branch off into other domains, such as  $jih\bar{a}d$ , the elemental connection to qaṣaṣ persisted.

The last variant of this tradition is particularly striking since it puts forward an entirely contradictory position on the benefits of qasas sessions and, consequently, may preserve remnants of the tension surrounding the legitimacy of qasas that seem to have been present at the turn of the first/seventh century. When the tradition was related to the Kufan legist and traditionist 'Āmir b. Sharāḥīl al-Sha'bī (d.c. 103/721), he opposed it by saying: "To free a slave

<sup>19</sup> See Chapter Two on the quṣṣāṣ as mudhakkirūn, 135–146.

Makkī identified the session as a dhikr-session; see his  $Q\bar{u}t$ , 2:203–204. On 'Abd Allāh b. Rawāḥa as a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$ , see the Appendix # 2.

<sup>21</sup> Abū Dāwūd, Sunan, 3:324.

On al-A'mash, see C. Brockelman and C. Pellat, "al-A'mash," EI2, 1:431.

<sup>23</sup> Ibn 'Adī, Kāmil, 7:218; Bayhaqī, Shu'ab, 1:409; Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 14:448; idem, Siyar, 9:424. Suyūṭī claims to have taken this report from Muḥammad b. Naṣr al-Marwazī (d. 294/906) who transmitted it by means of a chain that went back to Anas through Yazīd al-Raqāshī, though I have not been able to locate it in any of al-Marwazī's extant works; see Suyūṭī, Taḥdhūr, 195. On this variant, see also Ibn Ḥajar, Maṭālib, 13:399.

is preferable to me than to sit with the qussas for four months (la-an u'tique raqaba ahabbu ilayya min an ajlisa ma'a al-qussas arba'at ashhur)." Al-Sha'bī here boldly repudiates the tradition by completely reversing its intent, even swapping the numbers of slaves freed (one) and the months sitting with the qussas (four). Whether the attribution of this tradition to al-Sha'bī is correct is of no consequence to our discussion although the position ascribed to him here does reveal a degree of animosity that might be expected from him since, at one point in his life, he was allegedly beaten by a qassas and his audience in Palmyra. For our purposes, this variant betrays, once again, that the issue of qassas remained connected to this tradition and that, in the opinion of at least one reputable early Muslim scholar, this association with qassas was sufficiently reprehensible to trigger in him a visceral rejection of it.

The above allows us to conclude that, when evaluated from a variety of perspectives, the tradition under discussion appears to have been unable to rid itself of its elemental link to qaṣaṣ. By directly identifying the session as a qaṣaṣ session, by naming the teacher as the Companion/qāṣṣ 'Abd Allāh b. Rawāḥa, by Abū Dāwūd's choice to include a non-qaṣaṣ variant in a chapter on qaṣaṣ in his canonical Sunan, by introducing the tradition in a separate qaşaş-context connected to jihād and, finally, by preserving a variant of the tradition ascribing to a distinguished Successor of the first/seventh century the polar opposite intention of the Prophetic tradition, the tradition maintained its relationship to qasas. In addition, the presence of quṣṣāṣ in many of the *isnād*s of the tradition (those describing it as qaṣaṣ, in particular those identifying it as dhikr), suggests that the tradition was not a fabrication of later  $quss\bar{a}s$  attempting to justify their own controversial practices. If these qussās were truly so mendacious, we expect them to have redacted the dhikr elements of the tradition to qaṣaṣ. Indeed, the preservation of the dhikr components also indicates that the difference between a dhikr session and a qaṣaṣ session appears to have been minimal. While it is not possible to say definitively that the Prophet visited a  $q\bar{a}$ ss, the imprint that qasas left upon this tradition seems indelible and leaves a strong impression that men who were recognized as "quṣṣāṣ" existed even at the time of the Prophet.<sup>26</sup>

<sup>24</sup> Ibn Abī Shayba, Muṣannaf, 5:289. On al-Shaʿbī, see G.H.A. Juynboll, "al-Shaʿbī," *EI*2, 9:162–163.

<sup>25</sup> Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 97–98. See also the discussion of this incident in Chapter One, 30–31.

&#x27;Athamina believed that the reports about the Prophet giving <code>qaṣaṣ</code> or sitting in <code>quṣṣāṣ</code> sessions "intended to grant legitimacy to the phenomenon of <code>qaṣaṣ</code>, which was a controversial issue in Islamic society;" see his "Qaṣaṣ," 56. This postulate is counterintuitive if <code>qaṣaṣ</code> had truly developed into a controversial issue. If this was so, then one would expect

Qaṣaṣ under the Rāshidūn Caliphs

Abū Bakr "al-Şiddīq"

Aside from the Prophet himself, the only leader of the Islamic community through the end of the Umayyad period, either caliph or governor, to have purportedly personally given qaṣaṣ was the first caliph Abū Bakr "al-Ṣiddīq". In addition, he is the only practitioner of qaṣaṣ whose qiṣaṣ do not appear to have been drawn directly from within the Islamic community. According to a tradition recorded by Ibn Qutayba, and mentioned previously in Chapter One, Abū Bakr related qaṣaṣ composed from "the wisdom of the Arabs" drawn from the semi-legendary pre-Islamic orator Quss b. Sāʿida al-Iyādī.<sup>27</sup> Yet while Quss's sayings may not have been unequivocally Islamic, the fact that the Prophet himself, upon learning of Quss's demise, honored him by reciting portions of one of his speeches reveals that his wisdom sayings were by no means anathema to the young community.<sup>28</sup>

Not only did Abū Bakr give qaṣaṣ, at least one other man did likewise, either before or during his caliphate:

Abū Bakr observed a qāṣṣ who was droning on and he said, "If he was told to get up, pray two raka'as and recite something, he would have found that boring (rajul min āl Ḥazm qāla 'naṣara Abū Bakr ilā qāṣṣ qad ṭawwala fa-qāla law qīla li-hādhā qum fa-ṣalli raka'tayn iqra'a fīhima kadhā wa-kadhā la-malla dhālika)."<sup>29</sup> a greater amount of redaction in later sources in order to remove references to qaṣaṣ at the time of the Prophet, especially since the phenomenon only seems to have grown more controversial with time. It seems to me that the trend would have been to delegitimize qaṣaṣ rather than legitimize it. The preservation of the qaṣaṣ element in multiple reports connecting the Prophet to it suggests that it was an active enterprise during his time.

Ibn Qutayba, <code>Maʿārif</code>, i:6i. While Abū Bakr's <code>qiṣaṣ</code> may be the only explicit reference to non-Islamic sources used in <code>qaṣaṣ</code>, it does not imply that stories from non-Islamic sources were not told in the community. An example of this is the famous encounter between the Prophet and Naḍr b. al-Ḥārith who claimed that he could produce stories, drawn from the Persians, of the same quality of the Prophet's stories; see Guillaume, <code>Life of Muhammad</code>, 136. However, this account, and others like it, though certainly dealing with stories of non-Islamic origins, does not connect the stories to the root <code>qaṣṣa</code> and therefore lies outside the scope of the present research.

<sup>28</sup> C. Pellat, "Kuss b. Sāʿīda," EI2, 5:528.

<sup>29 &#</sup>x27;Abd al-Razzāq, Muṣannaf, 3:222.

Like the report about the Prophet observing a qasas session, this report suggests the presence of qussas from the earliest periods of the community and implies that some form of religious instruction identified as qasas existed uninterruptedly from the time of the Prophet.

Moreover, this report corroborates the importance placed on the expectation of oratorical skills in a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$ , as discussed in Chapter Three. Abū Bakr bemoaned the incompetence of this particular  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$ , specifically his longwindedness and his failure to attract the attention of his audience. According to the caliph, this  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$ , rather than possessing any particular oratory prowess, turned even religious requirements requiring no creative genius (such as prayer and recitation) into doldrums. The resulting sentiment conveyed by the report is that eloquence was expected from, and valued in, a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  from the early period. Indeed, when this aspect of the report is considered in light of Abū Bakr's own interest in the wisdom sayings of Quss b. Sāʿida, the pre-Islamic eloquent orator par excellence, an image of the caliph as a speaker concerned with the effectiveness of oration rises from amidst the shadows.

Umar b. al-Khaţţāb

In spite of the above traditions alleging that  $qa\bar{s}a\bar{s}$  was practiced by the Prophet, Abū Bakr and others from the outset of the community, the Islamic sources preserved several traditions stating that  $qa\bar{s}a\bar{s}$  did not begin until the reign of 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb. Among the most common of these reports are those alleging that  $qa\bar{s}a\bar{s}$  started with one of three men: Tamīm al-Dārī, 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr or al-Aswad b. Sarī'. <sup>30</sup> Reports about al-Aswad often specify that he was the first  $q\bar{a}\bar{s}\bar{s}$  in Basra and thus do not seem to apply to the question of the actual origins of  $qa\bar{s}a\bar{s}$ . <sup>31</sup> More numerous, however, are those claiming that either 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr or Tamīm al-Dārī was the absolute first  $q\bar{a}\bar{s}\bar{s}$ . Among these, the most common are those ascribing the origins of  $qa\bar{s}a\bar{s}$  to Tamīm.

The reports attributing the beginnings of qasas to Tamīm al-Dārī, some of which we have already encountered above, are found in many variants. Most importantly, while they allege to preserve information on the origins of qasas, <sup>30</sup> On them see the Appendix: Tamīm # 14, 'Ubayd # 25 and al-Aswad # 16.

Ibn al-Mubārak, Zuhd, 1:232; Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:41; Ibn Ḥanbal, Ṭlal, 2:124; Ibn Abī Ḥātim, Jarḥ, 2:291; Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 51. See also Pedersen, "Islamic Preacher," 233; Pellat, "Ķāṣṣ," *El*2, 4:733. The only early source that identified him as the first qāṣṣ with no statement connecting him to Basra is Ibn Qutayba's Ma'arif, see 557. De Goeje's edition of Balādhurī's Futūḥ al-Buldān states that al-Aswad was the first to judge (qaḍā) in the mosque; but the editor notes the possibility for confusion in orthography here; see his Futūḥ, 346.

they do not agree on precisely when Ṭamīm began to do so. Most claim that he began giving qaṣaṣ in the caliphate of 'Umar b. al- Khaṭṭāb whereas others allege that he did so under 'Uthmān b. 'Affān.<sup>32</sup>

The most common variant of this report states that qasas did not exist at the time of the Prophet, nor Abū Bakr; Tamīm, after asking 'Umar for permission, was allowed to give qaṣaṣ.33 Other variants expand upon this short report by asserting, for example, that after hearing from Tamīm that his qasas consisted of Qur'an recitation, reminding his listeners of God and admonishing them (agra'u 'alayhim al-Qur'ān wa-udhakkiruhum wa-a'izuhum),34 'Umar granted him permission though somewhat reticently, warning him, while running his finger across his throat: "This [qaṣaṣ] is slaughtering (al-dhabh)."35 The warning uttered by 'Umar appears to be predicated on his assumption that qaşaş was basically a form of religious education, whence the "slaughtering" mentioned in the report appears not to be connected to any other danger, like one stemming from political opposition. Whether the danger affiliated with qaṣaṣ was primarily self-inflicted because of some existential risk in qaṣaṣ or was related to some likely negative public reaction to the instruction of the  $q\bar{a}ss$  is unclear from the report.<sup>36</sup> Another variant, however, indicates that this danger was mostly external to the  $q\bar{a}ss$ , and, furthermore, inflicted on the  $q\bar{a}ss$  from the political powers. In this instance, the "slaughtering" endured by Tamīm was

Some reports claim that qaṣaṣ began with Tamīm after 'Umar's reign, implying that it originated in the time of 'Uthmān: "No one gave qaṣaṣ during the time of the Prophet, Abū Bakr and 'Umar." See Ibn Shabba, Madīna, 1:9; Ibn Mājah, Sunan, 2:1235. Another report postpones its beginnings until after 'Uthmān; see Ibn Abī Shayba, Muṣannaf, 5:291.

&#x27;Abd al-Razzāq, Muṣannaf, 3:219; Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 24:489–490; Ibn Shabba, Madīna, 1:11, 12–13; Abū Zurʻa al-Dimashqī, Tārīkh, 1:647; Ṭabarānī, Musnad al-Shāmiyyīn, ed. Ḥamdī 'Abd al-Majīd al-Salafī (Beirut, 1996), 3:10; idem, al-Muʿjam al-kabīr, 7:149; Abū Nuʻaym, Maʻrifa, 1:448; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 11:80; Ibn al-Jawzī, Muntaẓam, 5:169; idem, Quṣṣāṣ, 22–23; Dhahabī, Siyar, 2:447; Ibn Ḥajar, Iṣāba, 1:368; Suyūṭī, Taḥdhīr, 223.

This variant is from Ibn Abī ʿĀṣim, Mudhakkir, 66. A variant in Ibn ʿAsākir says that he will recite Qurʾān, command them to do good and forbid them from doing evil (aqraʾu 'alayhim al-Qurʾān wa-āmuruhum bi-l-khayr wa-anhāhum 'an al-sharr); see his Dimashq, 11:80.

See variants of this report in Ibn Wahb, Jāmi', 2:665; Ibn Shabba, Madīna, 1:10, 12–13; 'Askarī, Awā'il, 1:115; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 11:81. There is also a variant which replaces al-dhabh with the orthographically similar al-ribḥ; see Dhahabī, Siyar, 2:447. This, however, is certainly incorrect in light of the variants which include the hand gesture accompanying the statement and the variant in 'Askarī which contains the alternate reading of dhabīḥ.

<sup>36</sup> The attitude attributed to 'Umar is not significantly different from the response of some early scholars to being assigned a judgeship. See Chapter Two, 126–131.

administered by 'Umar himself, who, having found Tamīm giving qaṣaṣ, beat him and said: "Morning and evening (bukratan wa-'ashiyya)!"<sup>37</sup> This report, however, alleges that Tamīm was reprimanded for conducting his sessions at the wrong time, not for having taught something inappropriate or for failing to obtain the required permission. It suggests, then, that opposition to qaṣaṣ stemmed from shortcomings lying, strictly speaking, outside of qaṣaṣ as such.

The need for permission and, hence, the importance of political sanction for the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  are manifested in another variant of the Tamīm report; it claims that 'Umar, in fact, commanded Tamīm to give  $qa\bar{s}a\bar{s}$ . After coming across an unknown group in the mosque and learning that they met every Saturday around a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$ , the caliph commanded Tamīm to take over this task. <sup>38</sup> The report suggests that, while Tamīm was not the first  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$ , he was the first to have been specifically appointed to the position. In fact, the report insinuates that the unnamed former  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  had already developed a routine of meeting every Saturday—an apparent sign of some degree of perpetuity of  $qas\bar{s}a\bar{s}$ .

In addition, this account is an important witness to the ruling establishment's claim to monitor and control qaṣaṣ, displayed in 'Umar's ordering of Tamīm to take over the practice. Thus, if its attribution to 'Umar is reliable, this account constitutes the earliest attempt of the political authorities to actively control qaṣaṣ.

Finally, the report hints at the possibility of separate and independent <code>qaṣaṣ</code> forums, those enjoying the permission of the political elite and those not, existing simultaneously. While 'Umar's command is certainly couched in language that limits <code>qaṣaṣ</code> and thus reins it in under the umbrella of governmental control, the alleged prior existence of a Saturday circle suggests that <code>qaṣaṣ</code> was in some way spontaneous and unregulated.

Contrasting those variants asserting that Tamīm began giving qaṣaṣ during the caliphate of 'Umar are those alleging he did not start doing so until the caliphate of 'Uthmān. Like those connecting Tamīm to 'Umar, these versions can also be found in multiple variants and often contain inconsistencies between them. According to one such variant, al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī claimed that qaṣaṣ began in the caliphate of 'Uthmān and that the first  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  was Tamīm.' Mālik b. Anas offered an explanation for why it did not begin until 'Uthmān's reign. He maintained that 'Umar initially rejected Tamīm's request, accusing him of wanting to attract attention to himself, as we saw in Chapter Three: "You only want to say, "I am Tamīm, know me!" Then, later, 'Uthmān appointed him  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  in the mosque.<sup>40</sup> A third variant recalls the danger the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  faced from the political authorities such that, when 'Uthmān discovered that Tamīm was giving  $qas\bar{s}s$ , he beat him, just as 'Umar allegedly did.<sup>41</sup> Finally, and according to a variant that reconciled the 'Umar and 'Uthmān variants, al-Zuhrī claimed that Tamīm, after initially being refused permission by 'Umar, asked the caliph a second time, at the end of his reign, to give  $qas\bar{s}s$  and 'Umar granted him permission to do so once a week; 'Uthmān later granted him permission to expand this to twice a week.<sup>42</sup>

<sup>37</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 11:81.

<sup>38</sup> Ibn Shabba, Madīna, 1:11.

<sup>39</sup> Ibn Shabba, Madīna, 1:10; Maqrīzī, Khiṭaṭ, 4/1:28; al-Najm, "Qiṣaṣ," 168; idem, Quṣṣāṣ, 29–30.

Three aspects of the Tamīm report are particularly relevant to our study. First, by placing Tamīm's request in the caliphate of 'Umar or 'Uthmān, the tradition seeks to set the terminus ante quem for the emergence of qaşaş, implying that it did not exist at the time of the Prophet and Abū Bakr. Since we have already encountered a number of traditions proposing that qaşaş began prior to the caliphate of 'Umar, this claim is suspect and betrays an attempt to portray gasas as a later development without precedence in the sunna of the Prophet. Secondly, the reports reveal the danger perceived to have accompanied qaṣaṣ, be it either innate to the practice itself or a product of public or official reaction to the instruction, as indicated by the statement that qaṣaṣ is "slaughtering" or in the meting out of corporal punishment by the ruling authorities on the  $q\bar{a}ss$  if he failed to meet their expectations. Thirdly, the tradition introduces a distinctly political aspect to the management of qaṣaṣ. The concern expressed here for approving and controlling qaşaş under the auspices of government authorities through granting permission to its practitioners may help explain the spread of this tradition and that in spite of other reports connecting its existence to the Prophet, Ibn Rawāḥa, Abū Bakr and other unnamed quṣṣāṣ prior to 'Umar's reign. Certainly, a tradition claiming that qaṣaṣ had no precedent in the practice of the Prophet or Abū Bakr and that it was initially instituted with the permission of 'Umar could benefit the governing authorities in restraining the wanton expansion of unmonitored meetings. This type of concern over qaṣaṣ sessions seems to only grow with the passage of time, as will be shown in Chapter Five.

While it is possible that the Tamīm reports are fabrications intended, at least in part, to strengthen governmental control over the qussas, the other reports alleging that 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr was the first  $q\bar{a}s$  raise a second possibility for their existence, namely that of a local, civic orientation in the evolution of gasas.<sup>43</sup> Two indicators hint at this possibility. First, 'Askarī (d.c. 400/1010), in his Awā'il, specifies that the two Companions, Tamīm and 'Ubayd, were the first quṣṣāṣ of their respective cities.44 Even though Askarī's methodology was simply to record the awā'il traditions available to him, the fact that he specified the city to which each Companion was connected indicated awareness that reports of "the-first-qāss" were apropos of specific locales. Secondly, third/ ninth century works on the history of Mecca and Medina highlight the beginnings of gasas in their respective cities, so that Fākihī's (d.c. 275/889) Akhbār Makka and Ibn Abī Khaythama's (d. 279/892) Akhbār al-Makkiyyīn record the report that 'Ubayd was the first qāss, while Ibn Shabba's (d. 262/876) Akhbār al-Madīna emphasizes that Tamīm was the first, though not to the exclusion of all references to 'Ubayd as  $q\bar{a}ss.^{45}$  Since the intent of these works was to present the merits of each city, it is not surprising that they focus upon the  $q\bar{a}ss$  who was specifically associated with that city. It is for this reason that the inclusion of a report about the Meccan 'Ubayd as a  $q\bar{a}ss$  in Medina in Ibn Shabba's work is of particular interest.

<sup>40</sup> Ibn Wahb, Jāmi, 2:664.

<sup>41</sup> Tamīmī, Miḥan, 307.

<sup>42</sup> Ibn Shabba, Madīna, 1:11.

After recording seven variants of the Tamīm report, Ibn Shabba related a report traced back to the Meccan scholar 'Aṭā' b. Abī Rabāḥ (d.c. 115/733) stating: "'Umar commanded 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr to remind the people after the morning and afternoon prayers in the mosque of the Prophet in Medina and that has continued until this day."<sup>46</sup> This report does not specifically identify 'Ubayd as the first  $q\bar{a}ss$ —an honor reserved for Tamīm—though it does locate him in Medina, not Mecca. Furthermore, 'Ubayd was described as having been involved in establishing the practice of the qasas and he was commanded to give dhikr after the morning and afternoon prayers. A similar description of qasas can be found in Fākihī's  $Akhb\bar{a}r$  Makka, where 'Ubayd's qasas is claimed to have been composed of remembering God (dhikr  $All\bar{a}h$ ) and supplication ( $du'\bar{a}$ ') and that it took place in the Meccan mosque (al-masjid al- $har\bar{a}m$ ) after the morning prayer. Fākihī added that 'Ubayd was the first to engage in it.<sup>47</sup> It may be, then, that what 'Umar asked 'Ubayd to do in Medina was later

<sup>43</sup> Ibn Saʻd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:24; Fākihī, Akhbār, 2:338; Ibn Qutayba, Maʻārif, 557; Ibn Abī Khaythama, Akhbār al-Makkiyyīn, 1:250; Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 22. Goldziher (Studies II, 150–152), Pedersen ("Islamic Preacher," 217), and Pellat ("Ķāṣṣ," 4:733) were aware of these traditions about 'Ubayd but did not evaluate them.

<sup>44 &#</sup>x27;Askarī, Awā'il, 2:127-128.

It should be noted that Ibn Abī Khaythama's Akhbār al-Makkiyyīn edited by Ismā'īl Ḥasan Ḥusayn (Riyadh, 1997) is actually a publication of the section on Mecca from Ibn Abī Khaythama larger al-Tārīkh al-kabīr and is not a separate work of Ibn Abī Khaythama.

<sup>46</sup> Ibn Shabba, Madīna, 1:13.

<sup>47</sup> Fākihī, Akhbār, 2:338.

transferred to Mecca or was attributed to the Meccan 'Ubayd by later sources like Fākihī. Moreover, these traditions corroborate aspects of the modus operandi of the first qaṣaṣ sessions—dhikr and supplication to God.

In spite of certain factors indicating that the reports, including that about al-Aswad b. Sarīʻ in Basra, convey a regional orientation, it is not possible, at this juncture, to explain away the existence of these competing reports concerning the first  $q\bar{a}ss$ . It is noteworthy though that both sets of reports agree that qasas existed during the caliphate of 'Umar. Other reports seem to affirm this. Ibn 'Abbās, for example, claimed to have witnessed Tamīm giving qasas during 'Umar's caliphate and also alleged that he and the caliph himself personally attended Tamīm's sessions. <sup>49</sup> In addition, variants of both the Tamīm and 'Ubayd reports also maintain that the caliph 'Umar ordered each of them to give qasas, thereby suggesting that the administration attempted to control the qussas from the caliphate of 'Umar. <sup>50</sup>

'Umar's connection to qaṣaṣ was apparently more extensive than simply his affiliation with Tamīm. In one instance, he weighed in on the legitimacy of extra-Qur'ānic qiṣaṣ. When the caliph discovered that a man copied the book of Daniel from the Jewish scriptures, he beat him claiming that the copyist's actions implied the existence of "qiṣaṣ which are better than the Book of God," a position 'Umar refuted by citing verses from Sūrat Yūsuf (12):1–3.<sup>51</sup> He responded in a similar manner upon hearing of a group involved in religious instruction that later compilers subsumed under the overarching rubric of qaṣaṣ. This group was allegedly "praying for the Muslims and the ruler (yadʿūna li-l-muslimīn wa-li-l-amīr)." 'Umar ordered them brought to him and whipped their leader, who retorted: "O 'Umar, we are not that group identified in the saying, 'Those are they who come from the east.'"<sup>52</sup> While their actions seem benign, 'Umar's harsh response confirms that he considered them to be illegitimate. His repudiation of their practice appears to be based on religious grounds though the apocalyptic language attributed to the group's leader may also carry political undertones. In either case, the report corroborates 'Umar's warning to Tamīm that qaṣaṣ was "slaughtering," for these types of sessions seem to have attracted the attention, as well as the criticism, of the rulers.

<sup>48</sup> The isnāds, for example, do not reveal any convincing common links suggesting a later provenance for the traditions. The isnāds are, in fact, quite diverse. The Tamīm reports are traced back to a number of Medinan sources. For those traced to al-Sā'ib b. Yazīd al-Madanī, see Ibn Shabba, Madīna, 1:11-12; Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 24:489; Abū Zurʿa al-Dimashqī, Tārīkh, 1:647; Ṭabarānī Musnad al-Shāmiyyīn, 3:10; idem, al-Mu'jam al-kabīr, 7:149; Abū Nu'aym al-Isfahānī, Ma'rifa, 1:448; Bayhaqī, Shu'ab, 2:281; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 11:80. For those traced to Humayd b. 'Abd al-Rahmān al-Madanī, see Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 11:80-81. For those traced to Nāfi', see Ibn Shabba, Madīna, 1:12. For those traced to al-Hasan al-Basrī, see Ibn Shabba, Madīna, 1:10. For those traced to Mālik b. Anas, see Ibn Wahb, Jāmi', 2:664; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 11:81. The only common link in any of these variants is Ibn Shihāb al-Zuhrī in the versions from al-Sā'ib and Ḥumayd, and as an initial transmitter; see Ibn Shabba, Madīna, 1:11. Additionally, the prevalence of Medinan sources for the Tamīm traditions may further highlight its connection to the city. Moreover, there are two initial sources for the 'Ubayd reports: the Meccan 'Aṭā' b. Abī Rabāḥ (Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:24) and the Basran qāṣṣ Thābit al-Bunānī (Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:24; Ibn Abī Khaythama, Akhbār al-Makkiyyīn, 250). Both chains then proceed with Basran transmitters. Unlike the Tamīm reports which come from Medinan sources, these reports do not draw only from

<sup>49</sup> Ibn Ḥanbal, Zuhd, 215; Ibn Shabba, Madīna, 1:12; Ibn Abī Shayba, Muṣannaf, 5:290. Ibn 'Abbās and the caliph's son 'Abd Allāh also sat with 'Ubayd; see Ibn Abī Khaythama, Akhbār al-Makkiyyīn, 253.

<sup>50</sup> Ibn Shabba, Madīna, 1:11, 13.

<sup>51</sup> Al-Balādhurī, Ansāb al-ashrāf, ed. Iḥsān 'Abbās (Beirut, 1996), 5:431.

Ibn Abī Shayba included this report in his <code>Muṣannaf</code> (5:290) in a section on <code>qaṣaṣ</code>, and Ibn Waḍḍāḥ surrounded it with a number of reports repudiating <code>qaṣaṣ</code>, thus insinuating that he also connected the tradition to <code>qaṣaṣ</code>; see his <code>Bidaʻ</code>, 167. The reference in the <code>hadīth</code> to those "who would come from the east" appears to be a quotation of part of a <code>hadīth</code> in which the Prophet predicted the rising of a people from the east reciting the Qurʾān though they, in fact, had renounced the faith. They are described in apocalyptic terms as a horn of Satan. Each time one horn is struck down another will rise culminating in the coming of the Antichrist (<code>al-Dajjāl</code>); see Ibn Ḥanbal, <code>Musnad</code>, 2:470, 11:542, 18:158–159. A similar but possibly separate tradition also describes the rising of the horn of Satan from the east as a <code>fitna</code> on the community; see Ibn Ḥanbal, <code>Musnad</code>, 8:307; 9:36; 10:224–225. For a discussion of traditions connecting the <code>quṣṣāṣ</code> to apocalyptic events, see below, 225.

I fear that if you engage in qaṣaṣ you will exalt yourself above them (the people). As you give more qaṣaṣ you will continue to feel that you are better than they, until you think that you stand in the place of Pleiades in relation to them. Then God will humble you below their feet, to the same degree, on the day of Resurrection (akhshā ʿalayka an taquṣṣa fa-tartafiʿa ʿalayhim fī nafsika, thumma taquṣṣa fa-tartafiʿa, ḥattā yukhayyala ilayka annaka fawqahum bi-manzilat al-thurayyā, fa-yaḍaʿuka Allāh taḥta aqdāmihim yawm al-qiyāma bi-qadri dhālika.)<sup>53</sup>

'Umar's trepidation concerning qaṣaṣ is here described in terms of the personal danger it brought on the  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  and also in terms of his concern for the eternal well-being of the  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$ . He does not warn the would-be  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  that he will bring on himself judgment by temporal authorities, nor even that he incited some negative reaction from his listeners. Rather, his punishment is deferred to the hereafter.

The reports connecting 'Umar to qaṣaṣ do not offer a distinct or cohesive position on the value of qaṣaṣ. Some, like those telling of the caliph granting permission to Tamīm to give qaṣaṣ and claiming that he personally attended qaṣaṣ sessions, affirm the utility of the sessions. Others describe the potentially destructive effects of the  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  on himself, the community and even the ruling authorities, hence the subsequent attempts to monitor and control the practice either by warnings about the harm qaṣaṣ can produce or by means of corporal punishment. In any case, the reason for this variety in perceptions of the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  is unclear. It is possible, even, that these reports are ahistorical and the product of later generations' back-projections, seeking either to malign or to justify the controversial practice of the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ . It seems more likely, though, that this miscellany signifies that we have an authentic corpus of reports preserving the complex and evolving religious milieu of the early period.

Uthmān b. Affān

Explicit references to qaṣaṣ during the caliphate of 'Uthmān are few. Most come in the context of reports about Tamīm al-Dārī becoming the first  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  during his reign, though, as we saw above, it is more probable that Tamīm began his qaṣaṣ activities in the caliphate of 'Umar and that 'Uthmān's reign

Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 1:267; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 11:481. See also Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:441. Al-Ḥārith was Syrian and a close Companion of Abū al-Dardā'. The sources do not agree on whether he was a Companion or a Successor; see Ibn Ḥajar, Iṣāba, 1:600. Ibn al-Jawzī recorded the same report though replacing al-Ḥārith with his father Mu'āwiya; see his Quṣṣāṣ, 37–38.

witnessed a continuation—or perhaps expansion—of qaṣaṣ, and not its genesis. Surprisingly, though, I have been able to locate only one additional reference connecting 'Uthmān personally to qaṣaṣ. In this instance, the eminent  $faq\bar{t}h$  of Medina Saʿīd b. al-Musayyab, reported that when 'Uthmān passed by a  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$ , the  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  read a sajda verse in order to coerce 'Uthmān to bow with him. 'Uthmān then purportedly gave a judgment according with the position of 'Aṭā' b. Abī Rabāḥ and 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr encountered in Chapter Three: "Prostration is required only of the one who was actively listening (al- $suj\bar{u}d$  ' $al\bar{a}$  man istama'a)." He then continued on his way without prostrating. <sup>54</sup> 'Uthmān's actions apparently provided a precedent for Ibn al-Musayyab who, likewise, refused to bow when a  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$ , who was holding a session in the mosque, read a sajda verse. <sup>55</sup>

Beyond the clear objective of the report to establish guidelines concerning the obligations on those who find themselves in ear-shot of a religious session, this account corroborates the reports encountered above suggesting that even during the reigns of the first four caliphs  $qa\bar{s}a\bar{s}$  was practiced openly, legitimately and with at least the tacit approval of the political leadership. Indeed, the report gives no indication whether or not the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  already received direct permission from the authorities to engage in  $qa\bar{s}a\bar{s}$  and, if anything, his questionable conduct suggests that the authorities resigned themselves to the existence of sessions of this ilk. In addition to this, the report describes the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  as manipulative in his attempt to compel the caliph to bow with him. While previous reports indicated that  $qas\bar{s}a\bar{s}$  was harmful in a variety of ways, this is the first ascription of duplicity to the  $qus\bar{s}a\bar{s}$ —a character flaw later exemplifying  $qus\bar{s}a\bar{s}$ .

The attempt to control the quṣṣāṣ ostensibly continued in the reign of 'Uthmān by virtue of a widely spread and well-known report citing the restriction placed upon the legitimate purveyors of qaṣaṣ. Although this report is not directly connected to 'Uthmān, the historical markers in it suggest that it refers to events that took place during his caliphate. This restriction is allegedly based on a Prophetic tradition found in multiple variants and is expressed in two basic forms: "The only ones who may give qaṣaṣ to the people are rulers, those commanded by rulers or arrogant people (lā yaquṣṣu ʿalā al-nās illā amīrun aw maʾmūrun aw mukhtāl)," and "The quṣṣāṣ are three [kinds]: rulers, those commanded by rulers or arrogant people (al-quṣṣāṣ thalātha: amīrun aw

<sup>54 &#</sup>x27;Abd al-Razzāq, Muṣannaf, 3:344. On the sajda, see A. Rippin, "Sadjda," *EI*2, 8:740.

<sup>55 &#</sup>x27;Abd al-Razzāq, Muṣannaf, 3:344.

<sup>56</sup> Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 29:587.

 $ma^{\lambda}m\bar{u}r^{un}$  aw  $mukht\bar{a}l^{un}$ )."<sup>57</sup> The term used for the last of the three groupings differs throughout the variants—others refer to them as  $mur\bar{a}^{\lambda n}$  ("hypocrites"),  $muht\bar{a}l$  ("deceivers") or mutakkalif ("affectatious"). In each case, the third category characterized the  $q\bar{a}ss$  who did not enjoy official approval as some kind of fraudulent or conceited person. The tradition unmistakably argues that legitimacy was granted exclusively by the governmental authorities, and not, for example, by religious scholars or public approval.

The tradition is strikingly similar to a statement attributed to Hudhayfa b. al-Yamān restricting the giving of legal rulings to three types of people: one who knows the abrogating from the abrogated verses, an amīr with no fear, or a foolish fraud (innamā yuftī fī-l-nās aḥadu thalāthatin rajulun 'alima nāsikh al-Qur'ān min mansūkhihi...amīr<sup>un</sup> lā yakhāf aw aḥmaq mutakallif).<sup>58</sup> Ḥudhayfa then identified the one who knows the abrogating from the abrogated verses as 'Umar b. al-Khattāb, establishing a similar hierarchy to that found in the qaṣaṣ tradition—ruler of the community, one appointed by the ruler leader (in this case the amīr) and arrogant.<sup>59</sup> In some sources, this tradition became conflated with the gasas tradition so that Hibat Allāh b. Salāma (d. 410/1019), in his al-Nāsikh wa-l-mansūkh, claimed that Hudhayfa said: "Only one of three people give qaṣaṣ to the people: an amīr, his appointee, a man who knows the abrogating verses from the abrogated verses; and the fourth is a foolish fraud."60 The insertion of the requirement for understanding the issue of abrogation forced Ibn Salāma to create a fourth category in spite of the opening statement only mentioning three. Makkī also conflated these traditions by stating that: "Only three people give legal rulings to the people: an amīr, his appointee and a fraud." He then identified the fraud (mutakallif) as the gass. 61 While these conflations may suggest a degree of confusion (Ibn Salāma) or bias (Makkī), the similarities between the traditions raise questions about their provenance, though it is not possible at this time to determine conclusively whether they are related or are indeed separate traditions.

<sup>57</sup> Ibid., 39:394.

<sup>58</sup> Dārimī, Sunan, 1:73. See also Naḥḥās, Nāsikh, 51; al-Khaṭīb al-Baghdādī, Faqīh, 2:331.

Another variant implies that there were four categories but it still maintains the general emphasis on the hierarchy of power. It lists them as the imām, the one who was appointed  $(w\bar{a}l^{ln})$ , a man who knows the abrogating verses from the abrogated, or a fool and fraud. In this tradition, the one who represents the third category is also identified as 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb; see Dārimī, Sunan, 1:73.

<sup>60</sup> Ibn Salāma, Nāsikh, 19.

<sup>61</sup> Makkī, Qūt, 2:141.

The variants of the qaṣaṣ tradition under discussion can be divided into three distinct families—those transmitted by 'Amr b. Shu'ayb (no known death date),<sup>62</sup> by 'Abd al-Jabbār al-Khawlānī (no known death date),<sup>63</sup> and 'Awf b. Mālik (d. 73/692)<sup>64</sup>—along with four single-chain transmissions.<sup>65</sup> While the  $isn\bar{a}ds$  for these variants differ significantly, the majority suggests a

- I have identified this family of variants with 'Amr b. Shu'ayb since he is the first named source in the <code>isnād</code>; see Khalīfa, <code>Ţabaqāt</code>, <code>z:725</code>; Ibn Sa'd, <code>Ṭabaqāt</code>, <code>7:239</code>; Ibn 'Asākir, <code>Dimashq</code>, <code>23:115-120</code>; Ibn Ḥajar, <code>Tahdhīb</code>, <code>2:175</code>; Dhahabī, <code>Siyar</code>, <code>5:173</code>. In fact, the variants claim that he received the tradition from his grandfather through his father ('an abīhi 'an jaddihi'). This presented problems for later <code>hadīth</code> scholars since his grandfather, Muḥammad b. 'Abd Allāh, was not a Companion of the Prophet. However, his greatgrandfather, 'Abd Allāh b. 'Amr b. al-'Āṣ (d.c. 63-77/682-696) had met the Prophet. As a result, some believed that <code>jaddihī</code> was a reference to his great-grandfather (Dhahabī, <code>Siyar</code>, <code>5:173</code>; Ibn Ḥajar, <code>Tahdhīb</code>, <code>3:279</code>), while others simply classified the report as <code>mursal</code>, i.e. missing the Companion link before the Prophet (Ibn Ḥajar, <code>Tahdhīb</code>, <code>3:278-280</code>). If the initial transmitter was in fact 'Abd Allāh b. 'Amr, then the geographical provenance of the tradition would be difficult to determine since he appears to have travelled extensively throughout the empire indicated in one way by the multiple traditions about his place of death—be it Ṭā'if, Egypt, Palestine, or 'Ajlūn in Syria.
- 63 He was allegedly from Damascus and transmitted ḥadīth from only two sources, Kaʿb al-Aḥbār and "a man of the Companions of the Prophet." On him, see Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 6:108; Ibn Abī Ḥātim, Jarḥ, 6:32; Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 7:135; Ibn ʿAsākir, Dimashq, 34:38–39; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:471.
- 64 He is 'Awf b. Mālik b. Abī 'Awf al-Ashja'ī. He was a Companion of the Prophet, "brother in faith" to Abū al-Dardā', and settled in Damascus during the caliphate of Abū Bakr (11–13/632–634); see Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 5:169, 9:404; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 22:443–444; Ibn Ḥajar, Iṣāba, 4:742–743.
- Ibn Abī 'Āṣim, Mudhakkir, 79. Al-Haythamī claims to have seen this tradition in Ṭabarānī's al-Mu'jam al-kabīr but I was unable to locate it there; see his Majma' al-zawā'id wa-manba' al-fawā'id (Beirut, 1982), 1:190. This variant has the isnād of 'Ubāda b. al-Ṣāmit (d. 34/654-655) -> Abū 'Imrān al-Anṣārī al-Shāmī (no known death date); see Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:564-565.
  - 2. Ibn Abī ʿĀṣim, Mudhakkir, 74–75; Ṭabarānī, al-Muʿjam al-kabīr, 19:79; idem, Musnad al-Shāmiyyīn, 3:144. This variant has a completely Syrian isnād beginning with Kaʿb b. ʿIyāḍ al-Shāmī (no known death date); see Ibn Saʿd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:418; Ibn ʿAbd al-Barr, Istīʿāb, 3:1322; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:470.
  - 3. Ibn Abī 'Āṣim, Mudhakkir, 81; Ibn Manda, al-Fawā'id, ed. Majdī al-Sayyid Ibrāhīm (Cairo, n.d.), 87. This variant is noteworthy since the first three transmitters were all  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ş$ : Abū Hurayra (d. 58/678) -> Mujāhid b. Jabr (d.c. 100-104/718-722) -> 'Umar b. Dharr (d. 153/770).
  - 4. Al-Shāshī, Musnad, ed. Maḥfūẓ al-Raḥmān Zayn Allāh (Medina, 1989), 1:147; al-Birtī, Musnad ʿAbd al-Raḥmān ibn ʿAwf, ed. Ṣalāḥ b. ʿĀyiḍ al-Shallāḥī (Beirut, 1994), 95. This variant was transmitted by ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. ʿAwf (d. 32/652); on him, see Ibn Saʿd, Ṭabaqāt, strong connection to Syria.  $^{66}$  A number of variants, such as the 'Amr b. Shu'ayb family as well as other individual chains, give only the statement restricting the qussas to three groups.  $^{67}$  The remaining variants differ according to a number of factors, including the people identified in the tradition, the location of the mosque where the prohibition was given and the responses to the prohibition.

In the 'Abd al-Jabbār al-Khawlānī family of variants, the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  is identified as Ka'b al-Aḥbār. According to these traditions, when Ka'b heard the prohibition, he stopped giving qasas and indeed never resumed so doing.<sup>68</sup> The implication is obvious: Ka'b, one of the preeminent qussas of early Islam, engaged in qasas illegitimately.<sup>69</sup> Furthermore, while these variants do not explicitly identify a location, the introduction of Ka'b into the tradition immediately orients the event towards Syria.

The most numerous and diverse family of variants is that transmitted by 'Awf b. Mālik. These variants describe 'Awf as both the first transmitter of the

<sup>2:294, 3:115–118;</sup> Ibn Ḥajar,  $Tahdh\bar{t}b$ , 2:540–541; M. Th. Houtsma and W. Montgomery Watt, "'Abd al-Raḥmān b. 'Awf," EI2, 1:84.

<sup>66</sup> See above nn. 62-64.

<sup>67</sup> Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 11:325–326; Dārimī, Sunan, 2:410; Ibn Shabba, Madīna, 1:9; Ibn Mājah, Sunan, 2:33; Ibn Abī 'Āṣim, Mudhakkir, 74–75, 76–77, 79, 80; Ṭabarānī, al-Muʿjam al-kabīr, 19:79; idem, Musnad al-Shāmiyyīn, 3:144; Al-Ḥakīm al-Tirmidhī, Nawādir al-usūl fī aḥādīth al-rusūl, ed. 'Abd al-Raḥmān 'Umayra (Beirut, 1992), 4:140; Ibn 'Adī, Kāmil, 2:251.

<sup>68</sup> Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 29:587; Ibn Shabba, Madīna, 1:8; Abū Nuʻaym, Maʻrifa, 6:3154; Ibn ʻAsākir, Dimashq, 34:38; Ibn al-Athīr, Usd al-ghāba fī maʻrifat al-ṣaḥāba, ed. ʻĀdil Aḥmad al-Rifāʻī (Beirut, 1996), 6:458; Suyūṭī, Taḥdhīr, 173–174.

<sup>69</sup> This variant, however, suffers from some inconsistencies that contest its reliability. 'Abd al-Jabbār purportedly transmitted two hadīths—our tradition and one on hell—both of which he took from an unidentified "man of the Companions of the Prophet." However, the biographical works also allege that he transmitted hadīth from Ka'b; see Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 6:108; Ibn Abī Ḥātim, Jarḥ, 6:32; Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 7:135; Ibn ʿAsākir, Dimashq, 34:38-39. Yet, I have not found any hadīth which connects 'Abd al-Jabbār and Ka'b as links in a transmission chain. Thus, it may be that Ka'b is mentioned as a source for 'Abd al-Jabbar simply because of his association with him in this tradition. Furthermore, the information on 'Abd al-Jabbār in the biographical dictionaries seems to owe its existence only to these two hadiths—a possibility which should elicit at least a modicum of skepticism about his historicity. Lastly, one variant of the 'Abd al-Jabbār family oriented the events to Damascus. This detail seems to be a conflation of the two traditions allegedly transmitted by 'Abd al-Jabbar. The hell-fire tradition, for example, tells of a man entering the mosque in Damascus (Ibn Ma'īn, Tārīkh, 4:387; Bayhaqī, Istidrākāt al-ba'th wa-l-nushūr, [Beirut, 1993], 497; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 34:38-39, 68:98), and since Ka'b is more commonly associated with Hims, this element seems to have drifted into the tradition on the three types of quṣṣāṣ (Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 34:38–39).

Prophetic tradition and many claim that he personally observed Ka'b giving qaṣaṣ in the mosque.<sup>70</sup> Moreover, they introduce a third person, a certain Ḥimyarī countryman of Ka'b named Dhū al-Kalā', who accompanied 'Awf into ı. The Syrian  $q\bar{a}$ şş 'Abd Allāh b. Yazīd al-Dimashqī (d. 121/738); see Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 39:420, 422; Ibn Abī 'Āṣim, Mudhakkir, 69–71; Ṭabarānī, al-Mu'jam al- $kab\bar{u}r$ , 18:78. On him, see the Appendix # 78.

Nine different men transmitted this variant from Awf. Besides 'Awf's own connection to Syria (discussed above in n. 64), five of these nine variants continued to circulate primarily in Syria.

<sup>2.</sup> The faqīh Sulaymān b. Yasār al-Madanī; see Ṭabarānī, al-Muʿjam al-awsaṭ, ed. Muḥammad Ḥasan Muḥammad Ḥasan Ismāʿīl al-Shāfiʿī (Beirut, 1999), 3:123. On him, see Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 12:100–105.

<sup>3.</sup> Bukayr b. 'Abd Allāh al-Madanī; see Ibn Wahb, Jāmi', 2:666; Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 39:394. On him, see Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 4:242–246.

<sup>4.</sup> Azhar b. Sa'd al-Ḥimṣī, who allegedly received the tradition from Dhū al-Kalā'; see Ibn Wahb, Jāmi', 2:659–660; Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 39:396, 428; Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 3:266; Ṭabarānī, al-Mu'jam al-kabīr, 18:62. It is unlikely, however, that Azhar heard this tradition from Dhu al-Kalā' since he died 92 years after Dhū al-Kalā'. It is more probable that Azhar, also from the clan of Dhū al-Kalā', inserted his ancestor into the isnād; see Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:464; Tabarānī, al-Mu'jam al-kabīr, 18:62; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:105.

<sup>5. &#</sup>x27;Amr b. 'Abd Allāh al-Ḥimṣī (no known death date) who reportedly received the tradition from Yaḥyā b. Abī 'Amr (d. 148/765); see Abū Dāwūd, Sunan, 3:323; Ṭabarānī, Musnad al-Shāmiyyīn, 1:59. Or 'Awf transmitted it directly to Yaḥyā b. Abī 'Amr; see Ibn Abī 'Āṣim, Mudhakkir, 72; Ṭabarānī, al-Mu'jam al-kabīr, 18:65. It is worthy of note that Yaḥyā was with Maslama b. 'Abd al-Malik and, therefore, was also with 'Abd Allāh b. Yazīd, another transmitter of this tradition (see # 1 above), who participated with him in the raid on Constantinople; see Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:380. It may be the case, then, that the tradition restricting qaṣaṣ to officially-sanctioned quṣṣāṣ was particularly relevant during campaign. In light of the use of qaṣaṣ in the military and the need of the military to control its inner-workings, it is not surprising that the tradition circulated in a martial context. On 'Amr, see Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 22:117; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:287. At least two other quṣṣāṣ, Mujāhid b. Jabr and Tubay', were involved in the military campaign against Constantinople; see the Appendix # 58 and # 56.

<sup>6.</sup> Kathīr b. Murra al-Ḥimṣī (d. 70–80/689–699); see Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 39:431; Ibn Abī 'Āṣim, Mudhakkir, 67–68; Bazzār, Musnad, 7:193; Ṭabarānī, al-Muʿjam al-kabīr, 18:55. On Kathīr, see Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:450–451; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:466.

<sup>7.</sup> al-Azraq b. Qays al-Baṣrī (d. 105–120/723–737); see Ṭabarānī, al-Muʿjam al-kabūr, 18:76. On him, see Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 2:318–319; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:103–104.

<sup>8.</sup> Yazīd b. Khumayr al-Ḥimṣī (no known death date); see Ṭabarānī, al-Muʿjam al-kabūr, 18:61. On him, see Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:410.

<sup>9. &#</sup>x27;Amr b. Abī Khabīb; see Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 6:327. I have not been able to identify him.

the mosque.<sup>71</sup> While most of the variants including Dhū al-Kalāʻ identify him only as the Companion of 'Awf and the one to whom 'Awf first relates the prohibition, one variant reports that Dhū al-Kalāʻ defended Kaʻb, arguing that he was "the rabbi (ḥabr) of the community"<sup>72</sup> or "among the most pious (aṣlaḥ) of the people."<sup>73</sup> In addition, besides those reports orienting the events of the tradition towards Syria during the lifetime of Kaʻb, other variants specify that it occurred while Muʻāwiya was governor of the province.<sup>74</sup> However, these variants also contain conflicting information about the location of the mosque, whether in Ḥims or Jerusalem.<sup>75</sup>

Among the more important components of the variants of this tradition are those preserving the reaction to the restriction/prohibition of qaṣaṣ. Some variants allege that Kaʿb stopped giving qaṣaṣ, then resumed giving it at a later time—some claim a year later—and that he did so in obedience to an express command from Muʿāwiya.<sup>76</sup> This contrasts with a variant from the ʿAbd

Dhū al-Kalā' is well attested in the sources, though his exact identity is uncertain; see 71 Ibn Sa'd, Tabaqāt, 9:444; Ibn 'Abd al-Barr, Istī'āb, 2:471–474; Ibn Ḥajar, Iṣāba, 2:428–430. First, he is referred to most often as simply Dhū al-Kalāʿ, the name of a South Arabian clan of Ḥimyar; see Ibn al-Kalbī, Ğamharat an-Nasab: Das genealogische Werk des Hišām Ibn Muḥammad al-Kalbī, ed. Werner Caskel (Leiden, 1966), 11:236; Ibn Wahb, Jāmi', 2:666. Secondly, the sources do not agree on Dhū al-Kalā's name: Ibn 'Abd al-Barr identified him is Abū Shuraḥbīl Ayfa' b. Nākūr (Istī'āb, 2:471); Ibn Sa'd claimed he was Sumayfa' b. Ḥawshab (Tabaqāt, 9:444); and Ibn Ḥajar suggested that his name was either Asmayfa<sup>c</sup> or Sumayfa' (Iṣāba, 2:428-430). Lastly, in a number of the variants of this tradition, he is described as being a relative to Ka'b al-Aḥbār—his brother (Ṭabarānī, al-Mu'jam al-kabīr, 18:65) or his cousin (Ibn Wahb, Jāmi', 2:666; Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 39:394)—relations which Ibn 'Abd al-Barr apparently understood in the literal sense (Istī'āb, 2:471). These designations are certainly not meant to be taken literally but are indications of a general tribal connection between Dhū al-Kalā' and Ka'b since Ka'b reportedly hailed from either Dhū Ru'ayn or Dhū al-Kalā'; see Ibn al-Kalbī, Ğamharat an-Nasab, 1:277, 11:365; Ibn Sa'd, Tabaqāt, 9:449; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:471.

<sup>72</sup> Ibn Wahb, Jāmi', 2:666.

<sup>73</sup> Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 39:394. This sense of respect is evident in another variant which appended the traditional du'ā' formula of "may God be pleased with them" to Ka'b as well as to 'Awf and Dhū al-Kalā'; see Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 6:327.

<sup>74</sup> Ibn Wahb, Jāmi', 2:659–660; Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 3:266; Ṭabarānī, al-Muʿjam al-kabīr, 18:76.

<sup>75</sup> For Ḥimṣ; see Ibn Wahb, Jāmi° 2:659–660, Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 39:431; Ibn Shabba, Madīna, 1:8. For Jerusalem=bayt al-maqdis; see Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 39:394.

Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 3:266; Ṭabarānī, al-Mu'jam al-kabīr, 18:76. A separate transmission of the tradition from 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. 'Awf also contains Mu'āwiya's command to Ka'b to resume giving qaṣaṣ; see Shāshī, Musnad, 1:147; Birtī, Musnad 'Abd al-Raḥmān ibn 'Awf, 95.

al-Jabbār al-Khawlānī family claiming that Kaʿb never resumed giving qaṣaṣ.<sup>77</sup> Lastly, in the most unusual variant of the tradition, Kaʿb challenged ʿAwf about the reliability of the tradition from the Prophet. When ʿAwf insisted that he actually heard it from the Prophet, Kaʿb defiantly justified his practice, saying: "I am neither an amīr, a maʾmūr, nor a mukhtāl!"<sup>78</sup>

The multiple variants of the tradition are important for the information they supply regarding the location of the event, the objective of the tradition and the duration of the restriction. There can be little doubt, for instance, that the tradition occurred in Syria and continued to circulate there. This is attested both in the matns and the isnāds of the tradition. It appears that the re-location of the center of power in Damascus under Muʻāwiya and his Umayyad successors heightened the importance of a tradition calling for the subsumation of a religious practice—one which had already enjoyed an historical connection to political and martial developments in the region—under the control of political authorities.<sup>79</sup>

Likewise, it is clear that the primary objective of the tradition was to restrict the activities of the qussas by insisting that only the political authorities possessed the right to authorize them. Evidently, the qussas, for reasons undisclosed in the tradition, attracted the attention of the political leaders and became a potential target for censorship. Indeed, if Ka'b, one of the most famous and preeminent qussas of the region and possibly of his time, was forbidden to give qasas because he had not been directly appointed by the appropriate political authority to do so, all other qussas likely followed suit. Yet Ka'b, declaring openly that he believed the tradition to have been a fabrication, asserted that he did nothing wrong by giving qasas without the authorities' explicit permission.

Ka'b's refusal to be pigeonholed into one of the three categories of quṣṣāṣ shows that he believed that qaṣaṣ could be practiced independently, meaning without the permission of the ruling authorities, and yet remain legitimate, meaning without bearing the stigma of conceit or fraud. A similar sentiment can be found in traditions we encountered above. When the Prophet, for example, visited a  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$ , the  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  halted his qaṣaṣ in deference to the Prophet and only

<sup>77</sup> Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 29:587; Ibn Shabba, Madīna, 1:8; Abū Nuʻaym, Maʻrifa, 6:3154; Ibn ʻAsākir, Dimashq, 34:38; Ibn al-Athīr, Usd al-ghāba, 6:458; Suyūṭī, Taḥdhīr, 173–174.

<sup>78</sup> Țabarānī, Musnad al-Shāmiyyin, 1:59.

As has already been discussed in Chapter One, qaṣaṣ was a tool of the Islamic armies in inciting the soldiers to fight. Many of the references to its use in this capacity focused on its role in the conquest of Syria. The attempt of Muʿāwiya to control qaṣaṣ will be discussed in Chapter Five.

resumed his qaṣaṣ upon the encouragement of the Prophet. <sup>80</sup> The existence of the session and the Prophet's affirmation of it seem to indicate that the  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  was acting spontaneously yet still legitimately. Similarly, Umar's initial refusal to make a value judgment about qaṣaṣ, despite a direct request for a ruling on its legitimacy, suggests that qaṣaṣ was done without official permission and without censure; the caliph told him: "Do as you like." His only warning was that the practice brought with it dangers for the practitioner. In tandem, these reports insinuated that Ka'b may have perceived of his involvement in qaṣaṣ as an extension of the independent yet legitimate practice of qaṣaṣ affirmed by the Prophet and continued under his successors. Later, as qaṣaṣ began to draw to itself the attention of the political authorities, a development that seems to have begun under 'Umar and to have expanded under subsequent caliphs, it was met with attempts by those authorities to curtail its spontaneity and to restrict the contexts of its legitimacy.

Lastly, the fact that some variants assert that the ban on <code>qaṣaṣ</code> was temporary may imply that the restriction was intended to achieve a certain short-term objective connected to the activities of the <code>quṣṣāṣ</code>. Indeed, after being told that he should stop giving <code>qaṣaṣ</code>, Kaʿb was commanded, in some variants, by Muʿāwiya to resume <code>qaṣaṣ</code> in the following year—thereby conferring upon him the category of <code>maʾmūr</code>!

One must add that Ka'b seems to have enjoyed a longstanding and close relationship with both 'Uthmān b. 'Affān and his governor over Syria Mu'āwiya. This suggests that Ka'b himself was not the target of the restriction. He was a strong supporter of 'Uthmān, defending the Caliph in the face of rebukes from the influential Abū Dharr al-Ghifārī and, in return, being defended by the Caliph when Abū Dharr allegedly struck him with his staff and said: "Son of the Jewess, what are you doing here? By God, you will learn from me, or I shall do violence to you!" And Ka'b extended his support for 'Uthmān to another Umayyad, Mu'āwiya. During the caliphate of 'Uthmān, Ka'b, in response to a poet who allegedly declared 'Alī b. Abī Ṭālib the next caliph, asserted that Mu'āwiya would succeed him. In addition, Mu'āwiya praised Ka'b, placing him among the 'ulamā' of the community: "Is it not [the case] that Abū al-Dardā' is one of the hukamā', and 'Amr b. al-'Aṣ is one of the hukamā', and

<sup>80</sup> See the discussion of this report above, 194.

<sup>81</sup> See the discussion of this report above, 205.

<sup>7.</sup> Tabarī, Tārīkh, 1:2860–2861 (translation taken from R. Stephen Humphreys, The History of al-Ṭabarī XV: The Crisis of the Early Caliphate, [Albany, NY, 1990] 15:67).

<sup>83</sup> Țabarī, Tārīkh, 1:2946–2947.

Kaʿb al-Aḥbār one of the 'ulamā'?"<sup>84</sup> In fact, Muʿāwiya apparently harbored no principled opposition to the quṣṣāṣ in general since he allegedly visited them as part of his daily routine after praying the morning prayer (fajr).<sup>85</sup> These reports convey a strong and cordial relationship between Kaʿb and at least two major ruling authorities, and it is this relationship that makes sense of the variant that depicts Kaʿb as surprised by the restriction and hence willing to challenge the authenticity of the Prophetic tradition in the first place.

It may be noteworthy to recall at this juncture the famous story of the tension between Muʻāwiya and Abū Dharr al-Ghifārī discussed in Chapter One. If Abū Dharr's criticism of Muʻāwiya was expressed through qaṣaṣ, as the Shī'ite scholar al-Majlisī claimed, then were restrictions placed upon qaṣaṣ, through a (fabricated?) Prophetic tradition, meant to limit political dissent in Syria during that period of tension between the famous Companion and the governor? If so, this may explain those variants telling of restrictions on qaṣaṣ and then the permission to resume qaṣaṣ—once the political threat exemplified by Abū Dharr was removed, Muʻāwiya felt free to reinstate Kaʻb, the leading qāṣṣ of the province, now as a ma'mūr, and thus a legitimate qāṣṣ, in compliance with the Prophetic tradition.

The tension that seems to have existed between the <code>quṣṣāṣ</code> and the political elite is evident even in Muʻāwiya's future relationship with Kaʻb's countryman, Dhū al-Kalāʻ, whom we have encountered above. At the battle of Ṣiffīn, Dhū al-Kalāʻ supported Muʻāwiya and allegedly even engaged in the <code>qaṣaṣ</code>-like practice of preaching to the people and inciting them to warfare in defense of his cause (<code>wa-huwa al-ladhī khaṭaba al-nās wa-ḥarraḍahum ʻalā al-qitāl</code>). Set in spite of this support, Muʻāwiya did not trust Dhū al-Kalāʻ because of the latter's belief that 'Alī was innocent of the murder of 'Uthmān. Therefore, it is reported that the governor was pleased when he learned that Dhū al-Kalāʻ was killed at Ṣiffīn. So

Each of these incidents suggests that by the governorship of Muʻāwiya over Syria (c. 25–40/646–661), qaṣaṣ sessions were becoming increasingly politicized. This development accounts for the expansion of reports seeking to restrict qaṣaṣ, as well as for the existence of another strain of reports justifying and supporting the independent, yet legitimate, practice of qaṣaṣ in the

<sup>84</sup> Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:471.

<sup>85</sup> Mas'ūdī, Murūj, 3:220.

<sup>86</sup> Ibn al-ʿImād al-Ḥanbalī, Shadharāt al-dhahab fī khabar man dhahab, eds. 'Abd al-Qādir al-Arnā'ūṭ and Maḥmūd al-Arnā'ūṭ (Damascus, 1986–1993), 1:46. This tradition shows the overlap between qaṣaṣ and khaṭāba as mentioned in Chapter Three.

<sup>87</sup> Ibn 'Abd al-Barr, Istī'āb, 2:472.

community—a sentiment accounting for Ka'b's insistence that the restriction enjoyed no foundation in a Prophetic tradition in the first place.

Alī b. Abī Ṭālib

Even though attempts by the political authorities to rein in the qussas were evident prior to the reign of 'Alī, the politicization of qasas may not have reached official status until the struggle between 'Alī, the fourth caliph, and Mu'āwiya. In a tradition transmitted by the ardently pro-'Alid Egyptian scholar 'Abd Allāh b. Lahī'a (d. 174/790) from Yazīd b. Abī Ḥabīb (53–128/672–746), recorded only in Maqrīzī's Khiṭaṭ: "'Alī invoked God and cursed those who were fighting him. Mu'āwiya learned of this and commanded a man to give qasas after the morning (al-subh) and evening (al-maghrib) prayers, praying for him and for the Syrians. Yazīd said, 'And this was the beginning of qasas'."88 This report not only claims to tell of the beginnings of qasas, it also clearly alleges that qasas was a political activity from its inception.

According to Ibn Lahīʻa, qaṣaṣ was, first and foremost, an exercise in the political manipulation of religious rhetoric. In fact, Ibn Lahīʻa's own interest in stories of the genre of qiṣaṣ al-anbiyä, as indicated by his preservation of a papyrus copy of Wahb b. Munabbih's  $Had\bar{u}th$   $D\bar{a}w\bar{u}d$ , suggests that he harbored no principled opposition to the religious stories occasionally associated with the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ . As a result, it seems that, in this case, Ibn Lahīʻa may have associated qaṣaṣ more with political movements than with religious traditions. In fact, since we have already encountered a number of traditions tracing religious qaṣaṣ back to the Prophet, it is clear that this tradition must address only the use of qaṣaṣ as a political tool and, therefore, as 'Athamina has correctly noted, "Muʻāwiya, in fact, did not invent qaṣaṣ.... What he did do, though, was to utilize an existing phenomenon in order to promote his own political aims."

Another famous Egyptian scholar Layth b. Sa'd (d. 175/791) interpreted Mu'āwiya's use of qaṣaṣ in this way as a marked development in the nature of qaṣaṣ. He alleged that this new development indicated a partitioning of qaṣaṣ into two manifestations, what he calls qaṣaṣ al-'āmma and qaṣaṣ al-khāṣṣa. He identified qaṣaṣ al-'āmma as signifying a situation in which, "a group of Maqrīzī, Khiṭaṭ, 4/1:28; 'Athamina, "Qaṣaṣ," 66. A second report claims that 'Alī would "mention" (dhakara) in his cursing Muʻāwiya first, then 'Amr b. al-'Āṣ, then Abū al-A'war al-Sulamī, then Abū Mūsā; see Maqrīzī, Khiṭaṭ, 4/1:28.

<sup>89</sup> R.G. Khoury noted that Ibn Lahī'a preserved a papyrus copy of Wahb b. Munabbih's Ḥadīth Dāwūd which is extant today and which he has called "the oldest of its kind in Islam," see "Wahb b. Munabbih," EI2, 34–35. Khoury published this in his Wahb b. Munabbih, 34–115.

<sup>90 &#</sup>x27;Athamina, "Qaṣaṣ," 65.

people congregate around a  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ who admonishes them and reminds them [of God] (fa- $amm\bar{a}$  qaṣaṣ al-' $\bar{a}$ mma fa-huwa al- $ladh\bar{\iota}$  yajtami'u ilayhi al-nafaru min al- $n\bar{a}$ s ya'izuhum wa-yudhakkiruhum)." He surprisingly claims that these sessions were "reprehensible ( $makr\bar{u}h$ )" for both the practitioner and the listener (fa- $dh\bar{a}$ lika  $makr\bar{u}h$  li-man fa'alahu wa-li-man istama'ahu). Qaṣaṣ al- $kh\bar{a}$ ṣṣa, on the other hand, was:

That which Muʻāwiya instituted and over which he appointed an agent. When this agent had completed the morning prayer, he sat and mentioned God, praised Him, glorified Him, prayed for the Prophet, supplicated for the Caliph, for the people who give him their allegiance, for his retinue and for his soldiers, and cursed the caliph's opponents and the unbelievers, all without exception (fa-huwa al-ladhī jaʻalahu Muʻāwiya: wallā rajalan ʻalā al-qaṣaṣ, fa-idhā sallama min ṣalāt al-ṣubḥ, jalasa wadhakara Allāh-ʻazza wa-jalla- wa-ḥamidahu wa-majjadahu, wa-ṣallā ʻalā al-nabī, wa-daʻā li-l-khalīfa wa-li-ahli walāyatihi wa-li-ḥashamihi wa-junūdihi, wa-daʻā ʻalā ahli ḥarbihi wa-ʻalā al-mushrikīn kāffatan).91

Layth b. Sa'd's description of the two forums of <code>qaṣaṣ</code> indicates, without doubt, that <code>qaṣaṣ</code> <code>al-khāṣṣa</code> was politically oriented while <code>qaṣaṣ</code> <code>al-ʿāmma</code> was religiously oriented. In fact, Layth's report implies that <code>qaṣaṣ</code> <code>al-khāṣṣa</code> was the newer phenomenon implemented by Muʿāwiya, whose decision to politicize <code>qaṣaṣ</code> made this expression of it "an official institution from all standpoints." The original <code>qaṣaṣ</code> appears to be that forum Layth described as <code>qaṣaṣ</code> <code>al-ʿāmma</code>, emphasizing the religious practices of admonition and calling people to be cognizant of God. Those who practiced this form of <code>qaṣaṣ</code> seem to engage in it of their own accord with no explicit involvement, either in support of the session or in opposition to it, from the political authorities. According to the report, then, the essential difference between the two forums was two-fold: content and authority.

Qaṣaṣ al-khāṣṣa existed to advance the cause of the political authorities by praying for its members and cursing their enemies. While this qaṣaṣ session utilized religious terminology, it served political objectives. In fact, even though this may have been the moment qaṣaṣ was "institutionalized," drawing from 'Athamina's observation, it may not have been the only time, nor the first time, qaṣas was used to advance a religio-political ideology if we accept the authenticity of the report of Abū Dharr using qaṣaṣ against Mu'āwiya and

<sup>91</sup> Maqrīzī, Khiṭaṭ, 4/1:28.

<sup>92 &#</sup>x27;Athamina, "Qaṣaṣ," 69.

'Uthmān. Furthermore, we have already noted examples of qaṣaṣ based in martial contexts promoting the cause of the army. Consequently, qaṣaṣ al-khāṣṣa, here, is certainly meant to describe "political" or "official" qaṣaṣ.<sup>93</sup>

Qaṣaṣ al-'āmma, on the other hand, describes that form of qaṣaṣ we encountered often in this chapter, and which appears to have been around since the time of the Prophet. It was a religious session. However, as we noted above, even these sessions apparently required sanction from the political authorities, as indicated in Tamīm al-Dārī seeking permission to give qaṣaṣ teaching Qur'ān and admonishing the people. Furthermore, as we saw above, 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb commanded 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr "to remind the people after the morning and afternoon prayer in the Prophet's mosque in Medina," establishing a routine that met at the time of Layth's qaṣaṣ al-'āmma sessions yet corresponded in conduct more with the qaṣaṣ al-'āmma sessions. 94 Therefore, when Layth's report is juxtaposed with other reports about qaṣaṣ the distinctions between khāṣṣa and 'āmma posited by it seem out of place.

It must be emphasized, also, that Layth's report does not describe two equally reputable sessions, one of which just happens to be more political in orientation. In fact, among the more surprising aspects of the report is the harsh judgment that  $qa\bar{s}a\bar{s}$  al-' $\bar{a}mma$ , composed of admonition and remembering God, is "reprehensible"  $(makr\bar{u}h)$ . Since the statement in general is clearly political in tone and context, this depiction merits interpretation as an expression of the extent of political influence over the  $qa\bar{s}a\bar{s}$  sessions. Thus, from a political standpoint, any teacher not co-opted by the authorities posed a threat to the administration and thus his sessions were classifiable as "reprehensible."

The above reports suggest that qaṣaṣ became a controversial political tool during the struggle between 'Alī and Mu'āwiya. The controversy surrounding qaṣaṣ, however, was not a product of its political use alone. The caliph 'Alī also purportedly evaluated the quṣṣāṣ of his time based on religious merits. In one instance, 'Alī is said to have tested the knowledge of a qāṣṣ by asking him about what promotes and destroys faith. When the qāṣṣ answered with "piety and greed," respectively, 'Alī lauded him, saying: "Give qaṣaṣ, for those like you should give qaṣāṣ (quṣṣa fa-mithluka yaquṣṣu)." (Indeed, seven quṣṣāṣ were ostensibly either supporters of 'Alī or at least transmitted from him: 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Abī 'Amra; 'Uqba b. 'Amr; Abū al-Aḥwaṣ; Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Sulamī; Sa'īd b. Jubayr; Kurdūs; Abū Yaḥyā al-A'raj.)<sup>96</sup> As we saw in Chapter Three, 'Alī also insisted that a  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ know the difference between the abrogating and abrogated verses (al- $n\bar{a}$ sikh wa-l- $mans\bar{u}$ kh) and reproved one  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ who did not by telling him that he harmed both himself and the community by his ignorance (halakta wa-ahlakta).<sup>97</sup> This  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ was one of those who gave qaṣaṣ only to be known; 'Alī said of him: "This one is saying, "Know me!"

<sup>93 &#</sup>x27;Athamina translated khāṣṣa with "official;" see his "Qaṣaṣ," 69.

<sup>94</sup> Ibn Shabba, Madīna, 1:13.

<sup>95</sup> Wakī', Quḍāt, 2:196; Abū Nuʻaym, Ḥilya, 4:148–149; Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 25; Suyūṭī, Taḥdhīr, 193. Ibn Kathīr identified the qāṣṣ as Nawf al-Bakkālī (Bidāya, 9:24) while Makkī claimed it was al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, though he did not use the verb qaṣṣa but, rather, takallama (Qūt, 2:339). Ibn Taymiyya, however, refuted the report that it was al-Ḥasan, claiming that ʿAlī never met al-Ḥasan; see his Majmūʿ fatāwā, 13:244.

'Alī not only censured specific qussas, he also allegedly denounced them all outright. After he beat a man for giving qasas in the mosque of Kufa, the  $q\bar{a}ss$  asked why he treated him so harshly when he was essentially raising supplications to God and recalling His majesty (rajulan yaduila Allah wa-yudhakkiruhu bi-'azīm). 'Alī replied: "I heard my close friend (khalīli) Abū al-Qāsim say: 'There will come to my community a group called the qussas. As long as they continue to conduct their sessions, their deeds will not be accepted by God ( $l\bar{a} yurfau la-hum 'amalun il\bar{a} Allah mā kānū fī majālisihim tilka$ ):"99 This censure, allegedly based on a tradition from the Prophet (Abū al-Qāsim), was absolute and made no distinctions between types of qasas. However, its influence in the community was minimal in light of the many qussas of the early period, and, indeed, the report was located in a work on negative innovations, Ibn Waddāh's Kitab al-bida'.

<sup>96</sup> On them, see the Appendix: Abd al-Raḥmān b. Abī 'Amra (#15), 'Uqba b. 'Amr (#17), Abū al-Aḥwaṣ (#26), Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Sulamī (#27), Sa'd b. Jubayr (#40), Kurdūs (#46) and Abū Yaḥyā al-Aʻraj (#49).

This tradition comes in many sources and variants; see Ibn Wahb, Jāmi', 2:662-663; 97 Ibn Sallām, Nāsikh, 4; Abū Khaythama al-Nasā'ī, al-Ilm, 31; Ibn Abī Shayba, Muṣannaf, 5:290; Muḥāsibī, Fahm al-Qur'ān, 327; al-Ḥarbī, Gharīb al-ḥadīth, ed. Sulaymān Ibrāhīm Muḥammad al-ʿĀyid (Mecca, 1985), 3:1044; Ibn Abī ʿĀṣim, Mudhakkir, 82; Naḥḥās, Nāsikh, 49; Bayḥaqī, Sunan, 10:117; al-Khaṭīb al-Baghdādī, Faqīh, 1:244; Ibn al-Jawzī, Nawāsikh, 29. Some variants do not describe the man confronted by 'Alī as a qāṣṣ. Al-Naḥḥās recorded variants that identify him as "a man scaring the people (rajulunyukhawwifu al-nās)," or "a man admonishing the people (rajulun yudhakkiru al-nās)." See his Nāsikh, 47-49. In Ibn Hazm and Bayhaqī, the editors have opted for  $q\bar{a}d\bar{t}$  rather than  $q\bar{a}ss$ —a reading which is suspect in light of the many sources which identify him as a qāṣṣ; see Ibn Ḥazm, Nāsikh, 5-6; Bayhaqī, Madkhal, 177-179; idem, Sunan, 10:117. Furthermore, the same variant of the report which Ibn Ḥazm used to identify the man as a  $q\bar{a}d\bar{\iota}$  was used by Ibn Bashkuwāl to identify him as a qāṣṣ; see his Ghawāmid, 4:257-259. One variant which does identify him as a qāṣṣ also claims that he was relating ḥadīth (rajulun muḥaddith) so that 'Alī forbade him from relating hadīth (lā tuhaddith); see Naḥḥās, Nāsikh, 52; Ibn al-Jawzī, Nawāsikh, 30. 98 Ibn Wahb, Jāmi', 2:663. See the discussion in Chapter Three, 179-180.

<sup>99</sup> Ibn Waddāh, Bida', 165.

Qasas and Religio-political Movements

The qussās's ever-increasing associations with the political movements of the time were expressed in other traditions connecting their rise to either the fitna or the Khawārij. 'Abd Allāh b. 'Umar b. al-Khattāb alleged: "No one gave qasas in the time of the Prophet, nor Abū Bakr, nor 'Umar, nor 'Uthmān. Qasas came at the time of the fitna,"100 or, more specifically, "[Qaṣaṣ] is something that appeared after the murder of 'Uthmān." 101 A later report extends its beginnings beyond the caliphate of 'Alī. 102 Another tradition, transmitted by Ibn 'Umar's famous mawlā, Nāfi', elaborated upon the association between gasas and the fitna by specifically implicating Mu'awiya, a lightning rod for sectarian and politically motivated traditions, as the impetus for its emergence: "Qişaş were not told in the time of the Prophet, nor Abū Bakr, nor 'Umar. Verily qaṣaṣ is a new phenomenon Mu'āwiya brought about at the time of the fitna." These traditions clearly intend to describe an evolution in gasas in the political sphere and therefore, like the strikingly similar reports that claim that qaṣaṣ began with Tamīm al-Dārī, are not to be understood as an attestation of the origins of qaşaş.

Similar conclusions may be drawn about a report attributed to the famous Successor Muḥammad b. Sirīn (d. 110/728) who attributed the origins of qaṣaṣ to the rise of the Khawārij. When he was asked about the sessions of the quṣṣāṣ, he replied: "I neither command you nor forbid you to join them. Qaṣaṣ is a new phenomenon (al-qaṣaṣ amr muḥdath). A group of the Khawārij began it." Although Ibn Sirīn began with a rather neutral position toward the quṣṣāṣ, his description of qaṣaṣ as a new development and, worse yet, as a creation of the Khawārij reveals a more critical attitude toward them. While this reference to the Khawārij is interpretable as an allusion to their political and sectarian history, Ibn al-Jawzī interpreted this report in distinctly religious terms saying: "The Ḥarūriyya [meaning the Khawārij] were so engrossed in qaṣaṣ that it

<sup>100</sup> Ibn Abī Shayba, Muşannaf, 5:290; Ibn Waḍḍāḥ, *Bida*ʻ, 168; Ibn Ḥibbān, Ṣaḥīḥ, 14:156. For a similar version but without an isnād, see Makkī, Qūt, 2:196.

<sup>101</sup> Ibn Abī Ḥātim, Ilal, 2:326; al-Khaṭīb al-Baghdādī, Tārīkh, 2:101.

<sup>102</sup> Ibshīhī, Mustaţraf, 1:225.

It has the following isnād: Isḥāq b 'Abd Allāh from 'Ubayd Allāh b. 'Umar from Nāfi' and others of the people of religious knowledge (wa-ghayrihi min ahl al-'ilm); see Ibn Shabba, Madīna, 1:11; Suyūṭī, Taḥdhīr, 184.

<sup>104</sup> Ibn Abī Shayba, Muṣannaf, 7:264; Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 23, 127; Suyūṭī, Taḥdhīr, 196–197, 222–223. Ibn al-Jawzī's version uses an alternate name for the Khawārij, al-Ḥarūriyya, drawn from the name of the village, Ḥarūrā', to which the Khawārij withdrew after the battle of Ṣiffīn. See G. Levi Della Vida, "Khāridjites," *EI*2, 4:1074b.

Qaşaş as an Innovation

The traditions mentioned above associate qaṣaṣ with new divisions in the community (fitna) or with religio-political movements (the Khawārij), along with those reports alleging that qaṣaṣ did not begin until later in the period of the first four caliphs, particularly with Tamīm al-Dārī, all convey one clear message: qaṣaṣ and the quṣṣāṣ were a new and suspect development in the community. This sentiment, in fact, appears to have been rather wide-spread such that the sources contain a number of reports depicting the emergence of the quṣṣāṣ as an innovation. These reports, which we will analyze currently, are almost unanimously critical of them and classify them as  $bid\lqa$ , i.e. a new and essentially negative innovation, or as simply a new and dubious phenomenon that arose after the death of the Prophet. On the one hand, these traditions seem to have significantly, if not inordinately, influenced the reputation of the quṣṣāṣ as untrustworthy and disreputable—an image at contrast with the biographical information on many individual quṣṣāṣ of the early period. On the other hand, these same traditions indicate that perceptions of the qussas s were varied and that the negative image of the qussas s was discernible even in the early period.

<sup>105</sup> Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 128 (translation taken from Swartz, 211).

For a discussion of the Khawārij appeal to and use of the Qurʾān in their ideology see W. Qāḍī, "The Limitations of Qurʾānic Usage in Early Arabic Poetry: The Example of a Khārijite Poem," in Festschrift Ewald Wagner zum 65 Geburtstag, ed. W. Heinrichs and G. Schoeler (Beirut/Stuttgart, 1994), 162–181; Watt, Formative, 14; G. Levi Della Vida, "Khāridjites," El2, 4:1074b. For the tradition about Tamīm al-Dārī teaching the Qurʾān in his qaṣaṣ session, see Ibn Abī ʿĀṣim, Mudhakkir, 66; Ibn ʿAsākir, Dimashq, 11:80.

<sup>107</sup> While bid'a is generally interpreted as a negative innovation, at times it was used for beneficial developments in the community; see J. Robson, "Bid'a," EI2, 1:1199.

The possibility that new practices or beliefs (bida) were introduced in the sessions of the qussas was purportedly a concern of some of the earliest Companions of the Prophet. Ibn 'Abbās, for example, counseled the reputable  $q\bar{a}ss$  and scholar 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr to compose his qasas around the beneficial practices of recitation of the Qur'ān and recalling God ( $utlu\ kitab\ Allah\ ya\ Ibn\ Umayr\ wa-udhkur\ dhikr\ Allah$ ), both appearing to have been core practices at the early qasas sessions, and to avoid bida.' The report does not inform us, however, of what "bida" looked like.

According to a report about Ibn Masʿūd, the repetition of dhikr phrases (which we encountered above as a rather common criticism of the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ ), was one form of  $bid\lqa$  allegedly practiced in qaṣaṣ sessions. He ostensibly reprimanded a certain Kufan  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  named ʿAmr b. Zurāra for encouraging such repetitions; he said: "Oh 'Amr, you have either begun an innovation that will lead people astray or you are more correct than the Messenger of God and his Companions." While the message of the report is clear, the circumstances surrounding it suggest that its interpretation may be more complicated.

The earliest citations of the report were found in 'Abd al-Razzāq's Muṣannaf and Ibn Waḍḍāḥ's Bida '.¹¹¹¹ Unlike Ṭabarānī, these both identified the qāṣṣ as the reputable Kufan scholar 'Amr b. 'Utba. They differ, however, with each other on a number of points. 'Abd al-Razzāq's variant alleges that after Ibn Mas'ūd reprimanded them for bid'a, one of the attendees challenged the distinguished Companion by claiming that they neither engaged in bid'a nor did they consider themselves better than the Companions of Prophet. Then 'Amr, in submission to Ibn Mas'ūd, asked God's forgiveness for his actions (astagh-firu Allāh, yā Ibn Mas'ūd, wa atūbu ilayhi). Ibn Mas'ūd appears to have then acquiesced by allowing the session to remain in the mosque although they were told to assemble with another group formed before them.¹¹¹¹ According to this variant, the group was defiant in the face of Ibn Mas'ūd's rebuke and the qāṣṣ turned the situation against the Companion.

<sup>108</sup> Ibn Waḍḍāḥ, Bidaʿ, 175.

Tabarānī, al-Mu'jam al-kabīr, 9:128, 137. See other variants in 'Abd al-Razzāq, Muṣannaf, 3:221–222; Ibn Waḍḍāḥ, Bida', 160; Shāṭibī, I'tiṣām, 2:28; Ibn Ḥajar, Maṭālib, 12:518.

<sup>110 &#</sup>x27;Abd al-Razzāq, Muṣannaf, 3:221–222; Ibn Waḍḍāḥ, *Bida*ʻ, 160.

<sup>111 &#</sup>x27;Abd al-Razzāq, Muṣannaf, 3:221. 'Abd al-Razzāq lists another variant in which Ibn Mas'ūd reprimanded a qāṣṣ repeating dhikr phrases while leading his congregation to the wilderness; see his Muṣannaf, 3:222.

Ibn Waḍḍāḥ's variant paints a different picture and betrays the intent of his work to expose and disparage bidʿa. It alleges that Ibn Masʿūd had a history of antagonism with 'Amr and his followers; he purportedly ordered a mosque that they had built on the outskirts of Kufa torn down. He then came across the group gathered in the mosque of Kufa repeating dhikr phrases and rebuked them for that. In response, 'Amr asked God for forgiveness (nastaghfiru Allāh thalāth marrāt). Then, like in the 'Abd al-Razzāq variant, Ibn Masʿūd was confronted by a member of the group who alleged that they were doing nothing wrong. Yet, unlike the 'Abd al-Razzāq variant, Ibn Masʿūd stood firm on his accusation repeating it and insisting that what they were doing was leading them astray.

The Ibn Waḍḍāḥ variant consistently maintains that Ibn Masʿūd was justified in his rebuke and that the group was engaged in incorrect practices. The ʿAbd al-Razzāq variant, on the other hand, offers a more complex narrative suggesting that Ibn Masʿūd was compelled to alter his initially harsh evaluation of the <code>qaṣaṣ</code> session and leaves the impression that the session was not so bad after all. It is clear that ʿAbd al-Razzāqʾs variant did not serve the purposes of the subject of Ibn Waḍḍāḥʾs work, and, thus, the unforgiving image of the <code>quṣṣāṣ</code> found in his <code>Kitāb al-bida</code> may be the product of the objective of his work.

Similar biases seem evident in transmissions of a tradition attributed to the  $q\bar{a}$ ss Abū Idrīs al-Khawlānī. According to two late and predominantly anti-qasas works, Ibn al-Ḥājj's Madkhal and Suyūṭī's Tahdhīr al-khawāss, Abū Idrīs said: "I would rather see in the mosque a fire raging than to see a  $q\bar{a}$ ss giving qasas (la-an  $ar\bar{a}$   $f\bar{i}$ -l-masjid  $n\bar{a}r^{an}$  ta'ajjaju ahabbu ilayya min an  $ar\bar{a}$   $f\bar{i}$   $n\bar{a}$ hiyatihi  $q\bar{a}$ ss p3 yaqussu)." Earlier citations, however, make no mention of p4 qa pasas, instead having the p4 p4 p5 Abū Idrīs say: "I would rather see in the mosque a fire raging than to see an innovation not being corrected (la-an p4 p5 p5 p6 p8 apparently substituting "innovation" for "p4 p5 p5 p6 p7 p8 apparently substituting "innovation" for "p4 p5 p6 p7 p8 apparently p8 apparently p9 a

Not only do the variants of the Abū Idrīs al-Khawlānī report call into question its relevance to the qussas, the fact that Abū Idrīs himself was a qas and is portrayed as censuring a practice he sometimes engaged in seems curious. A similar impression obtains from a report about the famous  $q\bar{a}ss$  Thābit al-Bunānī. While standing at the door of a mosque in Basra using his toothbrush, Thābit noticed a  $q\bar{a}ss$  holding a session inside. He rebuked the  $q\bar{a}ss$  telling him that the use of the toothbrush, a practice of the Prophet, was preferable to the  $q\bar{a}ss$  s practice that he labeled as bids. The report is problematic both for having a known  $q\bar{a}ss$  challenge qasas as bids as well as for a number of variants attributing the rebuke to other men.

<sup>112</sup> Ibn al-Ḥājj, al-Madkhal (Beirut, 1981), 2:145; Suyūṭī, Taḥdhīr, 200, 213.

&#x27;Abd Allāh b. Aḥmad b Ḥanbal, al-Sunna, ed. Muḥammad b. Sa'd b. Sālim al-Qaḥṭānī (al-Dammam, 1986), 1:339; al-Marwazī, al-Sunna, ed. Sālim b. Aḥmad al-Salafī (Beirut, 1988), 29; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 26:168, 66:120. It is noteworthy that one variant recorded in Ibn 'Asākir claims that Abū Idrīs's concern over bid'a was directed in particular towards the issue of qadar; see his Dimashq, 66:120.

In another instance, the Kufan scholar al-A'mash used the toothbrush and scolded the well-known, yet not-so-reputable  $q\bar{a}$ , Yazīd al-Raqāshī. According to a third example, Sufyān (b. 'Uyayna?) reported that: "A  $q\bar{a}$ , entered the mosque of Sayyār b. Dīnār/Wardān (d. 122/739) and began to give qa, Sayyār got up and stood in the doorway of the mosque using the toothbrush. The  $q\bar{a}$ , was astonished by what he did, and Sayyār told him, "What I am doing is sunna and what you are doing is bid'a." l

The relative utility of qaṣaṣ in comparison to other practices, like using the toothbrush, is mirrored in the report attributed to the Basran  $had\bar{\iota}th$  scholar Muʻāwiya b. Qurra (d. 115/733) and mentioned in Chapter Three that al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī preferred reciting Qur'ān, visiting the sick and participating in a funeral procession to qaṣaṣ. The According to al-Ḥasan, these three pursuits offered religious and social value beyond what was attainable at a qaṣaṣ session. In a separate account, Muʻāwiya b. Qurra, in a judgment all his own, took the principle advocated by al-Ḥasan a step further alleging the quṣṣāṣ actively corrupted social cohesion by encouraging destructive, indeed anti-Qur'ānic behavior: "The merchant who brings me food is better than the qāṣṣ; God told women,

<sup>114</sup> Baḥshal, Tārīkh Wāsiṭ, ed. Kūrkīs 'Awwād (Baghdad, 1967), 85–86; Ibn al-Ḥajj, Madkhal, 2:145. See also Ibn al-Jawzī, Muntaṣam, 7:222–223; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 12:313–315; Dhahabī, Siyar, 5:391–392.

<sup>115</sup> Ibn Ḥibbān, Majrūḥūn, 3:98; al-Samʿānī, al-Ansāb, ed. ʿAbd Allāh ʿUmar al-Bārūdī (Beirut, 1998), 3:82.

Baḥshal, Tārīkh Wāsiṭ, 86. The identity of Sayyār's father is uncertain; see Baḥshal, Tārīkh Wāsiṭ, 85–86; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 2:142–143. The report in Baḥshal was transmitted by Tamīm b. al-Muntaṣar who allegedly heard it from his father who had transmitted it from Sufyān. Sufyān's identity is not specified in Baḥshal's Tārīkh, nor have I been able to locate information on al-Muntaṣar, the father of Tamīm. However, according to Ibn Ḥajar, Tamīm transmitted traditions from both his father and Sufyān b. 'Uyayna and therefore I have speculated that the Sufyān mentioned here is probably Ibn 'Uyayna; see his Tahdhīb, 1:260.

<sup>117</sup> Sa'd b. Manşūr, Sunan, 5:183; Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 133; Suyūṭī, Taḥdhūr, 206. See above, Chapter Two, 144.

'Stay in your houses (Sūrat al-Aḥzāb [33]:33)' while the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}s$  command them to go out." Indeed, he labeled the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}s$  in no uncertain terms as innovators; he said: "When we saw a man giving qaṣas, we said, 'This is a master of  $bid\lqa$  ( $kunn\bar{a}$   $idh\bar{a}$   $ra\lqayn\bar{a}$  al-rajul yaquṣṣu  $quln\bar{a}$ :  $h\bar{a}dh\bar{a}$   $ṣ\bar{a}hib$   $bid\lqa$ ).'" Yet, in spite of his apparent antagonism toward the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}s$ , it is interesting to note he joined in  $had\bar{t}h$  circles with no less than three  $quṣṣ\bar{a}s$ : Thābit al-Bunānī, Qatāda and Maṭar al-Warrāq. 120

Other scholars of the Umayyad period maintained strong feelings against the qussas. The renowned  $had\bar{\iota}th$  scholar Sufyan al-Thawrī claimed that the qussas were a negative innovation and likened one  $q\bar{a}ss$  to Satan. In another report, Sufyan alleged that Ibrāhīm al-Taymī, an otherwise reputable scholar, was thrown out of his home by his father because he gave qasas. His father reportedly rebuked him saying that his qasas was a new phenomenon: "What is this that you have made up  $(m\bar{a}h\bar{a}dh\bar{a}al-ladh\bar{\iota}ahdathta)$ ?!" Even when the caliph 'Abd al-Malik b. Marwān threw his hat in with the qussas by establishing that they gave qasas twice a day, Ghuḍayf b. al-Ḥārith al-Ḥimsī, a Companion of the Prophet, reprimanded him for falling into bid'a. I23

Quṣṣāṣ and the Apocalypse

A few traditions expressed the sentiment that qaṣaṣ was a new and harmful development in the community, using prophetic/apocalyptic terminology. By portraying qaṣaṣ in these terms, these traditions not only convey the message that qaṣaṣ was a new phenomenon; they paint it as an ominous sign of the end of times. As a result, qaṣaṣ and the quṣṣāṣ become more than simply a new development; they take on a devious and sinister image whose presence sparked fear in the minds of the faithful. Indeed, one qāṣṣ/religious teacher, whom we have already encountered above, understood the potential harm in being described in apocalyptic terms and seems to have attempted to preempt any negative associations by insisting that their sessions were not a sign of the apocalypse. When 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb beat him for holding his sessions, he replied: "O 'Umar, we are not that group identified in the saying, 'Those are

<sup>118</sup> Sa'd b. Manṣūr, Sunan, 5:183.

<sup>119</sup> Ibn Waḍḍāḥ, Bida', 169.

<sup>120</sup> Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:112.

For the report claiming that the qussas were innovators, see Ibn Waḍḍāḥ, Bida', 167. For the report comparing the  $q\bar{a}ss$  to Satan, see al-Bayhaqī,  $Dal\bar{a}'il$  al-nubuwwa (Beirut, 1985), 6:551.

<sup>122</sup> Ibn Waḍḍāḥ, Bidaʻ, 169.

<sup>123</sup> See also above, 184.

they who come from the east." Three other traditions, however, warn in distinctly apocalyptic phraseology that the  $quss\bar{a}$  be shunned.

One of these warnings comes to us in a Prophetic tradition and censures the qussās for seeking financial gain from their sessions. According to a widelyrecorded tradition, the Companion of the Prophet Imrān b. Husayn (d. 53/673) claimed that he came across a qāss who recited the Qur'ān and then begged his listeners for alms. Upon seeing this, 'Imrān said: "I heard the Messenger of God say, 'He who recites the Qur'an, let him ask God [for reward] for that, for there will come a group who will recite the Qur'an and ask the people [for reward] for that (man gara'a al-Qur'ān, fa-l-yas'al Allāh bihi, fa-innahu sa-yajī'u qawm<sup>un</sup> yaqru'ūna al-Qur'ān yas'alūna al-nās bihi)."125 This purports to be an early testament of the tendency of the qussās toward charlatanism. The image portrayed here of the qussās as duplicitous and seeking to line their own pockets became a common characterization of them in medieval literature; Ibn al-Jawzī records a number of such reports in his Kitāb al-quṣṣāṣ. <sup>126</sup> For our purposes, the tradition clearly depicts, by use of the phrase, "for there is coming a group (fa-innahu sa-yajī'u qawm<sup>un</sup>)," that the emergence of the quṣṣāṣ was a fulfillment of prophecy and a sign of negative developments in the community.

A second tradition describes the quṣṣāṣ as a negative phenomenon that "rose up" among the community. A second Companion of the Prophet, Ṣila b. al-Ḥārith al-Ghifārī, ostensibly told the Egyptian qāṣṣ/judge Sulaym b. 'Itr al-Tujībī: "By God, we hardly left contact with our Prophet nor severed our familial relationships before you and your colleagues rose up among us (mā taraknā ʿahd nabiyyinā wa-lā qaṭaʿnā arḥāmanā ḥattā qumta anta wa-aṣḥābuka bayna azhurinā)."<sup>127</sup> Here, the emergence of the quṣṣāṣ is described apocalyptically as a "rising up." Furthermore, this emergence is depicted as having occurred after the passing of the Prophet, and therefore enjoyed no precedent

<sup>124</sup> Ibn Abī Shayba, Muşannaf, 5:290; Ibn Waddāh, Bida', 167. Also see above, 257–258.

<sup>125</sup> Ibn Abī Shayba, Muṣannaf, 6:124; Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 33:167, 202; Tirmidhī, Sunan, 5:179, Ṭabarānī, al-Mu'jam al-kabīr, 18:167; Bayhaqī, Shu'ab, 2:533–534. Other variants identify the speaker as "a beggar (sāʾil)." See Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 33:146. Still other variants say he was a man reciting Sūrat Yūsuf, well-known for its association to qaṣaṣ; see Sa'd b. Mansūr, Sunan, 1:187; al-Rūyānī, Musnad, ed. Ayman 'Alī Abū Yamānī (Cairo, 1995), 1:103; al-Ājurrī, Akhlāq ahl al-Qurʾān, ed. Muḥammad 'Amr b. 'Abd al-Laṭīf (Beirut, 1986), 106–107. See also 'Uqaylī, Pu'afā', 2:29; Baghawī, Sharḥ, 4:441. Other sources indicate that 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb used to say this or that the saying is to be attributed to him; see Ibn Abī Shayba, Muṣannaf, 6:124; Balādhurī, Ansāb, ed. Iḥsān 'Abbās, 5:431.

<sup>126</sup> Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 121–126; Goldziher, Muslim Studies II, 155, 158–159.

<sup>127</sup> Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 4:125, 321; Ibn 'Abd al-Hakam, Futūḥ, 232; Wakī', Quḍāt, 3:221; Ibn 'Abd al-Barr, Istīʿāb, 2:739; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 72:277; Ibn Ḥajar, Iṣāba, 3:446.

in his sunna, and after the establishment of new kinship ties in Islam came to be considered a serious sin in the community. <sup>128</sup>

The third and most overtly apocalyptic tradition on the rise of the <code>quṣṣāṣ</code> was attributed to Khabbāb b. al-Aratt, a famous early convert to Islam. Upon finding his son 'Abd Allāh visiting a <code>qāṣs</code>, Khabbāb beat him with a stick and said: "Has this horn risen up with the 'Amāliqa (<code>a maʿa al-ʿamāliqa hadhā al-qarn qad ṭalaʿa</code>)?" Other variants elaborate on the nature of the <code>qaṣaṣ</code> session by claiming that the participants were either reciting Sūrat al-Sajda (32) and weeping or were repeating <code>dhikr</code> phrases, such as "<code>sabbiḥū kadhā wa-kadhā</code>, <code>uḥmudū kadhā wa-kadhā</code>, <code>kabbirū kadhā wa-kadhā</code>," as in other descriptions of <code>qaṣaṣ</code> sessions encountered above.

131

The apocalyptic character of this report is discernible at multiple levels. The description of the qussas as a "horn" that has "risen up" elicits strong apocalyptic images. The ominous associations evoked by the image of the horn are amplified in one variant describing it as "the horn of Satan." Furthermore, the re-appropriation of an ancient people, i.e. the Amalekites, as a descriptive

On the sin of qaṭʿ al-raḥim, "severing familial relations," see Sūrat al-Baqara (2):27; Sūrat al-Raʿd (13):25; Sūrat Muḥammad (47):22. The Shīʿite scholar Muḥammad Yaʿqūb al-Kulaynī devoted a chapter of his Uṣūl min al-Kāfī to the issue of qaṭīʿa al-raḥim; see the edition of ʿAlī Akbar al-Ghifārī (Beirut, 1985), 2:346–348. Ibn Qudāma records a Prophetic tradition which states that the greatest sin after shirk is qaṭʿal-raḥim; see his al-Mughnī fī fiqh al-imām Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal (Beirut, 1984), 8:234.

<sup>0</sup>n Khabbāb, see Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 8:219–220; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:539; M.J. Kister, "Khabbāb b. al-Aratt," EI2, 4:896–897.

<sup>130</sup> Ibn Abī Shayba, Muṣannaf, 5:291. Another version in Ibn Abī Shayba's Muṣannaf says: "a horn has risen from the 'Amāliqa (qarn qad ṭāla'a al-'amāliqa)." See his Muṣannaf, 5:290. See also Al-Khaṭṭābī, Gharīb al-ḥadīth, ed. 'Abd al-Karīm Ibrāhīm al-'Azbāwī (Mecca, 1981), 2:295.

<sup>131</sup> Ibn Waddāḥ, Bida', 35, 45.

A rising horn as an apocalyptic image is ubiquitous in Judaism, Christianity and Islam. In the Jewish tradition, it appears in the book of Daniel (chapters 7–8) while in the Christian tradition, it is found in the book of the Revelation (chapters 13 and 17). David Cook noted that the images found in Muslim apocalyptic writing were probably derived from the book of Revelation; see his Studies in Muslim Apocalyptic, 61. Cook also pointed out that the Muslims frequently called the Byzantines "horned ones" (al-Rūm dhāt al-qurūn) and that this image can be traced back to Jewish descriptions of their enemies; see Studies in Muslim Apocalyptic, 60. Wilfred Madelung has also shown that the "horn" as an Islamic apocalyptic image was used in reference to other entities, such as Rome and Muʿāwiya b. Abī Sufyān; see his "Apocalyptic Prophecies in Ḥimṣ in the Umayyad Age," Journal of Semitic Studies (1986), 146.

<sup>133</sup> Ibn Waḍḍāḥ, Bidaʻ, 45.

It is apparent, from the above analysis, that even though the qussas appear to have been active from the earliest periods of the community and to have enjoyed, at times, the support of both caliphs and respectable men of the community, like Ibn Mas'ud and Ibn 'Umar, there was a equally strong reaction against them in some circles. Some traditions even claim to preserve critical opinions of the qussas from some of the same men who allegedly defended them. The scholar/qass Ibn Mas'ūd, for example, reportedly told a second and unidentified qass, condescendingly: "Spread your merchandise in front of someone who wants it (unshur sil'ataka' ala man yur duha)." Ibn 'Umar, who was known to have visited a qass, namely 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr, is supposed to have called upon policemen (al-shur) to remove a qass from the mosque and beat him with a stick. This incident proved valuable to later scholars who extracted from it a number of principles relevant to the qussass and to conduct

<sup>134</sup> Cook noted the tendency in Muslim apocalyptic writings to describe Rome as Babylon and Constantinople as Tyre—a tendency drawn from earlier Christian influences; see his Studies, 61.

The term Amalekite is used in the Islamic tradition as a trope for any group of people who 135 had opposed the people of Israel, such as the Egyptians, the Palestinians (Phillistines), and the tribes of Yemen, among others. The "Amalekites," however, were no mere mortals. They were giants who possessed adroitness for cunning and deceit. The Islamic portrayal of the "Amalekites" appears to be rooted in certain Jewish descriptions of them. According to the Jewish scriptures, the Amalekites attacked the Israelites during their exodus from Egypt (Numbers 13-14). They were noted especially for having attacked them from behind and having killed the weak stragglers. As a result, the Amalekites became the type of Israel's arch-enemy in rabbinic literature which described them as devious, treacherous and participating in witchcraft—descriptions which find parallels in the Islamic literature; compare "Amalek," Jewish Encyclopedia, http://www.jewishencyclopedia.com/articles/1351-amalek-amalekites, with Ibn Manzūr, Lisān al-ʿArab, ʿ-m-l-q. As a result, al-A'mash reportedly connected the two saying: "The Amalekites were the Khawārij (ḥarūriyya) of the Banū Isrā'īl." See Ibn al-Ja'd, Musnad, 123; Azharī, Tahdhīb allugha, 3:190; Dhahabī, Siyar, 6:230. See also G. Vajda, "Amālīķ," EI2, 1:429.

<sup>136</sup> Ibn Waḍḍāḥ, Bida', 169; Ṭabarānī, al-Mu'jam al-kabīr, 4:80; Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 127.

<sup>137</sup> Ibn Abī Shayba, Muṣannaf, 5:291.

<sup>138</sup> Ibn Abī Shayba, Muşannaf, 5:291; Ibn al-Ja'd, Musnad, 314; Baghawī, Sharḥ, 1:304.

in the mosque. Makkī (d. 386/998), for instance, argued that Ibn 'Umar's expulsion of the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  proves the illicitness of  $qasa\bar{s}$  since removing someone from a session in the mosque was forbidden according to a Prophetic tradition; therefore, if  $qasa\bar{s}$  were not incontrovertibly illegitimate, Ibn 'Umar would never have contravened a Prophetic tradition by removing the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  from the mosque. Centuries later, 'Umar b. Muḥammad al-Sanāmī (fl. 7–8th century/13–14th century), deduced from this tradition that complaining to the muhtasib, "the promoter of public morals," about one who creates disturbances in the mosque, beating a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  with a stick, and removing a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  from the mosque were all legal actions. The distinguished scholar Maymūn b. Mihrān (d. 117/735–6) best summarized this denigration of the  $quss\bar{s}s$ , when he reportedly said: "The  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}s$  awaits the wrath of God ( $al-q\bar{a}s\bar{s}s$  yantaziru maqt Allāh)."

The Qussas as a Beneficial Innovation

Yet, in spite of the many critical portrayals of the qussās as a negative and destructive innovation, the Islamic community retained the quṣṣāṣ. Not only were they apparently around since the beginning of the community, many appear to have been reputable scholars and to have enjoyed the support of a number of leading figures in the community. Consequently, it is not surprising that, while the sources preserve a number of reports disparaging qaşaş as a negative innovation, they also contain reports defending the efficacy of this innovation. In Basra, the qāṣṣ Ziyād al-Numayrī initially refused to engage in qaṣaṣ after having been commanded to do so by the eminent scholar Anas b. Mālik (d.c. 91–93/709–711). He objected, saying: "How can I do that since the people insist that it is an innovation?" To this Anas replied: "If it were an innovation, I would not have commanded you to do it." Ziyād then agreed to give qaṣaṣ since Anas had given him permission.142 Thus, a man who eventually developed a reputation as a less-than-reputable  $q\bar{a}ss$ , ostensibly had his own reservations about engaging in qaṣaṣ—an enterprise that may in fact have contributed to sullying his name.<sup>143</sup>

A later Basran scholar, al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, best exemplified the difficulty of categorizing the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ . As was mentioned above, a number of different opinions about the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  have already been attributed to him. He responded to

<sup>139</sup> Makkī, Qūt, 1:370-371.

<sup>140</sup> Al-Sanāmī, Niṣāb al-iḥtisāb, ed. Mū'il Yūsuf 'Izz al-Dīn (Riyadh, 1982), 173.

<sup>141</sup> Ibn Waḍḍāḥ, *Bida*ʻ, 169. On Maymūn, see Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:198; F.M. Donner, "Maymūn b. Mihrān," El2, 2:916–917.

<sup>142</sup> Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 17 (translation taken from Swartz, 103).

<sup>143</sup> See his biography in the Appendix # 64.

Muʻāwiya b. Qurra's query about the qaṣaṣ sessions by criticizing them as less beneficial than other endeavors. However, he also purportedly praised qaṣaṣ even while still describing it as an innovation: "Qaṣaṣ is an innovation, but how wonderful is that innovation! How many a prayer is answered, request granted, companion won, and how great is the knowledge received, through it!"<sup>144</sup>

Al-Ḥasan's mixed assessment of the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  is amusingly expressed in an account of his interaction with another  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$ , 'Abd Allāh b. Ghālib (d. 83/702), and was curiously transmitted by a third  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$ , Qatāda. Upon finding 'Abd Allāh giving qaṣaṣ, al-Ḥasan said,

"Oh 'Abd Allāh, you were very hard on your colleagues." 'Abd Allāh replied, "I don't see their eyes having popped out or their backs broken. God has commanded us, Oh Ḥasan, to mention Him much and you have commanded us to mention Him little, "No, do not obey him, but prostrate and draw near (to God) (Sūrat al-'Alaq [96]:19)." Then 'Abd Allāh prostrated, and al-Ḥasan said, "I have never seen something like I saw today. I didn't know whether I should prostrate or not." (yā 'Abd Allāh, la-qad shaqaqta 'alā aṣḥābika fa-qāla mā arā 'uyūnahum infaqa'at wa-lā arā zuhūrahum indaqqat. Wa-Allāhu ya'murunā yā Ḥasan an nadhkarahu kathūran wa-anta ta'marunā an nadhkarahu qalūlan "kallā lā tuṭi'hu wa-usjud wa-iqtarib" thumma sajada qāla al-Ḥasan wa-llāhi mā ra'aytu ka-lyawm, mā adrī asjudu am lā). 145

The  $q\bar{a}ss$  asserted that he upheld God's command more stringently than al-Ḥasan, leaving al-Ḥasan dumbfounded by his devotion. <sup>146</sup>

The complex association between bid'a and the qussa as well as the opinion of the scholarly community towards each is highlighted in a conversation between 'Alī b. al-Madīnī (d. 234/849)<sup>147</sup> and Yaḥyā b. Sa'īd (d. 198/813). <sup>148</sup> After

<sup>144</sup> Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 17–18 (translation taken from Swartz, 103).

<sup>145</sup> Abū Nu'aym, Hilya, 2:291; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 15:420; Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 6:118; Suyūṭī, al-Ḥāwī li-l-fatāwī, (Beirut, 2000), 1:254.

The sting of 'Abd Allāh's rebuke may be even more severe considering that many commentators claimed that the verse was originally revealed as a reproof of one of the arch enemies of the Prophet from the Quraysh, Abū Jahl. If this commentary of the verse was extant at the time of al-Ḥasan then the use of this verse would have connected him to Abū Jahl; see Muqātil b. Sulaymān, Tafsīr, 3:502; Ibn Isḥāq, al-Sīra al-nabawiyya, 2:153; Muslim, Ṣaḥīḥ, 4:2154; Ṭabarī, Tafsīr, 25:134.

<sup>147</sup> He is 'Alī b. 'Abd Allāh b. Ja'far; see Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:176–180.

<sup>148</sup> He is Yaḥyā b. Sa'd b. Farūkh al-Baṣrī; see Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:357–359.

Ibn al-Madīnī informed Yaḥyā that 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Mahdī refused to transmit ḥadīth from anyone who was a leader in bid'a (ra's fī-l-bid'a):

Yaḥyā laughed and said, "What are you going to do with Qatāda? And what are you going to do with 'Umar b. Dharr? And what are you going to do with Ibn Abī Rawād?" Then Yaḥyā enumerated a group that I ['Alī b. al-Madīnī] have refrained from mentioning and said, "If 'Abd al-Rahman leaves out people based upon this principle, then he will leave out many (fa-ḍaḥika Yaḥyā wa-qāla kayfa taṣna'u bi-Qatāda wa-kayfa taṣna'u bi-Umar ibn Dharr wa-kayfa taṣna'u bi-Ibn Abī Rawād? wa-ʿadda Yaḥyā qawman amsaktu 'an dhikrihim qāla Yaḥyā in taraka 'Abd al-Raḥmān hādhā-l-ḍarb, taraka kathīran)." 149

Regardless of the authenticity of this stylized statement, it suggests that innovations were common among the religious scholars; Ibn al-Madīnī's deliberate refusal to list the names cited implies that he sought to save reputable scholars from the stigma of bid'a. Of the scholars Yaḥyā did mention, Ibn al-Madīnī listed three, two of whom, Qatāda and 'Umar, were numbered among the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ . The report, therefore, connects qaṣaṣ and bid'a incidentally, portraying the resignation of the scholarly community to the existence of new innovations in the faith, as well as to the presence of  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  who, indeed, were the source for some of these new developments.

The Qussās as Conformists or Innovators

The anxiety vis-à-vis the qussas was ubiquitous. On the one hand, they were perceived as innovators. This image was propagated through reports denying qasas enjoyed any precedent in the practice of the Prophet or his closest Companions, equating their manifestation with the religio-political strife of the fitna and the Khawārij, depicting them as forerunners of the apocalypse and, thus, describing qasas as a negative innovation (bid'a) jeopardizing the well-being of the community. The qussas allegedly presented a threat to religious devotion in the community as well as to the rulers. It seems that it was for this reason that a tradition seeking to limit their practice to the amasr or his appointed representative (mas)masr was put into circulation.

<sup>149</sup> Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 21:336–337. See also Ibn al-Ja'd, Musnad, 164; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 45:20; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 23:509; Dhahabī, Siyar, 5:278, 9:199.

Parallel to this strong anti-qaṣaṣ sentiment is another image of the quṣṣāṣ. This image suggested that the quṣṣāṣ were conformist religious scholars maintaining a tradition traceable to the Prophet himself. While it may be that the reports locating the origins of qaṣaṣ at the time of the Prophet simply sought to justify the practice of the quṣṣāṣ, the strong tie between the multiple variants of these reports and qaṣaṣ suggests that some type of religious education identified by the early community as qaṣaṣ existed at the time of the Prophet. Furthermore, positive representations of the quṣṣāṣ can be found throughout the reigns of the first four caliphs and beyond. Some reports, while conceding that qaṣaṣ indeed may have been an innovation, even assert that it was a beneficial one.

These contrasting images of the qussas as either innovators or conformists reflect their evolving and diverse influence on the community. Based on the above reports, neither image seems dominant. Indeed, both images are reflected in reports purportedly connected to the caliph 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb, thus insinuating that the tension surrounding qasas was quite early. Precisely why this tension developed is uncertain.

In the domain of religious education, qaṣaṣ carried with it a number of risks. Because qaṣaṣ included Qur'ān recitation and commentary,  $had\bar{\iota}th$  transmission, encouraging the right and forbidding the wrong, as well as other religious interests, any individual  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  could be either innovator or conformist. However, this possibility was by no means unique to the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ ; those reports seeming to conflate the giving of qaṣaṣ with the giving of legal judgments seem to support this. In addition, the  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  drew to him the watchful eyes of the political authorities. In fact, as we have seen thus far, though only in part, the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  found themselves embroiled in the political movements of the community—an issue to be explored in greater detail in the coming chapter—and this seems to have had a negative effect on their reputation.

Consequently, the qussas seem to resist general categorization; some were innovators and others were conformists. However, even though the impression left by these reports is that both images are equally valid, the large number of reputable qussas encountered in Chapter Two seems to suggest that the qussas of the early period were largely conformist scholars working within an evolving religio-political environment that, at times, called into question their value in the community.

The Quṣṣāṣ during the Umayyad Period

By the end of the caliphal reign of 'Alī b. Abī Ṭālib, the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}$ ş were established participants in the religious and political discourse of the community. As we have seen in Chapter Four, even those reports alleging that qaṣaş was a negative innovation, not traceable to the earliest times of the community, often ascribed its origins to the time of 'Uthmān b. 'Affān and 'Alī b. Abī Ṭālib and the political divisions racking their reigns. Therefore, regardless of the issues of historicity calling into question aspects of many of those traditions, the Islamic sources are unified in admitting the existence of qaṣaṣ and the quṣṣās by the end of this period. This is most notably true in the report from Layth b. Sa'd who described the political use of qaṣaṣ by 'Alī and Mu'āwiya as the very origins of the enterprise.¹

My interest in this chapter lies in tracing the evolution of qasas beyond the period of the first four caliphs; in particular, I am concerned with the associations between the qussas of this period and both the Umayyad administration as well as the religio-political movements that opposed the Umayyads. At times these associations were directly related to the issue of qasas; either the caliph, his representative or even opponents of the Umayyads appointed them, or they maintained a special relationship with political leaders of the time, both Umayyad and non-Umayyad, specifically in their capacity as qussas.

At other times, the qussas were connected to the politically-powerful incidentally; while many of them were not appointed to their positions as qussas, they still maintained strong ties with those in power and, at times, were appointed to other positions of influence. Therefore, the extent of the qussas's influence during the Umayyad period was not simply a result of their involvement in qasas, in fact it extended into a number of other areas, some we already encountered above (such as their participation in military campaigns and their work as judges). For example, some qussas who do not seem to have been appointed to the position of qass held other official positions, sometimes even spanning multiple caliphates. While other qussas held no official position in the administration, their political leanings are evident from their close affiliations with certain caliphs or by their opposition to the Umayyads. Each of these components is instrumental for developing a more comprehensive and nuanced image of the  $q\bar{a}$ ss of the period, including both his religious positions and his political connections.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See Chapter Four, 216-218.

The material on the quṣṣāṣ in the Umayyad period presents a particular problem in terms of organization. As I noted above, the qussās in this period span the religio-political spectrum. We find them among the Umayyad administration and among opponents of the Umayyads, namely the Khawārij and the early 'Abbāsid rebels. As a result, two potential approaches to a discussion of the qussās during the Umayyad period appeared immediately possible in this study, either following the political attitudes reflected in the various religio-political divisions of the time or a more straightforward chronological approach based on caliphal reign. I opted for the latter. While this organizational scheme is admittedly dependent on a rather artificial periodization, since religious/intellectual movements, including that embodied by the quṣṣāṣ, often bridge caliphal reigns, this approach also presents advantages to our understanding of the qussās during this period. Firstly, a chronological approach allows for the analysis of the relationship between specific Umayyad administrations and the quṣṣāṣ. As I will show below, at times quṣṣāṣ are connected to a specific caliph although without clear indications about the nature of that relationship. It can be unclear, for instance, if the  $q\bar{a}ss$  in question was a private religious advisor or if he held an official position in the administration. These issues are important for our understanding of the role of the quṣṣāṣ in the early period as well as for our understanding of the Umayyad administration in general. Secondly, a chronological approach also allows for analyses of political attitudes of the period and the role that the quṣṣāṣ played in advocating for specific political viewpoints. The current chapter will explore, in fact, the role of the qussās in both pro-Umayyad and anti-Umayyad movements shedding light on the importance of qaṣaṣ as a political tool.

This approach has already been used effectively by Wadād al-Qāḍī in her analysis of the qāṣṣ Maʿbad al-Ṭuruq. She showed that prior to being known as a qāṣṣ he had been an Umayyad security official. Her approach is particularly beneficial for our purpose because it broadens our understanding of the type of people who became quṣṣaṣ, including their political affiliations. See Wadād al-Qāḍī, "Security Positions under the Umayyads: The Story of 'Maʿbad al-Ṭuruq'," Differenz und Dynamik im Islam. Festschrift für Heinz Halm zum 70. Geburtstag/ Difference and Dynamism in Islam. Festschrift for Heinz Halm on his 70th Birthday, eds. Hinrich Biesterfeld and Verena Klemm (Würtzburg, 2012), 253–283.

Mu'āwiya b. Abī Sufyān (r. 41–60/661–80)

As we noted in the previous chapter, Muʻāwiya's affiliation with the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}s$  can be traced back at least to his time as governor of Syria beginning in 23/644, and perhaps extends back even further than that. If our sources are accurate about the use of martial  $quṣṣ\bar{a}s$  in the conquest of Syria, then it is most likely that he was familiar with this expression of the practice from the time of the conquest since he participated as a commander of the army sent to the region by Abū Bakr in 13/634.³ His associations with the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}s$  continued throughout the early settlement of the region, and it appears he was personally connected to a number of these  $quṣs\bar{a}s$ .

Possibly the most famous  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  of Syria during Muʻawiya's governorship there was Kaʻb al-Aḥbār, who allegedly accompanied 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭab on his famous trip to Jerusalem in 16/637 and, as was mentioned in Chapter Four, continued to enjoy a positive relationship with the ruling authorities of the community, especially 'Uthmān and Muʻawiya.<sup>4</sup> In fact, the only officially sanctioned position Kaʻb seems to have held was that of  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$ —a position purportedly given to him by Muʻawiya according to a variant of the tradition restricting the telling of qasas to three types of people.<sup>5</sup>

Along with Kaʻb, three other famous and distinguished Companions of the Prophet, all of whom, including Kaʻb, died in the year 32/653, practiced qaṣaṣ in Syria during the governorship of Muʻāwiya. Ibn Masʻūd reportedly gave qaṣaṣ every Monday and Thursday in Damascus.<sup>6</sup> Abū al-Dardāʾ, an admirer of Kaʻb, was also closely connected to Muʻāwiya.<sup>7</sup> Like Kaʻb, Abū al-Dardāʾ entered Syria early and was there before and during Muʻāwiya's time as governor. His first exposure to Syria was as a martial  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  at the battle of al-Yarmūk.<sup>8</sup> He then apparently returned to the Ḥijāz and was later dispatched again to <sup>3</sup> Muʻāwiya was initially sent by Abū Bakr to Syria as a commander in 13/634, was appointed governor over certain regions of Syria by 'Umar and became governor of all of Syria early in 'Uthmān's reign, around 25–26/646–647; see M. Hinds, "Muʻāwiya b. Abī Sufyān," *EI*2, 7:263; R. Stephen Humphreys, Muʻāwiya Ibn Abi Sufyan (Oxford, 2006).

<sup>4</sup> On Ka'b's trip to Jerusalem, see Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 1:2409. On his relationship with 'Uthmān and Mu'āwiya, see Chapter Four, 212–213. In spite of the generally positive impression of Ka'b's relationship to the Umayyads, it is interesting that he was ostensibly the bearer of bad news for them; he prophesied their downfall and subsequent rise of the 'Abbāsids; see Nu'aym b. Hammād, Fitan, 120, 206.

<sup>5</sup> See Chapter Four, 207-216.

<sup>6</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 33:180.

<sup>7</sup> Abū al-Dardā' praised Ka'b's religious knowledge; see Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:471.

<sup>8</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 47:93.

Syria by 'Umar upon the request of Yazīd b. Abī Sufyān, Mu'āwiya's brother, for teachers of Qur'ān and fiqh.<sup>9</sup> During Mu'āwiya's governorship, Abū al-Dardā' was appointed judge of Syria and acted as Mu'āwiya's deputy (khalīfa) when the governor was away from the region.<sup>10</sup> Yet not all the quṣṣāṣ of Syria were supportive of Mu'āwiya. As was mentioned above, the governor was also vehemently opposed by a third influential Syrian  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$ , Abū Dharr al-Ghifārī.<sup>11</sup>

Opposition to Muʿāwiya from the quṣṣāṣ did not cease with the passing of Abū Dharr. As we have seen above, Muʿāwiya used quṣṣāṣ to curse the caliph ʿAlī b. Abī Ṭālib, and Layth b. Saʿd interpreted that development as the creation of two different forms of qaṣaṣ: qaṣaṣ al-khāṣṣa and qaṣaṣ al-ʿāmma.¹² Yet, according to a separate, and somewhat surprising, report from Yaḥyā b. Abī ʿAmr al-Shaybānī, Muʿāwiya was not interested solely in institutionalizing qaṣaṣ al-khāṣṣa for his own political advantage; he even exerted control over qaṣaṣ al-ʿāmma, having allegedly been the first to begin the practice (awwal man aḥdatha qaṣaṣ al-ʿāmma Muʿāwiya).¹³

Obviously the attribution of the origins of both qaṣaṣ al-khāṣṣa and qaṣaṣ al-ʿāmma to Muʿāwiya is problematic in light of the multiple traditions, already reviewed in Chapter Four, ascribing the beginnings of qaṣaṣ to other individuals or movements. It appears more likely that these reports are not to be read as exclusive statements on the origins of these two forms of qaṣaṣ; rather, as expressions of the political establishment's attempt to control qaṣaṣ and harness it to its own advantage. The ending of Shaybānī's report ascribing the beginnings of qaṣaṣ al-ʿāmma to Muʿāwiya allows for this interpretation by noting that:

He (Mu'āwiya) sent for a man that he wanted to appoint over qaṣaṣ and the man said to him, "Allow me to do this." And he (Mu'āwiya) told him, <sup>9</sup> Ibn 'Abd al-Barr, Istīʿāb, 3:1229. Two of these teachers were the martial quṣṣāṣ Muʿādh b. Jabal and Abū al-Dardāʾ, both of whom were also described as the *fuqahā*ʾ of the people of Syria; see Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 47:124. For Abū al-Dardāʾ's role as a qāṣṣ, see the Appendix # 10. It is worth noting that this report about the sending of teachers to Syria was initially transmitted by the qāṣṣ Muḥammad b. Kaʿb al-Quraẓī.

The sources are not clear whether Abū al-Dardā' was appointed judge by 'Umar or 'Uthmān; see Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 3:286; Ibn 'Abd al-Barr, Istī'āb, 3:1230; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:341. On his role as Mu'āwiya's deputy, see Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 49:139.

See Chapter One, 71–74; Chapter Four, 214–215; and the Appendix # 12.

On this issue, see Chapter Four, 216–218.

<sup>13</sup> Ibn Shabba, Madīna, 1:10. On al-Shaybānī, see Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:379–380.

"Stay in your house" (fa-arsala ilā rajul<sup>in</sup> yurīdu an yuwalliyahu al-qaṣaṣ fa-qāla la-hu: juz lī. fa-qāla: ijlis fī baytika).<sup>14</sup>

Apparently, although Muʻāwiya sought this man out for the position of  $q\bar{a}ss$ , he considered him, for some unspecified reason, unfit for the position and refused to grant him permission to engage in it. The report suggests, therefore, that Muʻāwiya was in charge of the process at every stage—nomination, vetting and appointment.

A similar sentiment is conveyed in another report according to which Muʻāwiya, while on the pilgrimage, came across a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$ , a  $mawl\bar{a}$  of Banū Makhzūm, in Mecca and said to him:

"Were you commanded to give qaṣaṣ?" [The  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$ ] said, "No." "So what came over you that you gave qaṣaṣ without permission?" He said, "We are spreading the knowledge that God has taught us." He said, "If I came close to you, I would cut you down a size" (umirta bi-l-qaṣaṣ? fa-qāla lā. qāla fa-mā ḥamalaka ʿalā an taquṣṣa bi-ghayr idhan? qāla innamā nanshuru ʿilman ʿallamanāhu Allāh qāla law taqaddamtu ilayka la-qaṭaʿtu ṭābiqan minka).\(^{15}\)

In this encounter, Muʻāwiya affirmed the need for permission for a  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ to give qaṣaṣ, and regarded the  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ's decision to engage in qaṣaṣ without proper authorization as an expression of self-exaltation that warranted he be taken down a peg.

Despite the ambiguity on whether these events occurred while Muʻāwiya was governor or caliph, it appears that his supervision over the appointment of qussas, even outside of his region of Syria, extended back to his time as governor. Sulaym b. 'Itr, for example, was the first qas, of Egypt. He was appointed qas, in the year 39/659 and then judge in the year 40/660. Both appointments seem to have come from Muʻāwiya, or his representative in Egypt, 'Amr b. al-'Ās, even though at the time Sulaym was appointed qas, 'Alī b. Abī Ṭālib was still Caliph.

In the year 38/658, the 'Alid governor of Egypt Muḥammad b. Abī Bakr was deposed by 'Amr b. al-'Āṣ, one of Mu'āwiya's closest supporters. <sup>16</sup> Thus, at the time Sulaym was appointed to the positions of  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  and judge, Egypt, no longer under the control of the 'Alids, was controlled by pro-Mu'āwiya factions. Therefore, the appointment of Sulaym as  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$ , the first appointment of a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  in Egypt, seems to substantiate other reports indicating that Mu'āwiya attempted to monitor and manage the  $qu\bar{s}s\bar{a}\bar{s}$ . In fact, Sulaym's allegiance to Mu'āwiya and his family continued after the caliph's death as he worked to secure the allegiance of 'Abd Allāh b. 'Amr b. al-'Ās, son of the great general and governor of Egypt 'Amr b. al-'Ās, for the new caliph Yazīd, Mu'āwiya's son. 17

<sup>14</sup> Ibn Shabba, Madīna, 1:10.

<sup>15</sup> Al-Balādhurī,  $Ans\bar{a}b$  al-ashrāf ed. Iḥsān 'Abbās (Wiesbaden, 1979), 4/1:45.

<sup>16</sup> A.J. Wensinck, "'Amr b. al-'Āṣ," EI2, 1:451. On 'Amr's relationship to Mu'āwiya, see G.R. Hawting, The First Dynasty in Islam: The Umayyad Caliphate A.D. 661–750 (Carbondale, IL, 1987), 28–29.

The qussās were found throughout Mu'āwiya's armies. Yazīd b. Shajara (d. 58/678), whom we have encountered above, was a military commander and trusted colleague of Mu'awiya, who, when sent by the governor as the leader of the pilgrimage in 39/660, acted as a martial  $q\bar{a}ss$ , inciting his soldiers against 'Alī's governor of Mecca, Qutham b. al-'Abbās. 18 Other men, whom the sources identified as quṣṣāṣ, also participated in Muʿāwiya's military campaigns, though not expressly as martial quṣṣāṣ. Tubay b. ʿĀmir al-Ḥimṣī and Mujāhid b. Jabr, both of whom were allegedly qussās of a religious kind, were also active fighters, participating in the conquest of Rhodes in the year 53/673 under the command of Mu'āwiya's general Junāda b. Abī Umayya.19 Furthermore, another Syrian qāṣṣ and Companion of the Prophet, a certain Sham'ūn, or Abū Rayḥāna al-Azdī, allegedly participated in the conquest of Damascus, took up a house in the city and then eventually moved to Jerusalem. As mentioned in Chapter One, Sham'ūn related a qiṣṣa of ten activities forbidden by the Prophet that may reflect his military background.<sup>20</sup> Sham'ūn's biography, in fact, reveals that he spent much of his life in the military and a portion of it stationed on the border of the Islamic lands (murābitan), in the garrison town of Mayyāfāriqīn in the Jazīra near the Upper Tigris River.<sup>21</sup> It seems clear that his participation in the conquests and the border raids with the Byzantines were the impetus for his relating  $qa\bar{s}a\bar{s}$  of the conquests  $(qa\bar{s}a\bar{s} al-magh\bar{a}z\bar{\iota})$ .<sup>22</sup>

<sup>17</sup> Ibn 'Abd al-Ḥakam, Miṣr, 235; Wakī', Quḍāt, 3:224; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 72:278; Jūda, "Qaṣaṣ," 117.

<sup>18</sup> Khalīfa, Tārīkh, 119; Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 1:3448; Ibn Athīr, al-Kāmil fī-l-tārīkh, ed. 'Umar 'Abd al-Salām Tadmurī (Beirut, 1997), 2:726–727. For a discussion of Yazīd's qiṣṣa and the confusion that seems to have accompanied its analysis in later sources, see Chapter One, 60–64.

<sup>19</sup> On Tubay' at Rhodes, see Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 2:163; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 4:317. On Mujāhid at Rhodes, see Balādhurī, Futūḥ, 279.

<sup>20</sup> See Chapter One, 41-42.

<sup>21</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 23:203.

Dhahabī, al-Kāshif fī ma'rifat man la-hu rawāya fī-l-kutub al-sitta, ed. Muḥammad 'Awāma (Jidda, 1992), 1:490.

Of equal, if not greater, importance is Muʿāwiya's effect on the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ . While he was neither the first caliph to grant governmental permission to give qaṣaṣ, an honor which seems to have gone to 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb, he was allegedly the first to utilize the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  for his own political advantage and thus presumably recognized the importance of using and controlling the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ . One way he used the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  to his advantage came in the wake of his conflict with 'Alī. After the death of 'Alī, Muʿāwiya traveled with his Syrian forces to Iraq where he confronted and eventually made peace with 'Alī's son al-Ḥasan at Maskin. <sup>23</sup> There Muʿāwiya set up his  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  in al-Ukhnūniyya, an area that eventually became an administrative district of Baghdād, and instructed them incite the people of Syria to advocate for his cause. <sup>24</sup> His use of the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  in this manner is clearly in line with reports that were analyzed in Chapter One of the use of martial  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ .

<sup>23</sup> Țabarī, Tārīkh, 2:2-9.

<sup>24</sup> Al-Khaṭīb al-Baghdādī, Tārīkh, 1:208; Ibn ʿAsākir, Dimashq, 59:150; Dhahabī, Siyar, 3:146. On al-Ukhnūniyya, see Yāqūt b. ʿAbd Allāh al-Ḥamawī, Muʿjam al-buldān, (Beirut, 1955), 1:125.

[of the Qur'ān]."<sup>25</sup> It seems that even when he retreated in al-Jābiya, he visited with a  $q\bar{a}ss$ .<sup>26</sup> Thus, Mu'āwiya presents a model of the emerging and complex relationship between the  $quss\bar{a}s$  and Umayyads. It is perhaps for this reason, as has been mentioned above, that Mu'āwiya's name became connected with the establishment of a form of qasas whose express intent was presumably to serve the interests of the Umayyads (qasas al- $kh\bar{a}ssa$ ), as well as with the beginning of a form of qasas that appears to have emphasized the relatively politically innocuous practice of religious education (qasas al-'āmma), although these traditions attributing the origins of both types of qasas to Mu'āwiya have certainly overstated his role in their emergence.

The Counter-caliphate of 'Abd Allāh b. al-Zubayr (c. 63-72/682-91)

By the end of Muʻāwiya's caliphate, it was clear that quṣṣāṣ were being used as valuable resources in the internecine strife in the community and were also found in anti-Umayyad circles, such as in support of the counter caliph 'Abd Allāh b. Zubayr. Within just a few years after the death of Muʻāwiya and towards the latter part of the caliphate of Muʻāwiya's son, Yazīd (r. 60–4/680–3), 'Abd Allāh b. al-Zubayr declared himself caliph and exerted his control over Mecca; he maintained his hegemony in the Ḥijāz until 72/691 when he was defeated and killed by al-Ḥajjāj b. Yūsuf.<sup>27</sup> During his counter-caliphate spanning the reigns of four Umayyad caliphs (Yazīd b. Muʻāwiya [r. 60–4/680–3], Muʻāwiya b. Yazīd [r. 64/683], Marwān b. al-Ḥakam [r. 64–5/684–5 and 'Abd al-Malik b. Marwān [r. 65–86/685–705]), Ibn al-Zubayr, like Muʻāwiya and 'Alī before him, utilized quṣṣāṣ, in particular the famous 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr (d. 68/687). According to Mujāhid b. Jabr, a qāṣṣ in his own right, 'Ubayd was

<sup>25</sup> Mas'ūdī, Murūj, 3:220.

Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 68:128. It is unclear from the text whether Mu'āwiya brought the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  with him or if he met him in al-Jābiya where he and his entourage listened to him. The text initially says that the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  was in a delegation visiting Mu'āwiya (wafada 'alā Mu'āwiya) which would suggest that he did not accompany the caliph to al-Jābiya. Then the transmitter of the report describes the connection to the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  in a way which could be understood either that the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  was part of their entourage or that he only met Mu'āwiya in al-Jābiya: kunnā ma'a Mu'āwiya bi-l-Jābiya ... wa-fīnā rajulum yaquṣṣu 'alaynā min ahl al-Urdunn. In either case, the report indicates that even when vacationing Mu'āwiya would visit with  $quss\bar{s}s\bar{s}$ .

<sup>27</sup> H.A.R. Gibb, "Abd Allāh b. al-Zubayr," EI2, 1:54-55.

"the  $q\bar{a}ss$  of Ibn al-Zubayr." Unfortunately, the sources are unclear as to when Ubayd held this position. Since 'Ubayd died in 68/687 and seems to have spent his whole life in Mecca, he must have been Ibn al-Zubayr's  $q\bar{a}ss$  some time between 63/682 and 68/687, a time period that spans the reigns of all four Umayyad caliphs who ruled while Ibn al-Zubayr controlled the Ḥijāz.  $^{29}$

'Ubayd, however, was not the only  $q\bar{a}ss$  present in Ibn al-Zubayr's Mecca. Mujāhid b. Jabr, whom we have already encountered as a soldier in Junāda b. Abī 'Umayya's campaign on Rhodes during the caliphate of Muʻāwiya, returned to Mecca and was in the city in 64/683 when Ibn al-Zubayr razed the Kaʻba. Even though Mujāhid was in Mecca at that time, it is unclear whether or not he supported Ibn al-Zubayr, and hence whether his qasas activities were somehow connected with Ibn al-Zubayr and his cause.

Marwān b. al-Ḥakam (r. 64-5/684-5)

The emergence of Ibn al-Zubayr in the Ḥijāz coincided with the death of Muʻāwiya b. Yazīd and the succession struggles that ensued. These developments contributed to what has commonly been referred to as the second fitna of the community. This struggle over succession culminated in the battle of Marj Rāhiṭ (64/684), near Damascus, pitting the forces of the eventual victor and next caliph Marwān b. al-Ḥakam against those of the counter-caliph Ibn al-Zubayr, led in Syria by al-Ḍaḥḥāk b. Qays (d. 64/684). According to the Syrian scholar Yaḥyā b. Abī ʿAmr al-Shaybanī (d. 148/765), cousin of the famous ḥadīth scholar al-Awzāʿī (d. 157/774), these internecine conflicts left the members of the community three basic choices: alignment with the ruling authorities, alignment with the opposition, or neutrality.<sup>31</sup> In this starkly divided <sup>28</sup> Ibn Abī Khaythama, Akhbār al-Makkiyyīn, 253. Mujāhid numbered 'Ubayd among the scholars that the Meccans were especially proud of: "We are proud of four people: our faqīh Ibn 'Abbās, our muʾadhdhin Abū Maḥdhūra, our Qurʾān reciter 'Abd Allāh b. al-Sāʾib and our qāṣṣ 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr." See Ibn Saʿd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:7; Ibn Abī Shayba, Muṣannaf, 5:290; Fākihī, Akhbār, 2:340; Fasawī, Maʿrifa, 2:14.

The nature of 'Ubayd's relationship with Ibn al-Zubayr is not entirely clear. One report expresses some form of doubt about his allegiance to the counter-caliph; Ibn al-Zubayr, apparently concerned about his support, asked 'Ubayd: "What is your opinion of us, Oh 'Ubayd (ra'aytanā yā 'Ubayd)?" See Ibn Abī Khaythama, Akhbār al-Makkiyyīn, 248.

Mujāhid claimed to have seen inside the Kaʿba when Ibn al-Zubayr demolished it; see Fākihī, Akhbār, 1:92. Ibn al-Zubayr demolished the Kaʿba in 64/683; see Khalīfa, Tārīkh, 254, 261; Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 2:537.

<sup>31</sup> On Yaḥyā b. Abī ʿAmr al-Shaybānī/al-Saybānī, see Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:379–380.

environment, the Syrian qāṣṣ and faqīh Rabī'a b. 'Amr exemplified those who sided with the opposition. Yaḥyā b. Abī 'Amr al-Shaybānī said:

When the fitna occurred, the people said, "We shall look at this group: whatever they do, we shall imitate." [They were] Yazīd b. al-Aswad al-Jurashī, Ibn Nimrān and Rabī'a b. 'Amr al-Jurashī. Yazīd headed to the coast. Rabī'a b. 'Amr joined al-Daḥḥāk b. Qays al-Fihrī and so he was killed.<sup>32</sup> Ibn Nimrān joined Marwān and so he was unharmed<sup>33</sup> (lammā waqa'at al-fitna qāla al-nās, nanzuru ilā hā'ulā'i'l-nafar, fa-mā ṣana'ū iqtadaynā bihim: Yazīd b. al-Aswad al-Jurashī wa Ibn Nimrān wa Rabī'a b. 'Amr al-Jurashī. fa-laḥiqa Yazīd b. al-Aswad bi-l-sāḥil, wa kāna Rabī'a b. 'Amr ma'a al-Daḥḥāk b. Qays al-Fihrī fa-qutila wa kāna Ibn Nimrān ma'a Marwān fa-salima).<sup>34</sup>

According to Yaḥyā, Yazīd b. al-Aswad al-Jurashī represented the group that sought to avoid the conflict altogether; he did so by fleeing to the coast.<sup>35</sup> Yazīd b. Nimrān, alternatively, symbolized those who supported Marwān b. al-Ḥakam, the victors at Marj Rāhiṭ. Rabīʿa, as a result, exemplified those who, by opposing the Umayyads, chose the last option; they found themselves on the losing side and suffered the fatal consequences of their choice.

Rabī'a was not the only  $q\bar{a}$ , however, who was associated with an opposition movement against the eponymous founder of the Marwānid Umayyads. Before Marwan's death in the year 65/685, his forces confronted the rebellion

<sup>32</sup> On Rabīʿa, see the Appendix # 21.

Ibn Nimrān is Yazīd b. Nimrān, though he is also known by the orthographically similar Yazīd b. Ghazwān; see Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:431.

<sup>34</sup> Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 3:281; Fasawī, Maʿrifa, 2:283–284; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdīb, 4:431.

The implication in the passage is that Yazīd took a third path of avoidance or neutrality in this conflict. His relationship with al-Daḥḥāk, however, appears to have been complex. Fasawī recorded a report which states that when al-Daḥḥāk was ruling over Damascus the region was struck with a drought and the pro-Zubayrid governor compelled Yazīd to pray for rain. After praying for rain for the ruler, Yazīd then offered a private, though apparently audible, prayer, saying, "O God, he has made me famous (drawn attention to me?), so free me from him (allāhumma innahu qad shahharanī, fa-ariḥanī minhu) and within a week al-Daḥḥāk killed him." See Fasawī, Ma'rifa, 2:380–381. While al-Shaybānī's report implies that he avoided the struggle, this second report claims that he eventually found himself on al-Daḥḥāk's bad side and was executed. Even this account, however, is problematic since Ibn Sa'd records a similar account in which Mu'āwiya b. Abī Sufyān, of whom al-Daḥḥāk was a keen follower, was the one who called al-Daḥḥāk to pray for rain and in which there is no mention of Yazīd being killed; see his Tabaqāt, 9:448.

of the pro-ʿAlid Sulaymān b. Ṣurad at the battle of ʿAyn al-Warda (65/685) in Iraq.³6 Among Sulaymān's forces were three  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ : Rifāʻa b. Shaddād, Sukhayr b. Ḥudhayfa and Abū al-Juwayriyya al-ʿAbdī.³7 As we saw in Chapter One, Sulaymān's  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  were martial  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ , and Ṭabarī even recorded a martial qaṣaṣ saying given by Sukhayr.³8 This does not mean, however, that their role in Sulaymān's rebellion was simply to incite the soldiers to fight. In fact, each was a leader in the cause and, moreover, a leader on the battlefield. Sukhayr applied the exhortation he delivered to his soldiers to fight by personally leading his soldiers in a charge to their deaths. Rifāʻa's involvement in the religio-politico-martial movements of the early community extended from his vigorous support of 'Alī at Ṣiffīn, to his role as general and  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  in Sulaymān b. Ṣurad's rebellion, to his initial participation in al-Mukhtār al-Thaqafī's rebellion and, finally, to his abandonment of al-Mukhtār and eventual death in the battle of Jabbānat al-Sabīʻ, fighting against al-Mukhtār.³9

'Abd al-Malik b. Marwan (r. 65-86/685-705)

When Yaḥyā b. Abī ʿAmr al-Shaybānī described the potential responses to the second fitna, he offered three choices: pro-government, opposition, or neutrality. During the caliphate of ʿAbd al-Malik b. Marwān, quṣṣāṣ adopted various gradations of these positions; some supported the Umayyads, others supported various opposition groups to the Umayyads, one converted from an opposition supporter to an Umayyad supporter and one attempted to remain neutral in the strife plaguing the community.

On Sulaymān's rebellion, see E. Kohlberg, "Sulaymān b. Şurad," EI2, 9:826.

<sup>37</sup> Țabarī, Tārīkh, 2:559–560.

<sup>38</sup> Ibid. Also see Chapter One, 64–65.

At Şiffîn, 'Alī appointed Rifā'a leader of his tribe of Bajīla; see Naṣr b. Muzāḥim, Ṣiffîn, 205; Khalīfa, Tārīkh, 195; al-Dīnawarī, al-Akhbār al-ṭiwāl, ed. 'Iṣām Muḥammad al-Ḥājj 'Alī (Beirut, 2001), 252–253. In 51/671, he supported the 'Alid Ḥujr b. 'Adī against Ziyād b. Abīhi; see Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 2:127. When the issue of arbitration at Ṣiffīn arose, he defended 'Alī's cause and exhorted the 'Alids to not submit to arbitration; see Naṣr b. Muzāḥim, Ṣiffīn, 448. In the rebellion of Sulaymān b. Ṣurad, he was one of the four commanders of the rebel army and acted as a martial qāṣṣ and even led the retreat of the remainder of Sulaymān's defeated army; see Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 2:552, 559–560, 567–568. Upon hearing of Rifā'a's valiant leadership at 'Ayn al-Warda, al-Mukhtār al-Thaqafī recruited him to his cause; see Ṭabarī, Tārīkh 2:599–600. Rifā'a eventually split from al-Mukhtār, joining the Kufans against him and dying in battle at Jabbānat al-Sabī'; see Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 2:654, 658–659; Khalīfa, Tārīkh, 263.

'Abd al-Malik enjoyed the support of a handful of qussas spread throughout the empire with some of them having been appointed either to the position of  $q\bar{a}ss$  or to other official positions by the caliph and/or his governors. His use of the qussas began in his own region of Syria where he appointed Abū Idrīs al-Khawlānī to the position of  $q\bar{a}ss$  in Damascus, though he eventually removed him from this position, appointing him judge, instead.<sup>40</sup>

In Kufa, hotbed of anti-Umayyad sentiment, lived a qāss whose allegiance to the Umayyads was unquestioned—Rajā' b. Haywa. According to a report recorded by Ibn Abī Shayba, al-Hakam b. 'Utayba (d. 112–15/730–3), a highly respected scholar of Kufa, informed the distinguished Basran scholar Shu'ba b. al-Hajjāj (d. 160/776) that during "the time (zamān)" of Bishr b. Marwān, presumably meaning his residency as governor in Kufa (72–3/691–2), Rajā' b. Ḥaywa came to the city and acted as the qāṣṣ al-ʿāmma.<sup>41</sup> While Rajā' afterward became an important advisor and administrator for the Umayyads, this report may preserve a reference to his first public position. Rajā' is, in fact, first encountered as a teacher of 'Abd al-Malik b. Marwan's son and future caliph Sulaymān b. 'Abd al-Malik, who, if born in approximately 55/675, suggests Rajā' was his tutor, presumably sometime between the years 60-70/680-90, when Sulaymān was between 5 and 15 years old. 42 Shortly thereafter, Rajā' joined 'Abd al-Malik's brother, Bishr b. Marwān, in Kufa. The scenario presented by the report is important, as well as unusual, because of the reason for Rajā"s presence in Kufa and the meaning behind his position as  $q\bar{a}$ ss al-' $\bar{a}$ mma.

First, it may be that Rajā' was in Kufa on official business. As we noted above, Rajā''s first appointment seems to have been as Sulaymān b. 'Abd al-Malik's <sup>40</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 26:165. See also Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 26:151, 160, 162–163 and the Appendix # 31.

Ibn Abī Shayba, Muṣannaf, 1:376. Bishr b. Marwān seems to have arrived in Kufa in 72/691, though he was initially appointed in 71/690. He did not arrive in the city until after the campaign which killed Muṣʿab b. al-Zubayr (d. 72/691). In 73/692 Basra was added to his governorship and he moved to that city sometime at the end of 73/692 or the beginning of 74/693. On Bishr, see L. Veccia Vaglieri, "Bishr b. Marwān," EI2, 1:1242. On Shuʿba b. al-Ḥajjāj, see G.H.A. Juynboll, "Shuʿba b. al-Ḥadjdjādj," EI2, 9:491–492. On al-Ḥakam b. 'Utayba, see Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:466–467.

<sup>42</sup> C.E. Bosworth, "Rajā' ibn Ḥaywa al-Kindī and the Umayyad Caliphs," Islamic Quarterly (1972), 39. Bosworth speculated that Rajā' was born in the early years of Muʿāwiya's caliphate, allotting for a lifespan of seventy years—Rajā' died in 112/730; see his "Rajā' ibn Ḥaywa al-Kindī and the Umayyad Caliphs," Islamic Quarterly (1972), 37. This would make Rajā' less than twenty years old when he was a tutor for Sulaymān. It may be appropriate, therefore, to push his birth date back even more. On Sulaymān, see R. Eisner, "Sulaymān b. 'Abd al-Malik," *EI*2, 9:821–822.

tutor. This indicates that he was closely affiliated with the caliph's family in Syria. Furthermore, Rajā' seems to have spent much of his life in Syria with the Umayyad political establishment. It appears somewhat odd, therefore, for Rajā' to be identified in this report as the  $q\bar{a}ss$  al-' $\bar{a}mma$ , "the  $q\bar{a}ss$  of the common folk," in Kufa. Moreover, his virtually simultaneous arrival in Kufa with Bishr b. Marwān, brother of the caliph and uncle of Rajā's student, seems more than coincidental. It is hard to imagine, for example, that Bishr was not aware that Rajā' was in Kufa. Why he moved from Syria to Kufa at a time when he enjoyed such access to the caliph's family is certainly unclear and perplexing, especially in light of his clear desire to advise and influence the Umayyad rulers, evident in his long history as a counselor to them. Perhaps Rajā' was sent to Kufa to join Bishr; acting, therefore, in some official capacity as the  $q\bar{a}ss$  al-' $\bar{a}mma$ .

Secondly, this report raises more questions about the meaning of the phrase "qāṣṣ al-'āmma." According to a previous report attributed to Layth b. Sa'd, Layth distinguished between qaşaş al-khāşşa and qaşaş al-'āmma with the former being essentially political in focus and the latter being primarily religious in focus. Al-Ḥakam's report about Rajā' seems, then, to identify Rajā' as a nonpolitical  $q\bar{a}$ ss who addressed the religious needs of the common folk. Yet, while Rajā' was certainly a man of much religious knowledge and piety, for, indeed, al-Hakam related the report about him in Kufa in order to inform Shu'ba that Rajā' recited Sūrat al-Sajda (32) after the afternoon prayer (al-'aṣr), a singularly religious topic, depicting him as primarily a religious scholar for the common people of Kufa does not seem entirely applicable in this instance. It seems incongruous that a pro-Umayyad Syrian scholar became  $q\bar{a}ss$  of the common folk in Kufa in a short time, since the designation "qāṣṣ al-ʿāmma" carries with it the sense that the position was held by a local scholar who attracted a following to himself by a rather natural process of the growth of his reputation. I suspect, consequently, that Rajā's work as the qāṣṣ al-'āmma in Kufa during the governorship of Bishr b. Marwan may have been more official, and thus political, than the definition of qaṣaṣ al-ʿāmma given by Layth b. Saʿd permits. If so, it may be, therefore, that this report preserves mention of the first official position, aside from being the tutor of Sulayman, held by Raja' b. Ḥaywa in the Umayyad administration. If so, his subsequent rise in the administration to a level of trusted advisor appears to mirror that of other scholars, such as some judges who also first established their scholarly reputations as quṣṣāṣ before being appointed to other positions.<sup>43</sup>

If Rajā' was, indeed, sent to Kufa with Bishr, it seems to have not been the only time 'Abd al-Malik assigned a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  to a city in Iraq. In fact, a lesser known  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$ , a certain 'Ā'idh Allāh al-Mujāshi'ī (n.d.) was expressly identified by the title of "the qāss of 'Abd al-Malik b. Marwān" and seems to have held this position in Basra.<sup>44</sup> While the identification "the  $q\bar{a}ss$  of 'Abd al-Malik" is understandable as a description of a personal, meaning non-official, relationship between the  $q\bar{a}ss$  and the caliph, as may be the case in other  $q\bar{a}ss$ -caliph associations, this designation seems to indicate that 'Ā'idh Allāh was an officially appointed  $q\bar{a}ss$ of 'Abd al-Malik in the city of Basra. In actuality, it seems that 'Ā'idh Allāh never lived in nor visited Syria. Ibn 'Asākir, for example, who assembled a massive number of names of people who either lived in or merely traveled through Syria, does not include an entry for him in his work even though he knew of him; in his entry on the famous Syrian scholar and qāṣṣ Abū Idrīs 'Ā'idh Allāh al-Khawlānī, Ibn 'Asākir pointed out that 'Ā'idh Allāh al-Mujāshi'ī was a different person altogether. <sup>45</sup> Apparently, therefore, 'Ā'idh Allāh al-Mujāshi'ī never traveled to Syria and, as a result, his designation as "the  $q\bar{a}ss$  of 'Abd al-Malik" seems to suggest that he was appointed by the caliph to this position in his home town.46

<sup>43</sup> See examples of this in Chapter Two, 126–131.

Unfortunately, even in his connections to Basra, we know little about 'Āʾidh Allāh, except that he did not enjoy a good reputation as a scholar—his only source for  $had\bar{u}th$ , for example, was the disreputable  $q\bar{a}ss$  Abū Dāwūd Nufay' b. al-Ḥārith. '7 Comparing his bad reputation as a scholar to the stellar reputation of Rajā', it may come as little surprise that 'Āʾidh Allāh worked in the city, i.e. Basra, more supportive of the Umayyads and his home town, while Rajā' ended up in Kufa, a cauldron of opposition to the rulers—perhaps Kufa, according to the assessment of the Umayyads, required a more capable scholar and defender of the administration. Furthermore, if 'Āʾidh Allāh was indeed an Umayyad  $q\bar{a}ss$  in Basra who enjoyed no personal connection to the caliph 'Abd al-Malik, this indicates that, in this instance, the phrase "the  $q\bar{a}ss$  of 'Abd al-Malik" refers to an official, and not a private, relationship; when the phrase is used of other caliphs, however, it may carry other meanings.

'Ā'idh Allāh, though, was not the only pro-Umayyad  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ in Basra during 'Abd al-Malik's reign. He joined the  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ Zurāra b. Awfā al-Ḥarashī (d. 93/713)

<sup>44</sup> Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 5:277. Ibn Ḥajar claims that he read in Ibn Ḥibbān's Thiqāt that 'Ā'idh Allāh was the qāṣṣ of Sulaymān b. 'Abd al-Malik (r. 96–99/715–717); see his Tahdhīb, 2:274; idem, Taqrīb, 1:289. I have chosen to follow Ibn Ḥibbān directly. On 'Ā'idh Allāh, see the Appendix # 44. On his having held this position in Basra, see Ibn Ḥibbān, Majrūḥīn, 2:192.

<sup>45</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 26:151.

<sup>46</sup> Ibn Ḥibbān identified him as "from the people of Basra (min ahl Baṣra);" see his Majrūḥīn, 2:192.

<sup>47</sup> On Nufay', see the Appendix # 77.

who appears to have been an Umayyad leader in Basra. 48 We first hear of him when 'Ubayd Allāh b. Ziyād, Mu'āwiya's governor over Basra, appointed him judge of the city in 65/675, a position he held for less than one year.<sup>49</sup> He was also identified as the imām of the people of Basra, in particular at the mosque of the Banū Qushayr.<sup>50</sup> In addition to this, he purportedly gave gasas in his home. 51 This was a practice that he engaged in both before and after the arrival in Basra, in 75/694, of 'Abd al-Malik's famous general al-Hajjāj, who allegedly attended his sessions.<sup>52</sup> According to a certain 'Ā'isha bt. Damra: "Zurāra b. Awfā prayed in his home the noon and evening prayers, then al-Hajjāj came to the meeting."53 This report suggests that one of the most staunchly pro-Umayyad leaders frequented gaşaş sessions. It also, therefore, helps clarify al-Ḥajjāj's position towards the quṣṣāṣ as expressed in a report mentioned in Chapter Two condemning the quṣṣāṣ, prompted by a sighting of the Egyptian qāṣṣ Sulaym b. Itr, for corrupting the masses against Abū Bakr and Umar.54 Al-Hajjāj's willingness to visit Zurāra's qasas sessions suggests that the governor was more concerned with the political affiliations of the  $q\bar{a}ss$  than with the practice itself.

In Egypt, far afield from the struggles of Iraq, the Umayyads seem to have maintained the control that was initially exerted by Muʻāwiya over the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  through the capable administration of 'Abd al-'Azīz b. Marwān, 'Abd al-Malik's brother and the long-time governor of the region practically throughout 'Abd al-Malik's reign (65–85/685–704). During his tenure as governor, 'Abd al-'Azīz appointed at least two men to the position of  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ.55$  Indeed, he appointed one of the more interesting  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  of the Umayyad period, the reputable scholar 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Ḥujayra al-Khawlānī (d. 85/704) and even personally attended his sessions. <sup>56</sup> Aside from the honor of having the governor of the region attend his sessions, Ibn Ḥujayra was distinguished from the other  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  of the period because of the salary that he received for giving qaṣaṣ. In fact, Ibn Ḥujayra appears to have been a valuable asset to the government

<sup>48</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:150; Dhahabī, Kāshif, 1:402; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:628.

<sup>49</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Tabaqāt, 9:150; Khalīfa, Tārīkh, 227; Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 2:172; Pellat, Milieu, 289.

<sup>50</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:150; Ibn Ḥanbal, Zuhd, 1:247; Dhahabī, Siyar, 4:516.

<sup>51</sup> Ibn Ḥanbal, Zuhd, 247; Abū Nuʻaym, Ḥilya, 2:293; Ibn al-Jawzī, Ṣifat, 3:230; Dhahabī, Kāshif, 1:402; idem, Siyar, 4:516.

<sup>52</sup> Ibn Ḥanbal, Zuhd, 247; Abū Nu'aym, Ḥilya, 2:293; Ibn al-Jawzī, Ṣifat, 3:230.

<sup>53</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:150–151.

<sup>54</sup> See Chapter Two, 128–129.

On the appointment of qussas in Egypt, see Maqrīzī, Khiṭaṭ, 4/1:30-33.

<sup>56</sup> On him, see the Appendix # 35. On 'Abd al-'Azīz attending his sessions, see Dūlābī, Kunā, 1:314.

in many fields and faired quite well financially from it. He allegedly received an annual income of 1,000  $d\bar{l}n\bar{a}rs$ : 200 as a judge, 200 as a  $q\bar{a}ss$ , 200 as treasurer (' $al\bar{a}$  bayt  $al-m\bar{a}l$ ), 200 as a stipend (' $at\bar{a}$ 'uhu) and 200 as an award ( $j\bar{a}$ 'izatuhu). <sup>57</sup> In actuality, he is the first known  $q\bar{a}ss$  to receive payment from the ruling authorities for holding the position of  $q\bar{a}sss$ —an area about which we have practically no information.

Ibn Ḥujayra's successor as  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ, Marthad b. 'Abd Allāh, was also a reputable scholar and likewise appears to have held multiple positions in Egypt, although it is unclear how much, if any, compensation he received for his work. He replaced Ibn Ḥujayra as  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ after previously having served as judge in Alexandria. Ibn Yūnus, in fact, claimed that he was the  $muft\bar{t}$  of Egypt and that 'Abd al-'Azīz attended his sessions on legal rulings, like he had done with Ibn Ḥujayra's sessions.

While it appears undeniable that the Umayyads controlled the appointment of the  $quss\bar{a}s$  in Egypt, even paying them, it is noteworthy that the sources provide no information on qasas in Egypt between the year 39/659 when Sulaym was removed as  $q\bar{a}ss$  and 'Abd al-'Azīz's appointment of Ibn Ḥujayra more than two decades later. However, regardless of such gaps, it still seems that 'Abd al-Malik monitored the  $qusss\bar{a}s$  across the empire by appointing them in various regions and by utilizing them in other administrative positions in the empire. He was, though, not the only one who saw political value in the  $qusss\bar{a}s$ . As we have already seen, the cause of Ibn al-Zubayr, whose counter-caliphate in the Ḥijāz extended into the reign of 'Abd al-Malik, enjoyed the support of at least one  $q\bar{a}ss$ , 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr. And his was not the only opposition movement to use the  $qusss\bar{a}s$  to advance its causes; pro-'Alid movements, the Khawārij and Ibn al-Ash'ath, in his rebellion, all did likewise.

The activities of pro-'Alid movements in Iraq continued during 'Abd al-Malik's caliphate and at least two  $quss\bar{a}s$  were known at this time for their sympathies for the ahl al-bayt. One of these, Kurdūs, was a faithful supporter of the 'Alid cause since at least the battle of Siffīn, where he, like the  $q\bar{a}ss$  Rifā'a b. Shaddād, fought for 'Alī. 60 In fact, both Kurdūs and Rifā'a opposed the decision to cease hostilities for arbitration when the Syrians raised copies of the Qur'ān on their swords, and Kurdūs challenged his colleagues to continue to

<sup>57</sup> Ibn 'Abd al-Ḥakam, Miṣr, 1:235; Wakī', Quḍāt, 3:229, 325; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 17:55; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 2:501; Qāḍī, "Salaries," 22, 28. See also the Appendix # 35.

<sup>58</sup> Maqrīzī, Khiṭaṭ, 4/1:31.

<sup>59</sup> See the Appendix # 37.

<sup>60</sup> The sources are unsure about Kurdūs's identity. See the Appendix # 46.

Along with Kurdūs and Abū Yaḥyā, Kufa contained a third pro-ʿAlid  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  named ʿAdī b. Thābit. While it is unclear whether or not he actively opposed al-Ḥajjāj his Shīʿism was unequivocal as indicated in his designation as the imām of the Shīʿī mosque. ^6 Al-Masʿūdī also characterized him as "the most accomplished [scholar] in the traditions of the Shīʿī." Despite being criticized for his excessive Shīʿism, he was still widely accepted as a sound transmitter of  $had\bar{u}th$ .  $^{68}$

In a khuṭba to 'Alī's supporters, Kurdūs b. Hānī said, "O people, we did not commit ourselves to Mu'āwiya after we rid ourselves of him, nor did we rid ourselves of 'Alī after we committed ourselves to him. If we die, then we are martyrs, and if we live, then our cause has been justified. 'Alī is a clear proof from God. Justice will prevail regardless, so he who submits to him ['Alī] will have success (fa-man sallama lahu najā) and he who goes against him will perish." See Naṣr b. Muzāhim, Ṣiffīn, 484. See also Dīnawarī, Akhbār, 281; Ibn Abī al-Ḥadīd, Sharḥ naḥj al-balāgḥa, 2:130. For Rifā'a b. Shaddād's support of 'Alī, see Naṣr b. Muzāhim, Ṣiffīn, 488.

<sup>62</sup> Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 1:2376; Ibn Ḥajar, Iṣāba, 5:639.

<sup>63</sup> See the Appendix # 46. On 'Abd Allāh b. 'Awn, see Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 15:394–402.

<sup>64</sup> Ibn al-Jawzī, Ṣifa, 3:72.

<sup>65</sup> See the Appendix # 49.

Dhahabī, Kāshif, 2:15; idem, al-Mughnī fī-l-ḍuʿafāʾ, Nūr al-Dīn ʿItir (Aleppo, 1971), 2:431; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:75.

<sup>67</sup> Dhahabī, Mughnī, 2:431.

<sup>68</sup> Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:75. The Shīʿī biographical dictionaries of al-Najāshī (Kitāb al-rijāl) and al-Ṭūsī (Rijāl al-Ṭūsī) have no information on him.

A second threat to the Umayyads in Iraq came from the Khawārij, who were supported by three qussas. Two of these, Sāliḥ b. Musarriḥ and Shabīb b. Yazīd, have already been encountered in Chapter One through their use of qasas in their rebellions. <sup>69</sup> The third Khārijī  $q\bar{a}ss$  of Irāq, Shaqīq al-Dabbī, appears never to have been directly involved with military expeditions against the Umayyads, although he was definitely censured by his contemporaries because of his defense of the Khawārij. Shaqīq apparently was not simply a Khārijī; he was allegedly among the first Khawārij ( $min\ qudamas al-Khawarij$ ) and one of their leaders ( $ras al-dalal\ al-hararī$ ). The was also a  $qass in\ Kufa$  who was vilified for his affiliations with the Khawārij as well as for being unable to manage his involvement with qasas; giving qasas occupied most of his time ( $wa-l-ghālib\ alayhi\ al-qasas$ ). A contemporary and opponent of his, the qass Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Sulamī warned his listeners to not sit with Shaqīq, even though both he and Shaqīq were allegedly qussas who, at one time, shared a common devotion to 'Alī b. Abī Ṭālib.73

Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Sulamī's life, in fact, sheds more light on the complexity of the religio-political milieu of Kufa. He was a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  and  $q\bar{a}ri$ ' who recited the Qur'ān in the mosque in Kufa for forty years. <sup>74</sup> He allegedly fought alongside 'Alī at Şiffīn, then abandoned him. However, unlike Shaqīq who, when he abandoned 'Alī's cause became a Khārijī, Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Sulamī became an extreme supporter of 'Uthmān and the Umayyads (an ' $Uthm\bar{a}n\bar{\iota}$ ); in principle, according to Dhahabī, this was no small feat in Kufa. <sup>75</sup> Apparently he spent the rest of his life in the city, and while there he admonished his listeners to not sit with the Khawārij or the  $quss\bar{a}s$ , such as Shaqīq, unless the  $q\bar{a}ss$  was Abū al-Aḥwas, whom he endorsed. <sup>76</sup>

In light of his own history of changing alliances, it seems hypocritical of Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān to have based his condemnation of Shaqīq as a Khārijī on the traditional cause célèbre of the Khawārij, i.e. abandoning the cause of 'Alī. More seems to have been at stake. Furthermore, his support and praise of Abū

<sup>69</sup> See Chapter One, 65–70.

<sup>70</sup> Ibn Ḥajar, Lisān, 3:182-183.

<sup>71 &#</sup>x27;Uqaylī, Du'āfā', 2:186.

<sup>72</sup> Ibn 'Adī, Kāmil, 4:45.

<sup>73</sup> On Shaqīq, see Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:292–293 and the Appendix # 47. On 'Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Sulamī, see Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 2:320 and the Appendix # 27.

<sup>74</sup> See the Appendix # 27.

<sup>75</sup> Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 2:320. Dhahabī in his biography of ʿUthmān b. 'ṣim noted that it was a rare thing for a Kufan to be a 'Uthmānī (Abū Ḥuṣayn ʿUthmānī wa-hādhā nādir fī rajul Kūfī); see his Siyar, 5:415.

<sup>76</sup> Balādhurī, Ansāb, ed. Ya'lāwī, 7/2:232.

al-Aḥwaṣ, a fellow  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ, may betray his sympathy for a colleague who walked a similar path toward support of the Umayyads. Abū al-Aḥwaṣ, after all, also supported 'Alī and fought with him against the Khawārij at Nahrawān (38/658). He then turned to the Umayyads and was sent in the year 75/694 as the leader of the  $qurr\bar{a}$ ' against the Khawārij by none other than al-Ḥajjāj. Tionically, both Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Sulamī and Abū al-Aḥwaṣ began as 'Alids and then became supporters of the Umayyads as well as opponents of the Khawārij. Their similar journeys contributed to a feeling of mutual respect for not only did Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān praise Abū al-Aḥwaṣ as a  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ, Abū al-Aḥwaṣ praised Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān as a  $faq\bar{q}h$ .78

Clearly, the qaṣaṣ situation in Iraq, and especially in Kufa, was quite complicated. Two quṣṣāṣ, Rajā' b. Ḥaywa, who was decidedly pro-Umayyad and a transplant from Syria, and Kurdūs, who was decidedly pro-ʿAlid and native to Kufa, were both identified as a "qāṣṣ al-ʿāmma" in Kufa. At the same time, the city housed two other pro-ʿAlid quṣṣāṣ, 'Adī b. Thābit and Abū Yaḥyā, with the latter having been made lame by the Umayyads due to his love for 'Alī. Finally, other formerly pro-ʿAlid quṣṣāṣ abandoned the cause adopting instead Khārijī positions, as in the case of Shaqīq al-Ḍabbī, or extreme Umayyad positions, as in the case of Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Sulamī. Kufa stands out, therefore, as a microcosm of the associations of the quṣṣāṣ with the religio-political movements of the day and one other Iraqi opposition movement, the rebellion of Ibn al-Ash'ath exacerbated this tension.

The rebellion of Ibn al-Ash'ath brought a completely separate group of scholars- $quss\bar{a}s$  into the religio-political mix of Iraq and Kufa. Indeed, more  $quss\bar{a}s$  (nine in total) were involved in this rebellion than in any other anti-Umayyad opposition movement; they are 'Abd Allāh b. Ghālib (d. 83/702), Māhān al-Ḥanafī (d. 83/702), 'Imrān b. 'Isām (d. 83/702), Sa'īd b. Jubayr (d. 93/712), Muṭarrif b. 'Abd Allāh (d.c. 95/714), Dharr b. 'Abd Allāh (n.d.), Mujāhid b. Jabr (d. 100–4/718–22), 'Awn b. 'Abd Allāh (d. 110–20/728–38), and al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī (d. 110/728). Of these nine  $quss\bar{a}s$ , only Dharr b. 'Abd Allāh was identified specifically as a  $q\bar{a}ss$  from his association with the rebellion. According to Khalīfa b. Khayyāt, Dharr was one of allegedly 500  $qurr\bar{a}$ ' who supported Ibn al-Ash'ath.'9 Ibn al-Ash'ath commanded Dharr to incite his soldiers to battle and so "he gave qaṣaṣ every day and spoke against al-Ḥajjāj." In spite of having taken an active role in Ibn al-Ash'ath's rebellion, Dharr appears to have survived the rebellion and died at a later date. Other rebel-quṣṣāṣ were not as fortunate.

<sup>77</sup> Ţabarī, Tārīkh, 2:876.

<sup>78</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:292–293.

Khalīfa, Tārīkh, 286–287. For an analysis of the qurrā' of Ibn al-Ash'ath's rebellion including biographies of the fifty-four qurrā' named in Khalīfa's Tārīkh, see Sayed, Die Revolte, 340–369.

Among the more famous of the qussās who supported Ibn al-Ash'ath was Saʿīd b. Jubayr. His influence in Kufa was ubiquitous. He was a respected Qurʾān reciter, hadīth transmitter and pious believer, who displayed his piety by living, at times, in the mosque, where he allegedly gave gasas twice a day.81 He was not only an important religious figure, however. At the time of the rebellion of Ibn al-Ash'ath, Sa'īd was appointed by Matar b. Nājiya, a Kufan ally of Ibn al-Ash'ath, over the ma'siray al-Kūfa—cables stretched across the Euphrates, presumably at two separate locations (ma'siray), as barriers in order to prevent ships from passing without paying taxes, identified here as sadaga and ʻushūr (inna Saʻīd b. Jubayr istaʻmalahu Maṭar b. Nājiya fī fitnat Ibn al-Ashʻath 'alā ma'siray al-Kūfa 'alā al-sadaga wa-l-'ushūr).<sup>82</sup> He was also listed among the famous qurrā' of Ibn al-Ash'ath.<sup>83</sup> After the defeat at Dayr al-Jamājim (83/702), Sa'īd fled to Mecca; eventually seized by Khālid b. 'Abd Allāh al-Qasrī, he was extradited back to al-Ḥajjāj in Kufa who executed him.84 Since the sources indicate that Sa'īd gave qaṣaṣ in Kufa, this must have occurred before or at the same time as Ibn al-Ash'ath's rebellion; Sa'īd was away in the Hijāz from the end of the rebellion until his extradition back to the city. It appears, then, that he established himself as a respected scholar- $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  in the city prior to having been appointed over the ma'sir of the city and probably only obtained the position because of his trustworthy reputation.

<sup>80</sup> Khalīfa, Tārīkh, 280.

<sup>81</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Tabaqāt, 8:377, 379.

Ibn Saʻd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:381. Maṭar b. Nājiya al-Rihāḥī was a man of influence in Kufa during the period of al-Ḥajjāj's governorship and Ibn al-Ash'ath's rebellion. During Shabīb b. Yazīd's rebellion, he led Kufan forces in support of al-Ḥajjāj; see Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 2:966–968. He then changed allegiances. During the rebellion of Ibn al-Ash'ath, in 82/701, he seized Kufa from al-Ḥajjāj's governor 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. 'Abd Allāh b. 'Āmir al-Ḥaḍramī and summoned Ibn al-Ash'ath to the city; see Khalīfa, Tārīkh, 178, 186; Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 2:1069–1070. It seems that during this time Maṭar, who was himself a fiscal officer (al-maʿūna; see Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 2:1070; P. Crone, "al-Maʿūna," El2, 6:848), assigned Saʻd to the two maʾṣir in Kufa in order to collect ṣadaqa and 'ushūr ("land tax"). On the maʾṣir, see C.E. Bosworth, "Maʾṣir," El2, 6:728. On ṣadaqa as a designation for both obligatory, which may explain its use in this report, and voluntary alms giving, see T.H. Weir and A. Zysow, "Ṣadaqa," El2, 8:708–716. On the 'ushūr, see T. Sato, "'Ushr," El2, 10:917–919.

<sup>83</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:381.

<sup>84</sup> See the Appendix # 40.

Of the nine qussas who joined Ibn al-Ash'ath's rebellion, four died because of it. 'Abd Allāh b. Ghālib was killed in battle at Dayr al-Jamājim.' Māhān al-Ḥanafī, an ascetic and  $q\bar{a}ss$  of Persian descent, was captured and brutally executed, his feet and hands cut off and then crucified; a number of hagiographical traditions describe light emanating from his cross, thus portraying his own personal saintliness and, perhaps, also implying the rightness of his cause. While the two others, 'Imrān b. 'Iṣām and Sa'īd b. Jubayr, were also eventually executed, their relationship to al-Ḥajjāj as well as the complexities of the traditions surrounding their deaths deserve a closer look.

It seems significant, indeed, that the sources preserve a few reports telling of al-Ḥajjāj personally confronting men who joined Ibn al-Ashʿath. Three of those whom he allegedly interrogated were quṣṣāṣ: ʿImrān b. ʿIṣām, Saʿīd b. Jubayr and Muṭarrif b. ʿAbd Allāh.<sup>87</sup> Each man was brought before al-Ḥājjāj, who received orders from the caliph ʿAbd al-Malik to spare any rebel who confessed that by opposing the caliph he became an infidel.<sup>88</sup> According to Ibn ʿAbd Rabbihiʾs account, they were brought before the governor one after another so that each was aware of the defense of the other.<sup>89</sup>

When al-Ḥajjāj informed 'Imrān of 'Abd al-Malik's proposition, he responded: "Since the time I believed in God, I never denied Him ( $m\bar{a}$  kafartu bi- $ll\bar{a}h$  mundhu  $\bar{a}mantu$ )." So al-Ḥajjāj killed him. 90 Then Muṭarrif, who, according to Ibn 'Abd Rabbihi, "believed in dissimulation of one's religious belief under duress (al-tawriya)," was brought before the governor. 91 When he was asked to confess to kufr, he responded: "May God prosper the commander, whoever disobeys, recants the oath of allegiance, separates from the community and frightens the Muslims is worthy of being [called] an infidel (aslaḥa Allāh al- $am\bar{u}r$ ; inna man shaqqa al-' $as\bar{a}$  wa-nakatha al-bay'a wa-faraqa al-jamā'a wa-akhāfa al-muslimīna la-jad $\bar{u}r$  bi-l-kufr);" for this confession, his

<sup>85</sup> See the Appendix # 33.

<sup>86</sup> See the Appendix # 34.

<sup>87</sup> For Sa'd b. Jubayr, see Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:383; Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 2:1261–1264; Ibn 'Abd Rabbihi, al-ʿIqd al-farīd, eds. Aḥmad Amīn, Aḥmad al-Zayn and Aḥmad al-Abyārī (Cairo, 1940–1953), 5:55. For 'Imrān, see Khalīfa, Tārīkh, 282. For Muṭarrif, see Ibn 'Abd Rabbihi, 'Iqd, 5:55.

<sup>88</sup> Khalīfa, Tārīkh, 282; Ibn 'Abd Rabbihi, Iqd, 5:54; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 43:516.

<sup>89</sup> Ibn 'Abd Rabbihi, 'Iqd, 5:54.

<sup>90</sup> Ibid

<sup>91</sup> Ibid. The editors noted that another manuscript tradition had al-taqiyya here.

life was spared.<sup>92</sup> Finally, Saʻīd was questioned. He adopted 'Imrān's defense and, therefore, suffered 'Imrān's fate.<sup>93</sup>

Before turning to the role of 'Imrān b. 'Iṣām and Sa'īd b. Jubayr in Ibn al-Ash'ath's rebellion, a brief look at the enigmatic Mutarrif b. 'Abd Allah may help elucidate the complex relationship between the Umayyad administration and the qussās. Mutarrif, although he was a qāss, was known primarily for his asceticism; he lived a hermetic life in the desert and reportedly withdrew from society at the time of the great plague.<sup>94</sup> He lived in Basra during the governorship of al-Hajjāj and therefore took a position on the rebellions and divisions in the region. Mutarrif, however, attempted to steer clear of alliances with any politically active group. Ibn Sa'd records a handful of traditions stating that he was against fitna; and when problems arose he retreated into isolation. 95 Two students of his, both well-known qussās, noted that he sought to avoid fitna. Qatāda b. Di'āma said that Muṭarrif avoided fitna and fled when it appeared.<sup>96</sup> Thābit al-Bunānī confirmed Muţarrif's views on fitna when he quoted his teacher as having said: "Verily fitna does not come in order to lead one to the right path but to cause the believer to fight against himself."97 His approach to sectarian strife in the community was reflected in other aspects of his personality. His worldview may best be summed up by his words: "The best of all issues is the middle [road] (khayr al-umūr awsāṭuhā)."98

With such an attitude to life in general, it comes as no surprise that Muṭarrif approached three of the most important sectarian problems of the community, the counter-caliphate of Ibn al-Zubayr, the rebellion of Ibn al-Ashʿath and the Khawārij, in a similar way. On the counter-caliph Ibn al-Zubayr, he said: "I lived during the fitna of Ibn al-Zubayr nine or seven [years?] without hearing anything about it or asking about it." When Ibn al-Ashʿathʾs supporters pressured him to join them against al-Ḥajjāj, he purportedly replied:

"Do you understand what you are calling for? Does this action add to jihād in the path of God?" They said, "No." He said, "So therefore I will not <sup>92</sup> Ibid. Muṭarrif was joined in his dissimulation by ʿĀmir al-Shaʿbī who thus also avoided execution; see Ibn ʿAbd Rabbihi, Iqd, 5:55.

<sup>93</sup> Ibid.

<sup>94</sup> Ibn Sa'd,  $Tabaq\bar{a}t$ , 9:145; Ibn al-Jawzī, Sifa, 3:222.

<sup>95</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:143.

<sup>96</sup> Ibid., 9:142.

<sup>97</sup> Ibid.

<sup>98</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:142; Ibn 'Abd Rabbihi, 'Iqd, 2:370–371.

<sup>99</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:143.

put myself in jeopardy risking either falling into some disaster or even gaining some blessing (fa-innī lā ukhāṭir bayna halakat<sup>in</sup> aqaʿu fīhā wabayna faḍlin uṣībuhu)."<sup>100</sup>

His response indicates that he was not willing to put himself at risk; the possibility of disaster, presumably from the consequences of a failed rebellion, kept him from joining them and even the potential of reward, from a successful rebellion, was not attractive enough to entice him into the rebellion. Furthermore, the only type of military involvement he seems to have supported was that against non-Muslims, <code>jihādanfīsabīlAllāh</code>. Finally, he allegedly rebuffed a delegation of Khawārij, who tried to draw him into their struggle. From his determination to avoid harm rather than any opposition to their ideology, he said:

If I had two souls I would follow you with one and hold onto the other. For, if what you are advocating is the right way, then I would cast in the second to follow you, and if it was wrong then [only] one soul would perish, leaving me with another. But I have only one soul, and I would hate to imperil it.<sup>101</sup>

Muṭarrif apparently strove to walk a middle path, though the effectiveness of his position is unclear. As was mentioned above, other reports indicate that he joined Ibn al-Ash'ath in opposition to al-Ḥajjāj, preserving his life by engaging in pious dissimulation. While his initial engagement in rebellion against al-Ḥajjāj does not accord with his pursuit of neutrality, his pious dissimulation concurs with his approach to life and reflects the position that was attributed to him in his response to the Khawārij. Muṭarrif's history sheds light on the difficulties that the quṣṣāṣ, as well as other scholars, faced in navigating the religio-political movements of their day. His experience indicates that, no matter how hard one tried to remain outside political circles, its centrifugal force still drew him.

As for 'Imrān b. 'Iṣām and Saʿīd b. Jubayr, their opposition to al-Ḥajjāj was clear. In fact, the sources portray their opposition in strikingly similar, and therefore somewhat suspicious, terms. Each was allegedly reprimanded by al-Ḥajjāj for their perfidy having snubbed the governor's previous overtures of kindness to them. Al-Ḥajjāj reminded 'Imrān, for example, that he honored Ibid. ʿIjlī also claimed that he, along with Ibn Sīrīn, were the only two Basrans who did not join the rebellion of Ibn al-Ash'ath; see his Ma'rifa, 2:282.

<sup>101</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:144.

him by personally selecting him to travel to 'Abd al-Malik b. Marwān in order to encourage the caliph to appoint his son Walīd as the next caliph and not his brother 'Abd al-'Azīz; and 'Imrān's execution of this job garnered him the respect of the Caliph.<sup>102</sup> Al-Ḥajjāj also reminded him that he arranged his marriage to Māwiyya bt. Misma'. After 'Imrān acknowledged the governor's previous kindnesses toward him, al-Ḥajjāj responded by asking, "What then caused you to join the enemy of God, Ibn al-Ash'ath?" 'Imrān asserted that he was compelled to do so by a certain Bādhān (akhrajanī Bādhān), a man obviously of Persian descent.<sup>103</sup> However, when 'Imrān's turban was removed, his shaved head was exposed and this fact, apparently signifying his readiness for battle (in rebellion), caused al-Ḥajjāj to exclaim, "And shaved also! God will not hold it against me for killing you." Al-Hajjāj then ordered him beheaded.<sup>104</sup>

A similar account describes Saʿīd b. Jubayr's hearing before the governor. Here, al-Ḥajjāj recalled that he placed Saʿīd in a position of authority among Ibn al-Ashʿath's army when it was sent to Khurasān—a fact acknowledged by Saʿīd. Then the governor asked a question not too unlike that posed to ʿImrān: "What then caused you to go against me?" Saʿīd, like ʿImrān, claimed that he was somehow forced into it, saying: "It was made incumbent upon me (ʿuzima ʿalayya)." Hearing this, al-Ḥajjāj flew into a rage and said: "You found it incumbent upon you to join the enemy of God, but did not consider it incumbent to uphold a duty to God, the commander of the faithful and to me! Behead him!" 105

The commonalities suggest that we may be dealing with a motif and not real history. First, both men were allegedly, or at least presented themselves as, close supporters of al-Ḥajjāj and benefited from his good graces. Secondly, they both then rebuffed his kindness to them by their treacherous support of Ibn al-Ash'ath. Thirdly, they both attempted to deflect blame from themselves by suggesting that they were in some way compelled to go with Ibn al-Ash'ath. Lastly, their excuses are dismissed by al-Ḥajjāj, who executes them anyway.

One final factor also suggests that this latter account is simply a motif. Other sources indicate that Saʿīd, along with other leaders of the rebellion, two of them being fellow quṣṣāṣ Mujāhid b. Jabr and Ibrāhīm b. Yazīd, fled Iraq to the Ḥijāz. These men were to be extradited back to Iraq following a complaint raised by al-Ḥajjāj to 'Abd al-Malik against 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz, the

<sup>102</sup> Khalīfa, Tārīkh, 283; Ibn 'Abd Rabbihi, 'Iqd, 5:54.

I have followed the reading of Khalīfa b. Khayyāṭ (Tārīkh, 283) and Ibn 'Abd Rabbihi (Iqd, 5:54) though I am not sure who this Bādhān is. In Ibn 'Asākir the text reads akhrajanī bi-adhān; see his Dimashq, 43:517.

<sup>104</sup> Khalīfa, Tārīkh, 283; Ibn 'Abd Rabbihi, Iqd, 5:54; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 43:517.

<sup>105</sup> Țabarī, Tārīkh, 2:1264.

governor of Mecca, who provided sanctuary for them and was subsequently recalled as governor in part for the assistance he granted to them.  $^{106}$  Certainly this procedure of complaining to 'Abd al-Malik, of recalling 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz and of extraditing the offenders—technically undertaken by 'Umar's replacement Khālid al-Qasrī—required time and, for this reason, the sources indicate that Sa'īd was executed sometime between 93/712 and 95/714, eleven years after the end of the rebellion, seven years after 'Abd al-Malik's death and close to the time of al-Ḥajjāj's death in 95/714.  $^{107}$  This meant that Sa'īd was not present when 'Imrān and Muṭarrif were interrogated before al-Ḥajjāj after the battle of Dayr al-Jamājim in 83/702, a fact that calls into question the reliability of those accounts placing them together in front of the Umayyad governor.

As for Saʿīd's two quṣṣāṣ colleagues who were extradited with him, they experienced different fates. Mujāhid, languished in prison until he was eventually released when al-Ḥajjāj died.¹08 Ibrāhīm, an ascetic to whom many unusual happenings were attributed, was not as fortunate.¹09 According to a tradition in Ibn Saʿd, Ibrāhīm was, in fact, mistakenly extradited back to Iraq. Al-Ḥajjāj's emissary was told to bring Ibrāhīm, by whom he meant Ibrāhīm al-Nakhaʿī. When he entered Mecca, he asked for Ibrāhīm, and Ibrāhīm al-Taymī responded. After being brought to Iraq, he allegedly died in prison in Wāsiṭ. On the night of his death, al-Ḥajjāj ostensibly dreamt that someone said: "A man from the people of paradise has died in this land tonight." When he inquired and discovered that it was Ibrahim al-Taymī, he, in an alleged response indicative of the conventional view of al-Ḥajjāj as a harsh and unforgiving ruler, said: "This was a dream of satanic inspiration," and ordered that the body be thrown in the garbage.¹10

Not all quṣṣāṣ of the rebellion of Ibn al-Ash'ath suffered the unfortunate fates of Ibrāhīm. Some quṣṣāṣ survived the rebellion scot-free. 'Awn b. 'Abd Allāh, for example, realizing the rebellion was failing, abandoned Ibn al-Ash'ath and sought refuge first with the Umayyad Muḥammad b. Marwān in Naṣībīn and then with 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz. Unlike Sa'īd, Mujāhid and Tabarī, Tārīkh, 2:1262. According to Ṭabarī, 'Aṭā' b. Abi Rabāḥ, Ṭalq b. Ḥabīb and 'Amr b. Dīnār were also named for extradition but 'Amr was not extradited because he was Meccan. Ibn Khaldūn, however, names only three men: Sa'd, Mujāhid and Ṭalq, see his Tārīkh (Beirut, 1984), 3:82.

<sup>107</sup> See the Appendix # 40.

<sup>108</sup> Țabarī, Tārīkh, 2:1262–1264.

<sup>109</sup> See the Appendix # 38.

<sup>110</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:402.

Ibrāhīm, he was somehow able to avoid extradition and continued a long relationship with 'Umar. $^{\rm III}$

Another survivor of the rebellion was the famous al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī. He joined the rebellion unwillingly and lived through it ( $ukhrija\ karh^{an}\ lam\ yuqtal$ ). He tried to maintain similar neutrality towards Yazīd b. Muhallab's rebellion against the Umayyads. He excoriated both Yazīd and the Umayyads and laid the blame for the fitna on "orators ( $khuṭab\bar{a}$ '), poets, fools, drifters and conceited men."  $^{113}$

The number and diversity of the qussās who were active during the reign of 'Abd al-Malik is quite astounding. As is evident from the above analysis, the qussās were found among both the pro-Umayyad and the anti-Umayyad camps, as well as within the subdivisions of the latter. Not only was this evident in the city of Kufa, it was also the case in the largely pro-Umayyad city of Basra. Zurāra b. Awfā, for example, was a pro-Umayyad qāṣṣ who was already giving qaṣaṣ in the city when al-Ḥajjāj arrived (c. 75/694) and who was known as one of the *imām*s of the people of Basra, in particular, at the mosque of the Banū Qushayr.<sup>114</sup> Conversely, anti-Umayyad contemporaries of Zurāra were also giving qaşaş in Basra prior to Ibn al-Ash'ath's rebellion; 'Imrān b. 'Iṣām (d. 83/702) gave qaṣaṣ in the mosque of the Banū Dubay'a while his colleague, 'Abd Allāh b. Ghālib (d. 83/702), gave qaṣaṣ in "the congregational mosque" of Basra.<sup>115</sup> Since both of these men were killed near or at the end of Ibn al-Ash'ath's rebellion, it seems probable that these three qussās lived contemporaneously in Basra. Unfortunately, it is not possible to determine whether they held their positions as  $quss\bar{a}s$  in their various mosques simultaneously or separately. However, it is clear, from the number of men who gave qasas in the region, who were then killed in battle against al-Ḥajjāj, who were reprimanded by him and who were executed by him, that they carried enough influence to have attracted the attention of the governor. Considering that Khalīfa b. Khayyāṭ alleges that there were more than 500 qurrā' in Ibn al-Ash'ath's rebellion and identifies fifty-four of them by name, it is noteworthy that the reports

See the Appendix # 65. Why 'Awn was not killed like other of Ibn al-Ash'ath's supporters is uncertain. It was possibly of some advantage to him that he was an important legist and that his brother, 'Ubayd Allāh, was not only one of the famous seven fuqahā' of Medina but was also a teacher of 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz. On 'Ubayd Allāh's relationship to 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz, see C. Pellat, "Fukahā' al-Madīna al-Sab'a," El2 Supplement 12:311.

<sup>112</sup> Khalīfa, Tārīkh, 287.

<sup>113</sup> Țabarī, Tārīkh, 2:1391–1392, 1401–1402.

<sup>114</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:150; Ibn Ḥanbal, Zuhd, 1:247; Dhahabī, Siyar, 4:516.

<sup>115</sup> On 'Imrān, see Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 6:159. On 'Abd Allāh, see Abū Nu'aym, Ḥilya, 2:291; Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 6:118.

describing the fallout of the rebellion and the punishments handed down for involvement contain traditions about the fate of those  $qurr\bar{a}$  who were also known to have been  $quss\bar{a}s$  and seems to suggest that these  $qurr\bar{a}$ - $quss\bar{a}s$  were considered particularly culpable in the rebellion.

Nevertheless, these assessments must remain purely speculation at this time since it is still unclear precisely what role many of these  $qurr\bar{a}$ - $quss\bar{a}s$  played in the rebellion. We do know, however, that Dharr b. 'Abd Allāh was the only  $q\bar{a}r\bar{c}$ - $q\bar{a}ss$  who was explicitly identified as having given qasas against al-Ḥajjāj and yet he, as we noted above, surprisingly survived both the rebellion and the post-rebellion executions. We also know, for example, that other men, such as 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Abī Layla and a certain al-Ḥarīsh ("the instigator"), who were not identified as qussas engaged in the qasas-like activity of inciting the soldiers to battle in the rebellion. Consequently, the precise reason why the term  $q\bar{a}ss$  was applied to only one man when others seem to have performed a similar function or why certain men, a not insignificant number of whom were known to have been qussas, were treated harshly while others seem to have avoided punishment remains elusive.

Sulaymān b. 'Abd al-Malik (r. 96–9/715–7)

Quṣṣāṣ continued to enjoy access to caliphs, as counselors and advisors, during the reigns of the next two Umayyad caliphs, al-Walīd b. 'Abd al-Malik (r. 86–96/705–15) and Sulaymān b. 'Abd al-Malik (r. 96–9/715–7). In spite of the relatively long reign of al-Walid b. 'Abd al-Malik, the only  $q\bar{a}ss$  connected to him was Rajā' b. Ḥaywa, who acted as an advisor to the caliph. <sup>117</sup> In the reign of Sulaymān, Rajā' continued his advisory role and, when the caliph was on his death bed, he famously swayed him to name 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz his successor. <sup>118</sup> Two other quṣṣās also counseled the caliph: Qatāda b. Di'āma, whom Sulaymān summoned to answer a question of legal relevance; <sup>119</sup> and

<sup>116</sup> On 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Abī Layla, see Khalīfa, Tārīkh, 287. On al-Ḥarīsh, see Khalīfa, Tārīkh, 285–286.

Tabarī recorded that Rajā' was part of al-Walīd's entourage and preserved a report in which Rajā' disagreed with the caliph's practice of delivering two khuṭba's, one seated and another standing, although he apparently resigned himself to overlooking it since the caliphs claimed to have taken it from their predecessors dating back to Muʿāwiya; see his Tārīkh, 2:1234.

<sup>118</sup> R. Eisner, "Sulaymān b. 'Abd al-Malik," EI2, 9:821–822.

<sup>119</sup> Jāḥiẓ, Bayān, 1:243.

Ironically, in light of the access that these three eminent scholars-qussas enjoyed to Sulaymān, the only person to have been directly connected to this caliph as a qass was a certain Ibn Abī 'Uyayna. He is mentioned only by Ṭabarī who reported that in the year 99/717: "Ibn Abī 'Uyayna used to give qasas in his [Sulaymān's] presence ( $k\bar{a}na$  lbn  $Ab\bar{u}$  'Uyayna yaqussu 'indahu')." Even though the identity of this Ibn Abī 'Uyayna is uncertain, it is clear from the report that a  $q\bar{a}ss$  visited Sulaymān, and he seems to have been either a personal  $q\bar{a}ss$  or the  $q\bar{a}ss$  of his court. 122

Two other quṣṣāṣ who can be traced to Sulaymān's reign were involved in the caliph's military campaigns, in particular during the historic siege of Constantinople in 98–9/716–8 by the famous general Maslama b. 'Abd al-Malik. One of these, 'Abd Allāh b. Yazīd (d. 121/738), was identified specifically as the qāṣṣ of Maslama's army, and thus shows that qaṣaṣ continued to

In a report recorded by Jāḥiz, Salama, on one occasion, discussed with the caliph the issue of God's punishment of the unbelievers and his mercy towards the beneficent; see his <code>Bayān</code>, 3:142. On another occasion, Sulaymān sent the distinguished al-Zuhrī to Salama, and the <code>qāṣṣ</code> snubbed the famous emissary saying: "I have no need of him [Sulayman], so if he has a need, let him come to me." See Ibn Ḥibbān, <code>Thiqāt</code>, 4:316; Ṣafadī, <code>Wāfi</code>, 15:320.

Tabarī,  $T\bar{a}r\bar{i}kh$ , 2:1338. It is also worth noting, considering the many places in which the term " $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$ " has been confused with the term " $q\bar{a}d\bar{\iota}$ ", that here the term cannot be read as  $q\bar{a}d\bar{\iota}$  since the sentence immediately preceding the statement about Ibn Abī 'Uyayna as  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$ , says: "The  $q\bar{a}d\bar{\iota}$  of Sulaymān was Sulaymān b. Ḥabīb al-Muḥāribī." See Ṭabarī,  $T\bar{a}r\bar{\imath}kh$ , 2:1338.

It is possible that he is Muḥammad b. Abī 'Uyayna al-Muhallabī, who was the governor of Rayy under the 'Abbāsid caliph al-Manṣūr (r. 136–158/754–775) and the father of two 'Abbāsid era poets: Abū 'Uyayna (known also by the kunya of Abū al-Minhāl) and 'Abd Allāh. As Ghédira and Pellat have noted, there has been much confusion about the identity of these three because each is referred to in the sources as Ibn Abī 'Uyayna; see C. Pellat, "Muḥammad b. Abī 'Uyayna," EI2, 7:395; Ameur Ghédira, "Ibn Abī 'Uyayna," EI2, 3:694; idem, "Deux poètes contemporains de Baššār, les frères Ibn Abī 'Uyayna," Arabica, x, 154–187. As Pellat mentioned, Ghédira has done much in clarifying the identity of each; see his "Ibn Abī 'Uyayna," EI2, 3:694; idem, "Deux poetes," 154–187. However, it is still not possible to connect this qāṣṣ directly to Muḥammad b. Abī 'Uyayna. If he was indeed the same, he would provide an interesting example of an Umayyad qāṣṣ who approximately forty years later became an 'Abbāsid governor and, furthermore, would seem to confirm the connection between qaṣaṣ and bayān due to the fame of his family as poets.

be used in martial contexts.<sup>123</sup> While little is known about him, he appears to have carried significant enough clout in Syrian political affairs to have confidently offered protection to the Syrian  $had\bar{t}h$  scholar Makhūl from the influential advisor and  $q\bar{a}ss$  Rajā' b. Ḥaywa who reprimanded the scholar for comments made in his sessions.<sup>124</sup> This was no small feat, since Rajā' enjoyed influence at the highest levels of the administration, in particular as the one in charge of the official seal for Sulaymān.<sup>125</sup> While 'Abd Allāh appears to have been the official  $q\bar{a}ss$  of Maslama's army, he was not the only  $q\bar{a}ss$  in the campaign in Constantinople. He was joined there by the famous scholar and  $q\bar{a}ss$  Mujāhid b. Jabr who, though often associated with scholarly pursuits, apparently also excelled as a military tactician, indicated by his appointment as one of Maslama's commanders.<sup>126</sup>

'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz (r. 99-101/717-20)

Even though 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz came in contact with a large number of  $quṣṣ\bar{a}$ ṣ during his lifetime, only two of them seem to have enjoyed an official, or at least, distinctive, connection to him in their capacity as  $quṣṣ\bar{a}$ ṣ. The first was

<sup>123</sup> See the Appendix # 78.

<sup>124</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 28:314–315.

<sup>125</sup> Țabarī, Tārīkh, 2:838.

<sup>126</sup> Țabarī, Tārīkh, 2:1315.

The temptation to simply ascribe all <code>quṣṣāṣ</code> associated with 'Umar to the time of his reign as caliph is appealing but may not be entirely accurate. Michael Lecker, for example, noted that a number of <code>quṣṣāṣ</code> were affiliated with 'Umar; he listed five Muḥammad b. Ka'b, Mujāhid b. Jabr, Muḥammad b. Qays, Muslim b. Jundab and Mūsā b. Wardān; see his "King Ubayy and the <code>Quṣṣāṣ," Methods</code> and Theories in the Study of Islamic Origins, ed. H. Berg (Leiden, 2003), republished in <code>People</code>, Tribes and Society in Arabia Around the Time of Muḥammad (Aldershot, UK, 2005), II:69–70. He also incorrectly assumed that they all "operated during 'Umar's short reign." See Lecker, "Ubayy," II:68.

Muslim b. Jundab who was 'Umar's tutor.<sup>128</sup> Muslim was a respected scholar and was praised by 'Umar himself for the eloquence of his Qur'ān recitation.<sup>129</sup> 'Umar, in fact, went beyond verbal praise and honored Muslim financially by giving him two  $d\bar{n}n\bar{a}rs$  each month for giving  $qa\bar{s}a\bar{s}$ ; prior to that, Muslim gave  $qa\bar{s}a\bar{s}$  for free.<sup>130</sup> Indeed, of the  $qu\bar{s}a\bar{s}$  who were associated with 'Umar, only Muslim received payment for  $qa\bar{s}a\bar{s}$ . Exactly what this payment indicates is open for debate. Arguably, this was a salary, therefore conferring upon Muslim the position of an official, state-sponsored  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$ , or it may simply be an honorarium. In either case, it seems clear that this payment reflects a unique relationship between 'Umar and Muslim.

The precise meaning of 'Umar's payment of Muslim is also obscured by the lack of information available to us about the payment of qussas in general. Indeed, 'Umar's payment of Muslim as a qass is only the second, and, in actuality, the last, example of a qass receiving payment during the Umayyad period. We have already encountered the report of 'Abd al-'Azīz b. Marwān of Egypt paying Ibn Ḥujayra a yearly salary of 200 dinas, or 16.6 dinas per month for giving qasas. Clearly the two dinas Muslim received seem incongruous with Ibn Ḥujayra's monthly wage of 16.6 dinas. The reason for the difference is unclear. <sup>131</sup> It certainly cannot be a result of their scholarly abilities since both men were respected and trustworthy. Thus, since we have only two examples of payments for qussas and since there is such a stark disparity between the amounts of these payments, it is not possible to draw definitive conclusions about the pay scale for the qussas of the Umayyad period from this information. <sup>132</sup>

A second  $q\bar{a}ss$ , the Medinan Muḥammad b. Qays, maintained a particularly close relationship to 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz. Indeed, of all the  $quss\bar{a}s$  affiliated

<sup>128</sup> Dhahabī, Ṭabaqāt al-qurrā', ed. Aḥmad Khān (Riyadh, 2006), 93; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:66.

<sup>129</sup> Jāḥiz, Bayān, 1:367-368; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:66.

<sup>130</sup> Dhahabī,  $T\bar{a}r\bar{\iota}kh$ , 7:257. Ibn Sa'd, followed by Ibn Ḥajar, says that he received two  $d\bar{\iota}n\bar{a}rs$  a month for judging but this is most likely a corruption since all other sources identify Muslim as a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  and not as a  $q\bar{a}d\bar{\iota}$ ; see Ibn Sa'd,  $Tabaq\bar{a}t$ , 7:422; Ibn Ḥajar,  $Tahdh\bar{\iota}b$ , 4:66. For those sources which identify him as a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$ , see the Appendix # 61.

<sup>131</sup> Wadād al-Qāḍī noted the discrepancy between Muslim's and Ibn Ḥujayra's payment as a judge, in particular, and disregarded the small amount attributed to Muslim because of his connection to the pious 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz; "the excessive modesty of their reported salaries make the information about them suspect." See her "Salaries," 24, n. 84.

<sup>132</sup> A third qāṣṣ, the Kufan Abū ʿAbd al-Raḥmān, was offered compensation for teaching Qurʾān as a tutor but he refused to accept it; see Ibn Saʿd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:291. Similarly, al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī purportedly refused to receive payment as a judge; see Qāḍī, "Salaries," 24, n. 85.

with the caliph, he was the only one identified as "the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  of 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz" and to have been so while 'Umar was still governor of Medina. <sup>133</sup> As we have noted above, the meaning of the identification of a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  as "the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$ " of an Umayyad ruler is elusive. In the case of Muḥammad b. Qays, it meant either he was the official  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  of 'Umar while he was in Medina, or that he was simply 'Umar's personal  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$ . In any case, when taken in tandem with Muslim b. Jundab, the sources seem to suggest that there were two  $qus\bar{s}s\bar{s}$  in the city of Medina sanctioned by 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz. Nevertheless, it is still unclear whether Muḥammad and Muslim held their positions as  $qus\bar{s}s\bar{s}$  at different times, in different capacities or simultaneously, although in different locations. However, it appears that Muḥammad was 'Umar's personal  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  for he was with 'Umar in Syria when the governor became caliph; apparently he followed 'Umar to Syria, and, thus, was perhaps part of his entourage. <sup>134</sup>

Across the empire, 'Umar used quṣṣāṣ in a number of official and advisory capacities. He appointed a certain Byzantine, Christian convert, al-Julā Abū Kathīr al-Rūmī (d. 120/737), who, in fact, may have been his mawlā, as the qāṣṣ of Alexandria. In Iraq, 'Umar used the Kufan qāṣṣ 'Awn b. 'Abd Allāh as his representative and emissary to the Khawārij. In Basra, he and his governor of Basra, 'Adī b. Arṭāt, wanted to place two quṣṣāṣ in the judiciary, though both appointees refused to accept the position. While 'Adī initially appointed the renowned al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, al-Ḥasan asked that his appointment be rescinded. In 'Umar then ordered 'Adī to appoint either Bakr b. 'Abd Allāh or Iyās b. Muʻāwiya, both of whom were from the tribe of Muzayna. Adī selected Bakr, who, like his teacher al-Ḥasan, refused the appointment, leaving the judgeship to Iyās.

In addition to Muslim b. Jundab and Muḥammad b. Qays, as well as to the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  appointed by 'Umar to various positions around the empire, 'Umar also confided in a number of men who were known to be  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ , among other

<sup>133</sup> Yaḥyā b. Maʿin, Tārīkh, 3:196; Khalīfa, Tabaqāt, 3; Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 1:212; Fasawī, Maʿrifa, 1:324, 3:170; Dulābī, Kunā, 1:313; Ibn Abī Ḥātim, Jarḥ, 8:63; Ibn Manjawayh, Rijāl Muslim, 2:203; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 26:323; Samʿānī, Ansāb, 4:428–430; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:681; Ibn Kathīr, Tafsīr, 4:60; Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 8:226. For his connection to 'Umar in Medina, see Yaḥyā b. Maʿin, Tārīkh, 3:196; Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 1:212.

<sup>134</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 55:108.

<sup>135</sup> Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 5:178; Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 7:339; Ṣafadī, Wāfī, 11:137. On the possibility that he was 'Umar's mawlā, see Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:321.

<sup>136</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 7:350.

<sup>137</sup> Țabarī, Tārīkh, 2:1346–1347.

<sup>138</sup> Jāḥiz, Bayān, 1:100-101.

<sup>139</sup> Jāḥiz, Bayān, 1:100–101; Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 2:1346–1347.

things, as advisors. Two of his closest counselors were Muḥammad b. Kaʿb al-Quraẓī and Rajāʾ b. Ḥaywa.¹⁴⁰ Rajāʾ, of course, was most famous for his role in bringing ʿUmar to the caliphate and allegedly maintained a close connection to the caliph, even monitoring the caliph's rulings to determine their reliability.¹⁴¹ Rajāʾs influence on the caliph was so comprehensive that al-Yaʿqūbī claimed that he ran rough-shod over ʿUmar (kāna al-ghālib ʿalay-hi Rajāʾ b. Ḥaywa al-Kindī).¹⁴² Even in ʿUmarʾs most difficult moments, as in the death of his son, he sought out Rajāʾs council and comfort.¹⁴³

Another qāṣṣ who offered words of comfort to 'Umar upon the death of his son was 'Awn b. 'Abd Allāh.¹⁴⁴ 'Awn first came in contact with 'Umar after fleeing Iraq in the wake of having participated in Ibn al-Ash'ath's failed rebellion; 'Umar granted 'Awn refuge with him in the Ḥijāz.¹⁴⁵ 'Awn also met with 'Umar in Syria after the governor became the caliph. 'Awn and two of his colleagues, all of whom were murji'ites, apparently defended their position before the caliph and even allegedly convinced him of its correctness, although 'Awn later renounced his stance on the issue.¹⁴⁶

While 'Umar kept a number of qussas as confidents, Mūsā b. Wardān (d. 117/735) claimed to have benefitted from the privilege of unrestricted access to the caliph, enjoying an open-door policy allowing him to visit whenever he pleased and to stay as long as he wanted. There seem to have been limits, however, on this privilege. Mūsā recounted that one day he asked 'Umar for a letter <sup>140</sup> Balādhurī, Ansāb, ed. al-'Azm, 7:80. Muḥammad advised 'Umar on Qur'ān interpretation (Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 1:298–299, 484–485) and admonished him about the imminence of death (Balādhurī, Ansāb, ed. al-'Azm, 7:81, 146; Jāḥiz, Bayān, 3:143). Likewise, Rajā' advised 'Umar about the imminence of death as well as about the "Golden Rule" of treating others as one would want to be treated; see Balādhurī, Ansāb, ed. al-'Azm, 7:80. It is noteworthy, though, that the same admonition given by Rajā' to 'Umar was also ostensibly said by the qāṣṣ Yazīd b. Abān al-Raqāshī; see Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 32:76.

<sup>141</sup> Țabarī, Tārīkh, 2:1344-1345.

<sup>142</sup> Yaʻqūbī, Tārīkh, 2:308.

<sup>143</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 18:112.

<sup>144</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 47:71.

<sup>145</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 47:65; Dhahabī, Siyar, 5:104; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:338–339.

<sup>146</sup> Ibn Saʻd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:430. Both Ibn ʻAsākir (Dimashq, 47:63) and Dhahabī (Siyar, 5:104) claim that Ibn Saʻd identified one of the other two companions as 'Umar b. Dharr. Ibn Saʻd, however, identified him as 'Umar b. Ḥamza; see his Ṭabaqāt, 8:430. However, 'Umar b. Dharr was identified in the sources as a murjiʾī and so could still be the 'Umar who accompanied 'Awn; see 'Ijlī, Maʻrifa, 2:165; the Appendix # 65. On the Murjiʾī, see W. Madelung, "Murdjiʾa," *El*2, 7:605–607. On 'Awn's abandonment of murjiʾa, see Dhahabī, Siyar, 5:104; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:339.

requesting that a debt of 20,000 *dīnār*s be paid him by Ḥayyān b. Shurayḥ, the well-known scholar and finance director of Egypt, for the price of peppers.

'Umar said, "For whom is the 20,000 *dīnār*s?" I [Mūsā] said, "For me." He said, "Wherefrom (min ayna)?" I said, "I was a merchant (tājir)." And 'Umar hit his hand with his scepter and said, "The merchant is insolent, and the insolent are in hell-fire (al-tājir fājir, wa-l-fājir fī-l-nār)." Then he said, "Write to Ḥayyān on his behalf (iktubū lahu ilā Ḥayyān)." And I never visited him after that. He commanded his chamberlain to not allow me to enter.<sup>147</sup>

Even though 'Umar complied with Mūsā's request, it was apparently the last time he allowed Mūsā such unrestricted access to his court since he appears to have overstepped his bounds as an advisor by using his connection to the caliph to his advantage.

In addition to having qussas as his instructors and advisors, 'Umar also led three qussas as his students in  $had\bar{u}th$  transmission: Rajā' b. Ḥaywa, Muḥammad b. Qays and Hilāl Abū Ṭu'ma. Haw We have already encountered Rajā' as both a political and religious advisor to 'Umar and Muḥammad as "the  $q\bar{a}ss$  of 'Umar." As for Hilāl, he appears to have been purely a man of religious interests. He was a  $mawl\bar{a}$  of 'Umar who resided in Egypt where he was known for being a  $q\bar{a}ss$  and for his excellence in Qur'ān recitation. Hay

While it appears that 'Umar was generally supportive of the qussas, he did bring an end to a controversial practice allegedly begun by them. According to Ibn 'Abd al-Ḥakam, the qussas, maintained the practice of praying for the caliph and the governors. Indeed, this seems to have been a remnant of the practice implemented by Muʻawiya of praying for the caliph and his administration and cursing the opponents of the caliph, although Ibn 'Abd al-Ḥakam does not mention the aspect of cursing the caliph's opponents. <sup>150</sup> Nonetheless, 'Umar commanded his military leaders to stop devoting so much attention to praying

<sup>147</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 61:226.

<sup>148</sup> Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 21:434–436.

<sup>149</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 74:98–99; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:541–542.

<sup>150</sup> The cursing of the opponents of the caliph at the end of the Friday prayer had also continued from the time of Muʻāwiya, who utilized the quṣṣāṣ to this end, until 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz who replaced the curse with a passage from the Qurʾān. We are probably dealing with the same practice here; see Ibn Abī al-Ḥadīd, Sharḥ nahj al-balāgha, 4:56–59; 'Athamina, "Qaṣaṣ," 68.

for the caliph and his colleagues, that he claimed was begun by the qussas, and to focus instead on praying for the Prophet and the believers.<sup>151</sup>

Yazīd b. 'Abd al-Malik (r. 101-5/720-4)

After reaching the zenith of their access to the Umayyad administration under the rule of 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz, the influence of the qussas under 'Umar's immediate successors appears to have waned. In fact, from the reigns of Yazīd b. 'Abd al-Malik (r. 101-5/720-4) through Ibrāhīm b. al-Walīd (r. 126/744)—a period of approximately a quarter century—there are very few references to qussas holding their positions by virtue of governmental appointment. As a result, we are left with a spotty picture of qasas in its official capacity during this period. Indeed, the only qasas definitively connected to the Umayyad leadership during this period was Rajā' b. Ḥaywa whose affiliations with the administration were extensive though not directly connected to qasas. <sup>152</sup>

Hishām b. 'Abd al-Malik (r. 105-25/724-43)

As was mentioned above, 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz attempted to rein in the overt politicization of the qaṣaṣ sessions by calling them to divert their attention from praising the caliph and cursing his enemies—a practice allegedly implemented during the struggle between Mu'āwiya and 'Alī—to praising God and His Prophet. However, he does not appear to have been entirely successful since the practice continued in the caliphate of Hishām b. 'Abd al-Malik, indicating that the quṣṣāṣ, in spite of the boundaries to which the caliphs encouraged them to adhere, still used their influence to promote political agendas, even in the heartland of Umayyad power, Syria.  $^{154}$

In the southern Syrian region of Ḥawrān, a certain Abū Shayba was giving qaṣaṣ cursing 'Alī b. Abī Ṭālib. Purportedly al-Junayd b. 'Abd al-Raḥmān, initially appointed by Hishām to be the governor-general in India in 105/724 and then reassigned to Khurasān in 111/729–30, was traveling through the region on his way to visit the caliph in Damascus when he prayed the Friday prayer

<sup>151</sup> Ibn ʿAbd al-Ḥakam, Sīrat ʿUmar ibn ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz, ed. Aḥmad ʿUbayd (Beirut, 1984), 80–81. See also Abū Nuʿaym, Ḥilya, 5:372–373.

<sup>152</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 18:109.

<sup>153</sup> See above, 216-220.

<sup>154 &#</sup>x27;Athamina, "Qaṣaṣ," 68-69.

in the mosque where Abū Shayba gave qaṣaṣ. After the prayer service, Abū Shayba told the congregation that he closed by cursing "Abū Turāb." Al-Junayd asked his neighbor about the identity of Abū Turāb and was told that this was 'Alī b. Abī Ṭālib. Incensed by this comment, al-Junayd began to beat the  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  until men of the mosque restrained him. Both al-Junayd and Abū Shayba were then brought to Hishām where they recounted the story before the caliph. Al-Junayd defended his action by telling the caliph that, if the  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  said such things about a relative of Hishām's, he would have responded in the same way. Hishām, agreeing with al-Junayd, said that Abū Shayba was the type of person that they not keep in their midst for he was destroying their land (fa-yufsidu 'alaynā al-balad); so Hishām exiled him to India. 155

The account is important for three reasons. First, it indicates that some  $quss\bar{a}s$  continued to integrate political rhetoric, specifically the cursing of political opponents, into their sessions, in spite of 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz's attempt to restrain this practice by advocating that the  $quss\bar{a}s$  focus on matters of religious importance, like praising God and His Prophet. Secondly, the response of both al-Junayd and Hishām conveys the impression that the Umayyads were trying to distance themselves from this type of inflammatory speech. At the very least, the caliph saw it as a destructive element in the country. Thirdly, the ability of the  $q\bar{a}ss$  to maintain this apparent routine during the Friday prayer with the support of his congregation seems to show the inability of the central government to exert sufficient control over the discourse given in the mosques, even in their own region of Syria.

The above report emphasizes the continuing involvement of the qussas in controversial religio-political issues and suggests that loyal qussas were valuable resources. Such seems to be the case with the qass al-Nadr b. 'Amr al-Ḥimyarī who was placed in charge of prayer in Damascus in the year 110/728. His importance to the Umayyads, in fact, continued to be felt into the reign of Yazīd b. al-Walīd (r. 126/744) when he was put in charge of the kharaj, the jund (i.e. the dassas of the soldiery of the region), one of the two official seals (al-khatim al-saghar) and the guard (al-karas). 156

Even in Kufa, the hotbed of anti-Umayyad opposition, the Umayyads benefitted from a sympathetic  $q\bar{a}ss$ . Maʿbad b. Khālid was a Kufan  $q\bar{a}ss$  at the court of Khālid al-Qasrī (105–118/723–36). Wadād al-Qādī has shown that prior to adopting a life of religious pursuits identifying him as a  $q\bar{a}ss$ , he was a security official of the Umayyads who was in charge of blockading the Kufa-Mecca road during al-Ḥajjāj's siege on Ibn al-Zubayr in Mecca. His journey from a security official to  $q\bar{a}$ ss is the opposite path taken by Saʿīd b. Jubayr, who, as we encountered above, appears to have first established his reputation as a man of religion and then to have been placed in a position of monitoring the nautical thorough fares through the city of Kufa. His position of monitoring the nautical

<sup>155</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 11:290–291.

See the Appendix # 92. Al-Naḍr joined Maʿbad al-Ṭuruq as one of the qussas s who also held a security position with the Umayyads.

<sup>157</sup> Al-Qāḍī, "Security Positions," 277–279.

In Egypt, only one man was appointed to the position of  $q\bar{a}ss$  during the caliphate of Hishām. Ḥanẓala b. Ṣafwān, who was appointed by Hishām as governor of Egypt from 118/736 to 124/742, placed Khayr b. Nuʻaym, in 120/738, over both qasas and judgeship. 160 Even though Khayr was the only  $q\bar{a}ss$  appointed to that position during this time, at least one other  $q\bar{a}ss$ , Tawba b. Namir, was considered a valuable resource for the Umayyads of Egypt; Hishām's first governor of Egypt, al-Walīd b. Rifā'a (109–17/727–35) gave him a judgeship. 161

At least three qussas seem to have been active in Mecca during Hishām's reign: Saʿīd b. Ḥassān al-Makhzūmī, 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. al-Qāsim and 'Abd Allāh b. Kathīr. Saʿīd b. Ḥassān al-Makhzūmī was identified as the "the  $q\bar{a}ss$  of the people of Mecca  $(q\bar{a}ssaltassalt$

According to Sufyān b. 'Uyayna, 'Abd Allāh b. Kathīr, a third Meccan  $q\bar{a}ss$ , gave qasas to the public (al-jamā'a) in the year 122/740, toward the end of Hishām's reign. <sup>165</sup> Unfortunately, 'Abd Allāḥ's precise identity is unsure,

<sup>158</sup> Ibid., 273-277. See also the Appendix # 73.

<sup>159</sup> See above, 252.

<sup>160</sup> Kindī, Quḍāt, 41. During the caliphate of Yazīd b. 'Abd al-Malik (r. 101–105/720–724), Ḥanẓala served his first tenure as governor of Egypt. In 103/722, he appointed the qāṣṣ and scholar 'Uqba b. Muslim as his deputy; see Kindī, Quḍāt, 41.

<sup>161</sup> Kindī, Quḍāt, 36.

<sup>162</sup> Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 2:11–12. Also see the Appendix # 106.

<sup>163</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 35:329.

<sup>164</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 7:452.

<sup>165</sup> Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-awsat, ed. Muḥammad b. Ibrāhīm al-Luḥaydān (Beirut, 1998), 1:448;
Fākihī, Akhbār, 2:339. The reports in Fākihī indicate that a certain "Sufyān" transmitted therefore making any definitive analysis of the report difficult. However, a second report, transmitted by Muhammad b. Yahyā b. Abī 'Umar (d. 243/857)<sup>166</sup> and ostensibly connected with 'Abd Allah, offers an interesting statement on the status of gasas in Mecca. Ibn Abī 'Umar stated that giving gasas to the public was a custom in Mecca (huwa alladhī kāna 'alayhi al-'amal bi-baladinā). Furthermore, he claimed: "qaṣaṣ had been such [i.e. qaṣaṣ ʿalā al-jamāʿa] in Mecca for a long time. Then they resumed it recently, and then they abandoned it after that (fa-kāna al-gasas 'dhālika bi-Makka zamān<sup>an</sup> tawīl<sup>an</sup> thumma 'āwadūhu mundhu qarīb thumma tarakūhu ba'da dhālika).<sup>167</sup> Regrettably, it is unclear to what series of events this report points. While it is possible that the report refers to events occurring during 'Abd Allāh b. Kathīr's time as  $q\bar{a}ss$  in Mecca, and, therefore, during the caliphate of Hishām, it seems more probable, since the report appears to preserve the first-hand testimony of Ibn Abī 'Umar, who died in 243/857, that this stopping and re-starting of qaṣaṣ in Mecca occurred during the 'Abbasid period. Moreover, I have not been able to identify any time period during the reigns of the Umayyads when qaşaş stopped in Mecca; even during the counter-caliphate of Ibn al-Zubayr, qaṣaṣ continued, as we saw above, with 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr.168

Marwān b. Muḥammad (r. 127-32/744-50) and the Fall of the Umayyads

Because the black banners of the 'Abbāsids fluttered first in the east, it is not surprising that the earliest opposition between pro-Umayyad and pro-'Abbāsid quṣṣāṣ occurred in Khurasān. The sources mention four quṣṣāṣ in this region, al-Qāsim b. Mujāshi', Jahm b. Ṣafwān, Muqātil b. Sulaymān and Muqātil b. Ḥayyān, each of whom played a role in the conflict between the two powers.

The 'Abbāsids used qaṣaṣ to their advantage from the beginning of their underground movement, their da'wa. Indeed, one of the initial twelve leaders of Abū Muslim's movement (his  $nuqab\bar{a}$ ') named al-Qāsim b. Mujāshi' this report to 'Abd al-Jabbār b. al-'Alā'. A second report in Fākihī connects the unidentified "Sufyān" to Muḥammad b. Abī 'Umar. According to Mizzī, the only "Sufyān" from whom 'Abd al-Jabbār and Muḥammad transmitted reports was Sufyān b. 'Uyayna. On 'Abd al-Jabbār, see Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 16:391. On Muḥammad, see Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 26:639.

<sup>166</sup> He is Muḥammad b. Yaḥyā b. Abī 'Umar al-'Adanī, and thus from Yemen; see Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 26:639–642.

<sup>167</sup> Fākihi, Akhbār, 2:339.

<sup>168</sup> See above, 240–241.

(d. 169/785) engaged in qaṣaṣ in support of the 'Abbāsid cause. Al-Qāsim was, by all accounts, a major player in Abū Muslim's movement, having acted on multiple occasions as prayer leader and judge of his forces. He thus seems to have been particularly astute as a religious authority. In addition to this, he was active as a soldier in Abū Muslim's military campaigns in 129-30/747-8. His involvement in qaṣaṣ was undoubtedly political in nature; it is reported that, in his qaṣaṣ after evening prayers, he recounted the virtues and rights to the leadership of the Banū Hāshim and the vices and tyranny of the Banū Umayya. Yet in spite of al-Qāsim's open support for the rebellion at its outset, the 'Abbāsid leadership eventually shunned him because of his support for the 'Albāsid', instead of the 'Abbāsids', right to the leadership of the community. 169

In light of the history of Umayyad use of <code>qaṣaṣ</code> and the 'Abbāsids' new found introduction to its value, it is not surprising that the two sides eventually utilized <code>quṣṣāṣ</code> face-to-face against each other; furthermore, it is not surprising that this occurred first in Khurasān. The two <code>quṣṣāṣ</code> who were most active in this struggle were Muqātil b. Sulaymān, in support of the Umayyads, and Jahm b. Ṣafwān, advocating for the 'Abbāsids. While each man became known to posterity through their other interests and associations, Muqātil as a Qur'ān commentator and Jahm as the ostensible eponym of the sect of the Jahmiyya, their interaction in Khurasān during the rise of the 'Abbāsids appears to have been largely politically driven.<sup>170</sup>

While the biographical dictionaries focusing on <code>hadīth</code> transmitters and other religious scholars only state that Muqātil and Jahm were antagonists and that they wrote works against each other, none of them offers any explicit reason for their mutual animosity, although they seem to imply that it was grounded in religious differences. They relate that Muqātil moved to Marw and held <code>qaṣaṣ</code> sessions in the city.<sup>171</sup> Jahm came in contact with Muqātil through these sessions in Marw, and the two wrote treatises against each other, based, presumably, on opposing religious ideologies—Muqātil espousing anthropomorphism and Jahm denying all divine attributes.<sup>172</sup> In other words, this

<sup>169</sup> See the Appendix # 100.

<sup>170</sup> On Muqātil as a Qur'ān commentator, see Chapter Two, 119–136. On Jahm as the alleged namesake of the Jahmiyya, see W.M. Watt, "Djahm b. Ṣafwān," and "Djahmiyya," *EI*2, 11:388. See also their biographies in the Appendix: Muqātil # 97 and Jahm # 84.

<sup>171</sup> Ibn 'Adī, Kāmil, 6:437; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 60:123; Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 9:641; idem, Mīzān, 6:505.

<sup>172</sup> Ibn Ḥibbān, Majrūḥīn, 3:15–16; Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 9:641. As Watt pointed out, there is no way of knowing if Jahm actually held the positions of the sect that came to be called by his name; see his "Djahm b. Ṣafwān," EI2, 2:388; "Djahmiyya," EI2, 2:388. See also J. van Ess, TG, 2:507–508.

account suggests that the conflict between them was purely religious in nature. Other reports, however, hint at the possibility that the antagonism between them was strongly political.

Ṭabarī's account of the two men's interaction in Khurasān offers an alternative reason for the opposition between them. He recorded that they were allied with competing political forces within Khurasān. Though it is not possible at present to trace, in definitive terms, their animosity towards each other wholly to the political tensions in the region, Ṭabarī's account certainly suggests that this was a major factor.

The only source, for instance, identifying Jahm as a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  was Ṭabarī who reported that he was the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  for the 'Abbāsid rebel al-Ḥārith b. Surayj (d. 128/746) who opposed the last Umayyad governor of Khurasān Naṣr b. Sayyār (d. 131/748).<sup>173</sup> On the other hand, Muqātil, as we have seen above, was identified as a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  by virtue of his sessions in the mosque in Marw—implying that his qasas were of a religious nature. Yet, Muqātil, like Jahm, was a major player in the hostility between Naṣr and al-Ḥārith with the two squaring off against each other in support of their respective leaders. Furthermore, it is at this juncture that the third  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  of Khurasān, Muqātil b. Ḥayyān, emerges into the foreground. Even though he, like his namesake, seems to have been identified as giving qasas in his capacity as a religious scholar, he was also heavily involved in the strife between Naṣr and al-Ḥārith.<sup>174</sup>

All of these men found themselves embroiled in the political movements of the time. The two Muqātils sided with the Umayyad governor Naṣr b. Sayyār, while Jahm supported the pro-'Abbāsid al-Ḥārith b. Surayj. When the two sides decided to open negotiations in order to stave off bloodshed, these men were selected as the representatives of their respective sides. In the first round of negotiations, the two Muqātils met al-Ḥārith's representatives, al-Mughīra b. Shu'ba al-Jahḍamī and Mu'ādh b. Jabala.¹75 When this summit failed to

<sup>173</sup> Țabarī, Tārīkh, 2:1918. On al-Ḥārith, see M.J. Kister, "al-Ḥārith b. Suraydj," *El*2, 3:223–234. On Naṣr, see C.E. Bosworth, "Naṣr b. Sayyār," *El*2, 7:1015–1016.

<sup>174</sup> On Muqātil b. Ḥayān, see the Appendix # 88.

Tabarī, Tārīkh, 2:1918. While Jahm was clearly a major player in al-Ḥārith's rebellion, al-Mughīra b. Shu'ba and Mu'ādh b. Jabala seem to have enjoyed comparable influence in al-Ḥārith's eye, since they were selected first to be his spokespersons. Consequently, Watt's claim that Jahm was the "intellectual protagonist" of the rebellion—a claim that John Alden Williams echoes—may be somewhat overstated; see Watt, "Djahm," El2, 2:338; Williams, The History of al-Ṭabarī Vol. XXVII: The 'Abbāsid Revolution (Albany, 1985), 29:68. It should be noted that al-Mughīra b. Shu'ba al-Jahḍamī is not the same as the famous Companion of the Prophet al-Mughīra b. Shu'ba al-Thaqafī; on the latter, see H. Lammens, "al-Mughīra b. Shu'ba," El2, 7:347.

reach a solution, Nașr sent Muqātil b. Ḥayyan once again, while al-Ḥārith selected Jahm.<sup>176</sup>

According to Ṭabarī's account, Jahm proved to be a formidable negotiator, securing a judgment that Naṣr relinquish power and that the government be agreed upon by a council; Naṣr rejected this decision. Jahm then returned to al-Ḥārith's camp where he "gave qaṣaṣ in his tent... while al-Ḥārith continued to oppose Naṣr." Obviously, Jahm's qaṣaṣ was part of al-Ḥārith's propaganda war against Naṣr, and, as we have seen, this utilization of qaṣaṣ for martial purposes enjoyed a long history. Stiff consequences for a  $q\bar{aṣ}s$  who gave politically inflammatory statements also had a long history. Needless to say, then, when al-Ḥārith's rebellion was eventually quelled, Jahm was executed, as had been  $quṣṣ\bar{aṣ}$  of previous rebellions, most notably those of Ibn al-Ash'ath's rebellion in Iraq.

The developments in the eastern regions of Khurasān paralleled those in Iraq. In 132/750, the  $q\bar{a}ss$  and  $murji\tilde{c}$  'Umar b. Dharr performed the same function for Yazīd b. 'Umar b. Hubayra, the last Umayyad governor of Wāsiṭ, that his Khurasānī counterparts did for their leaders: he gave qasas in order to incite the people in Wāsiṭ against the rising 'Abbāsids.¹78 As a result, when Ibn Hubayra was killed and the region fell into 'Abbāsid hands, 'Umar b. Dharr was one of three opponents of the 'Abbāsids to be singled out for execution.¹79 Only through the intercession of Ziyād b. 'Ubayd Allāh, a governor of Abū Ja'far Manṣūr in Iraq, was 'Umar's life spared.¹80 A fellow pro-Umayyad  $murji\tilde{c}$ , Khālid b. Salama, did not fare as well and was executed. While his role was comparable to that of 'Umar b. Dharr's, his alleged hatred of 'Alī, a position hinting at the diversity of opinions encapsulated in  $irja\tilde{c}$ ', may not have helped him.¹81

Elsewhere in Iraq, pro-'Alid  $quss\bar{a}s$  appear to have been emboldened by the political changes. A virulent Kufan opponent of the Umayyads was Sālim b. Abī Ḥafṣa (d.c. 140/757), a staunch supporter of 'Alī who disparaged 'Uthmān, Abū Bakr, and 'Umar.¹8² The pro-Umayyad  $q\bar{a}ss$  'Umar b. Dharr told Sālim that his

<sup>176</sup> Țabarī, Tārīkh, 2:1919.

<sup>177</sup> Ibid.

<sup>178</sup> Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 16:94; Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 8:405.

<sup>179</sup> Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 3:69; Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 8:405. Ṭabarī's and Dhahabī's lists of the three who were not granted safety by the 'Abbasids differ. Ṭabarī lists 'Umar b. Dharr, Khālid b. Salama and al-Ḥakam b. 'Abd al-Malik b. Bishr; Dhahabī replaces al-Ḥakam with al-'Awwām b. Ḥawshab.

<sup>180</sup> Tabarī, Tārīkh, 3:69; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 16:94.

<sup>181</sup> Țabarī, Tārīkh, 3:69-70; Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 8:405.

<sup>182</sup> Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:675; 'Uqaylī, Du'afā', 2:153.

support for the killing of 'Uthmān made him complicit in his murder.¹8³ When Kufa was still under Umayyad control, Sālim slyly integrated his dislike for the first caliphs in his <code>qaṣaṣ</code>. He began his <code>qaṣaṣ</code> by recounting the admirable traits (<code>faḍāʾil</code>) of Abū Bakr and 'Umar and then segued to his topic of primary interest—the virtues (<code>manāqib</code>) of 'Alī. When he arrived at this transition point, Sufyān b. 'Uyayna warned those around him of Sālim's sinister (even if camouflaged) intentions saying, "Be wary of him because he is heading towards what he really wants (<code>aḥdharūhu fa-innahu yurīd mā yurīd</code>)." His anti-Umayyad passions were released fully during the pilgrimage in the year 132/750, when he allegedly entered Mecca gloatingly exclaiming: "Here I am, here I am, the destroyer of the Banū Umayya! Here I am (<code>labbayka</code>, <code>labbayka</code>, <code>muhlik Banī Umayya</code>, <code>labbayka</code>)!" Here I am (<code>labbayka</code>, <code>labbayka</code>)!" Here I am

Not surprisingly, Kufa was home to other pro-'Alid qussas, such as Yūnus b. Khabbāb (d.c. first half of 2nd century/8th century), who likewise vilified 'Uthmān.'<sup>186</sup> Even in his  $had\bar{\iota}th$  transmission, he did not suppress his anti-'Uthmānī sentiments. The Basran 'Abbād b. 'Abbād al-Muhallabī (d. 181/797)<sup>187</sup> stated:

I went to Yūnus b. Khabbāb and asked him about the <code>hadīth</code> of the torments of the grave. So he related it to me saying, "Here is a word that the al-Nāṣibiyya hide." I said, "What is it?" He said, "He will be asked in his grave: "Who is your protector?" If he says, "Alī," then he is saved." I said, "By God, I never heard this." He said, "Where are you from?" I said, "From the people of Baṣra." He said, "You are a vile 'Uthmānī!" 188

One of the last Syrian qussas of the Umayyad period was 'Uthmān b. Abī al-'Ātika (d.c. 155/772).¹89 In spite of having a reputation as a weak  $had\bar{u}th$  transmitter, 'Uthmān was generally considered a reputable scholar and was identified as a teacher (mu'allim), Qur'ān reciter and  $q\bar{a}ss$  in Damascus. He also

<sup>183</sup> Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 10:136.

<sup>184</sup> Ibid.

<sup>185</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:455. See also Ibn Ma'īn, Tārīkh, 3:469; 'Uqaylī, Du'afā', 2:152–153; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 10:136; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:675.

<sup>186</sup> Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:468–469. 'Uqaylī said he was a Rāfiḍī; see his Du'afā', 4:458.

<sup>187</sup> Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:291, 329.

<sup>188</sup> Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:469. The Nāṣibiyya were those who denied the legitimacy of 'Alī's caliphate; see Ibn Taymiyya, Manhāj al-sunna al-nabawiyya, ed. Muḥammad Rashād Sālim (Riyadh, 1986), 2:607–609. The term was also used more generally for the Sunnīs in some Shī'ī polemical literature.

<sup>189</sup> See the Appendix # 102.

appears to have maintained the general trend among the Syrian qussas of support for the Umayyads, having held an official position as the qass of the jund (administrative/military district) of Damascus. Although it is unclear precisely what such a position entailed, it is nonetheless safe to assume that a position of this type was only granted to a supporter of the administration.

Sulaymān, however, attempted to downplay the 'Abbāṣids' clear concern about his allegiance. When they removed him, he pled his case, saying:

Why is that you have removed me since I am [only] a qāṣṣ? If you had told me, "Add this to your qaṣaṣ," I would have added it. If you told me, "Shorten [them]," I would have shortened [them]. So you did not need to remove me. (mā la-kum taʿzilūnī inna-mā anā qāṣṣ, fa-in qultum lī zidd fī qaṣaṣika ziddtu. wa-in qultum qaṣṣar qaṣṣartufa-mā la-kum taʿzilūnanī). 194

This "tongue-in-cheek" response to his dismissal shows that he understood qaṣaṣ to be politically sensitive. Furthermore, the 'Abbāsids' insistence on removing him reveals that the anxiety surrounding qaṣaṣ was not assuageable by simply "adding" to it or "shortening" it; their use of quṣṣāṣ and experience with quṣṣāṣ in the east appears to have solidified that lesson.

The Quṣṣāṣ under the Umayyads

Clearly, the  $quss\bar{a}s$  played an important role religiously and politically throughout the Umayyad period, among both the Umayyads themselves as well as their

<sup>190</sup> See the Appendix # 99.

<sup>191</sup> Fasawī, Ma'rifa, 2:436.

<sup>192</sup> Ibid.

<sup>193</sup> Fasawī, Ma'rifa, 2:436.

<sup>194</sup> Ibid. 'Athamina, "Qaşaş," 73-74.

opponents. The sources show both the variety of roles and the diversity of allegiances in a number of ways, though the most distinct is certainly by describing a particular man as "the  $q\bar{a}ss$  of" a certain group of people, i.e. "the common folk (al-'āmma)" or "the community (al-jamā'a)," or a certain leader, i.e. "Ibn al-Zubayr" or "Abd al-Malik b. Marwan." Even here, however, precise meanings are elusive. When the sources identify a  $q\bar{a}ss$  with a particular leader, using the phrase "the  $q\bar{a}ss$  of so-and so," the type of relationship expressed by the designation can only be determined based upon the associations between the two. Some appear to have been martial and/or ideological spokespeople for certain leaders, as in the case of a number of martial gussās and, specifically, as in the case 'Abd Allāh b. Yazīd, "the qāṣṣ of Maslama b. 'Abd al-Malik," while others seem to have been the personal  $q\bar{a}ss$  of the ruler or  $q\bar{a}ss$  of the court, as Ibn Abī 'Uyayna appears to have been for Sulayman b. 'Abd al-Malik or Muḥammad b. Qays for 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz. For others like 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr who was "the  $q\bar{a}ss$  of Ibn al-Zubayr" and 'Ā'idh Allāh al-Mujāshi'ī who was "the  $q\bar{a}ss$  of 'Abd al-Malik b. Marwan," exactly what position they held or why they were described in this way is unclear.

 276 CHAPTER 5

devoid of political associations. Therefore, while the phrases " $q\bar{a}$ , s, al-' $\bar{a}$ mma (or qa, s, al-' $\bar{a}$ mma) and " $q\bar{a}$ , s, al-jam $\bar{a}$ 'a" usually refer to a religious  $q\bar{a}$ , s, in a specific locale, it remains possible that even these expressions carried with them political undertones.

Undoubtedly, the qussas's influence as both official appointees and as spiritual/religious advisors to the caliphs was be felt across the empire, most notably in the caliphates of Muʻāwiya b. Abī Sufyān, 'Abd al-Malik b. Marwān and 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz. A caveat, however, is necessary here. Even though many qussas of the Umayyad period held various positions in both the Umayyad administration and in opposition circles, some, well-known qussas, such as Bilāl b. Saʻd in Syria, 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. al-Qāsim in Mecca, Yaʻqūb b. Mujāhid in Medina, Thābit al-Bunānī, Maṭar al-Warrāq, al-Faḍl b. 'Isā and Mūsā b. Sayyār in Basra, as well as other lesser-known qussas, appear to have remained essentially free from any close ties to the political movements of the day. <sup>195</sup> Therefore, while this chapter has shown that the qussas, were indeed valuable resources for the Umayyad caliphates and to their opponents, it must be remembered that many of them were primarily men of religion who, when acting specifically as qussas, were engaged, more often than not, solely in religious education.

This is just a representative list. I have tried to include in the biographies of the qussas in the Appendix the various affiliations that each qas maintained, both with other religious disciplines and with the Umayyad administration. Therefore, by reviewing the Appendix, the reader should be able to find which of the qussas seem to have had political ties, even if those ties were minimal.

Conclusion

The qussas of early Islam were a diverse group with varied interests; this has been known in modern scholarship since the research of Ignaz Goldziher who noted their role in both religious and military domains. Furthermore, while the qass who engaged in religious instruction was generally portrayed by Goldziher, and later writers on the qussas, in a negative light, it was still acknowledged that not all qussas were disreputable—a sentiment drawn directly from the Islamic sources, particularly Ibn al-Jawzī's Kitasas al-qussas al-mudhakkirān. However, heretofore, the exact nature of this diversity and the precise themes of their discourses were unclear.

The foregoing analysis has refined many points proposed by earlier scholarship, although it has admittedly not resolved all problems of the topic. Among the most salient of these problems is the fluidity of the meaning of the term qassa and the existence in the Islamic sources of a number of synonyms for religious statements, such as wa'z, dhikr, and  $had\bar{\iota}th$ . In many cases, it is still unclear how the authors of the Islamic sources distinguished between these terms. As a result, firm categorizations remain, at times, ellusive. This is not to suggest, however, that the identification and classification of qussas is categorically impossible. To a large extent, the challenges noted above are unavoidable in the first systematic and thorough study of the topic. I hope that this research has laid the groundwork for further scholarship on the topic. Most importantly the current study has made a broad contribution that clarifies a number of aspects of this very important and tricky subject of early Islamic history and thought.

First, the Islamic sources reveal, rather definitively, that the early Islamic  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  was not simply a "storyteller," at least not according to the meaning of the term as one who relates a narrative. The  $quss\bar{s}s$ , in fact, addressed a number of topics of religious importance and used various methods when doing so. They made statements about Qur'ān recitation and commentary, issued legal rulings, transmitted  $had\bar{u}th$ , and engaged in other forms of religious education, including the telling of narratives on religious topics. Some of this has certainly been long established. However, until now, the textual sources for the sayings of the early  $quss\bar{a}s$  were limited. These sources have revealed a degree of diversity in the themes of the  $quss\bar{a}s$  hitherto unknown.

Moreover, it is evident that the Islamic  $q\bar{a}ss$  was not primarily a "storyteller" since other scholars of early Islam, who themselves were known for having related narratives, such as Salmān al-Fārisī (d.c. 36/656),¹ 'Abd Allāh b. Salām (d. 43/663-4)² and Ismāʿīl b. 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Suddī (d. 127/745),³ to name only a few, are never identified by the sources as  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ , in spite of the fact that their religious interests and those of the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$  overlap, especially in the area of Qurʾān commentary and the qiṣaṣ al-anbiyāʾ. If a  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  was someone who told stories, we expect to find these men listed among their ranks. Conversely, we also expect to find others, possibly the martial  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ , to have not been identified as  $quṣṣ\bar{a}ṣ$ . However, while a  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  may not have always told stories for religious education, this does not imply that narratives, often in the form of  $asb\bar{a}b$  al- $nuz\bar{u}l$ , were not a major component of the religious disciplines, such as  $had\bar{u}th$  and, particularly, Qurʾān commentary. It does suggest, though, that the narrative framework of much of the commentary tradition, for example, is a product of the scholarly community in general and, therefore, is not to be placed uncritically or uniformly on the shoulders of the  $quṣṣ\bar{a}s$ .

278 CHAPTER 6

Furthermore, the use of the term qassa and  $q\bar{a}ss$  for a military man who exhorts the soldiers in battles also indicates that the  $q\bar{a}ss$  was not purely a "storyteller." While this exhortation was often achieved through the use of religious terminology, it was also the case that qassas meant instruction in military tactics alone, and therefore did not have to have religious connotations.

Secondly, the qussās were apparently not unreliable fabricators of traditions. This is not to imply that their traditions are all historical; the determination of historicity can only be established with more work on the individual traditions. They do not seem, however, to have been more prone to fabrications than other scholars of the early period. This deduction stems from the overwhelmingly positive reputation of the qussās in the early period. If the qussās were viewed by and large as fabricators then we expect this to be reflected in the biographical information on them. As I have shown in Chapter Two, the biographical information suggests the opposite. It seems then that the pervasive notion that the qussās were second-rate scholars—a notion found in medieval Islamic sources and modern studies alike-be attributed to other factors. My impression is that the progressive categorization of the disciplines of Islamic thought, meaning the grouping of scholars into categories such as of hadīth scholars, Qur'ān interpreters, legal scholars, etc., contributed to the growing criticism of the quṣṣāṣ as a class. The evolving restrictions placed on laxity in hadīth transmission, or in the transmission of stories of the prophets, also played a role in the developing reputation of the qussās. For example, as

<sup>1</sup> G. Levi Della Vida, "Salmān al-Fārisī," EI2, 12:701-702.

<sup>2</sup> J. Horovitz, "Abd Allāh b. Salām," EI2, 1:52.

<sup>3</sup> G.H.A. Juynboll, "al-Suddī," EI2, 9:762.

CONCLUSION 279

Indeed, the Islamic sources, in spite of a number of traditions criticizing the qussās, indicate that a significant majority of the qussās through the end of the Umayyad period, more than 70% of them, were respectable religious scholars with over two-thirds of them praised for their Qur'an recitation, Qur'an commentary, hadīth-transmission and/or legal knowledge (figh). Moreover, despite reports claiming that qaṣaṣ was a negative innovation (bidʿa), it was a practice that seemingly originated at the very beginning of the emergence of the community, if not with the Prophet himself. Regardless of the questions of authenticity surrounding these reports alleging the Prophet gave qaşaş, their existence indicates that there was a competing narrative challenging the idea that the qussās were purveyors of bid'a and were, thus, suspect as scholars. In addition, the involvement of a number of qussās in the theological debates of the period, specifically on the issue of qadar (see Chapter One), may have exacerbated the acrimony leveled against them; given that a number of scholars in the community also engaged in this debate so the extent of its influence in challenging the reputation of the quṣṣāṣ as a whole must be evaluated cautiously.

Thirdly, in spite of the generally solid reputation of the majority of the early quspasas, the seeds for the eventual repudiation of the quspasas as a class sprouted during the Umayyad period. We have already encountered some of these trends, specifically those describing qasas as an innovation and the possibility of theological issues having impacted their reputations. However, the criticism of the quspasas was not based solely on the perception that they were innovators and second-rate scholars; it seems to have been a product of a number of other factors including, while not exclusive to, dubious practices exercised in their sessions, the public nature of their pronouncements and their divisive political affiliations.

According to some reports, the quspass were censured for what was perceived to be their negative influence on Islamic society, exemplified in their personal conduct as well as the lack of proper comportment in their sessions. This was indicated by the pride qaspas fostered in the qaspas, the unruliness, especially in terms of volume, of qaspass sessions and the breaking down of gender barriers by allowing men and women to participate in the same sessions. Nevertheless, it was precisely the public nature of qaspass that made it such an important, and controversial, phenomenon in the community. The public nature of qaṣaṣ presumed that the  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ$  possess certain public speaking skills. He, therefore, was not only expected to possess religious knowledge ('ilm), he was also supposed to be an eloquent speaker, characterized by his vocal mechanics ( $lis\bar{a}n$ ) and oratorical skills ( $bay\bar{a}n$ ).

280 CHAPTER 6

It must be noted here that while the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  was certainly a "public" figure, he was not necessarily a "popular" figure. In modern research, the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  has often been identified as a "popular preacher" or as a "free preacher." This description intends to convey the idea that the  $qus\bar{s}s\bar{s}$  were untrained, if not illegitimate, religious scholars who purportedly flitted around beyond the domain of some apparently established circle of official or orthodox scholars. In this way, the  $qus\bar{s}s\bar{s}$  have often been placed in opposition to the "scholars" of the community and, in later eras, in opposition to the  $had\bar{u}th$  scholars, more specifically. Eventually they became the foil for the high culture of  $had\bar{u}th$  study; the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  was portrayed as the antithesis of those who came to be known as  $had\bar{u}th$  scholars. This low-level reputation contributed to the eventual denigration of the  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  as a mere "popular" preacher or teacher whose words were nothing more than fabrications and fancies.

Yet, the description of the early Islamic  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$  as a "popular preacher" seems untenable when applied to the  $quss\bar{a}s$  who lived through the end of the Umayyad period. The sound reputation of many of them confirms that they were in fact part of the orthodox religious establishment. Therefore, if the terms "popular" or "free" are meant to carry a negative image, as they most often do in modern studies on the  $quss\bar{a}s$ , even if slightly, then they do not seem to apply to the  $quss\bar{a}s$  of early Islam.

In addition, the quṣṣāṣ have often been identified as "popular preachers" because it was believed that their target audience was the uneducated populace, "the masses." This perception is also not entirely accurate, in part, because the early Islamic quṣṣāṣ held their sessions for a variety of audiences in an assortment of venues. They held sessions for the public outside of the mosque, as in the case of Abū Idrīs al-Khawlānī entertaining questions from the audience while seated on the steps of the mosque in Damascus;<sup>4</sup> for smaller groups in sessions inside a mosque, apparently the most common practice of the Umayyad period;<sup>5</sup> for groups in homes, as did Zurāra b. Awfā and suggests that the audience was even smaller than the audience in the mosque;<sup>6</sup> and, finally, even for individuals, as in the case of 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr giving qaṣaṣ

<sup>4</sup> See the Appendix # 31.

<sup>5</sup> See the discussion in Chapter Three.

<sup>6</sup> See the Appendix # 39.

CONCLUSION 281

to Ibn 'Umar.<sup>7</sup> This variety of locations and range in the number of listeners who attended their sessions shows that the early  $q\bar{a}ss$  did not target solely the "masses."

Furthermore, the biographical sketches of the quṣṣāṣ suggest that they did not provide religious instruction to only the uneducated populace. Since more than two-thirds of the quṣṣāṣ were considered trustworthy ḥadīth transmitters, the sources suggest that part of their pedagogy was learning ḥadīth from their teachers and transmitting in sessions ḥadīth to their students.<sup>8</sup> Even though these sessions were conducted in a number of formats, they were not necessarily open to the uneducated masses. And while it may be true that ḥadīth sessions differed from qaṣaṣ sessions, it must be remembered that we do have examples of the transmission of Prophetic ḥadīth in qaṣaṣ sessions, as noted in Chapter One. Also, even though the type of instruction insinuated in the biographical dictionaries is that of ḥadīth transmission and not of qaṣaṣ, the trustworthy scholarly circles with which many of the early Islamic quṣṣāṣ affiliated themselves suggests that they not be viewed pejoratively as "popular preachers;" in so doing one may unintentionally denigrate an otherwise reputable scholar listed among the quṣṣāṣ of the early period.

<sup>7</sup> See the Appendix # 25.

<sup>8</sup> See the biographical sketches in the Appendix.

<sup>9</sup> See their biographies in the Appendix.

<sup>10</sup> A blind qāṣṣ exhorted the supporters of al-Ḥusayn b. 'Alī's (ṣāḥib Fakhkh) revolt against the caliph al-Ḥādī in 169/785 and was killed in battle; see Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 3:560. Even though this is the only explicit example of the use of qaṣaṣ in political opposition movements evaluation, it appears, therefore, that the term qasas eventually fell out of use for both martial and religio-political contexts, though this point warrants further investigation.

282 CHAPTER 6

Fourthly, it is the public nature of qa$a$ that seems to set it apart from other teaching sessions. Even though some early qu$s$a$ related qa$a$ to small numbers, the  $q\bar{a}$s$$  was still essentially a public figure and, therefore, should possess the public speaking skills mentioned above. The use of the term qa$s$a in a military context is particularly relevant in this regard. Since both religious exhortation (in many forms) and military exhortation are described as qa$a$a$, it appears that the ascription of the term qa$s$a to an act of public speech depended as much, if not more so, on oratorical factors than on the content of the statements made. In this regard, qa$a$a was similar to khataba ("oration") though qa$a$ was less formal, as we have mentioned above, and therefore, the  $q\bar{a}$a$$  preached his message in a number of environments.

In this regard, <code>qaṣaṣ</code> was also comparable to two other forms of public religious instruction, <code>wa'z</code> and <code>dhikr</code>, both enjoying the same flexibility in terms of their application, yet they seem to have differed from <code>qaṣaṣ</code> in content and objective. Once again, the use of the term <code>qaṣaṣ</code> in a martial context may help in distinguishing between these forms of instruction, at least as they apply to the early period. <code>Wa'z</code> and <code>dhikr</code>, for example, appear to have been essentially religious in their content and objective. The <code>wā'iz</code> admonished his listeners on religious topics, such as death and the afterlife, among many others, as did the <code>mudhakkir</code>, "the reminder." These terms, like <code>qaṣaṣ</code>, were used to describe the action of encouraging greater piety in the listener by conveying religious truth. Yet they do not seem to have been used for pronouncements in martial contexts, unlike <code>qaṣaṣ</code>. Therefore, while <code>qaṣaṣ</code> was similar in many and sundry ways to <code>khaṭāba</code>, <code>wa'z</code> and <code>dhikr</code>, the Islamic sources still distinguish between the four, though at times, as in the example of Ibn al-Jawzī's <code>Kitāb al-quṣṣāṣ wa-l-mudhakkirīn</code>, the distinction appears minimal.

Indeed, the feature that seems to distinguish qasas from other public pronouncements and that connected all of its varied expressions, be they religious, martial or religio-political, was exhortation. The objective of the early Islamic  $q\bar{a}$ ss was not simply to educate, it was to motivate; the early Islamic  $q\bar{a}$ ss was, therefore, what today is described as a "preacher," a term incorporating a broad during the 'Abbāsid period, the 'Abbāsids certainly recognized the potential political danger when a  $q\bar{a}s\bar{s}$ , or others, gathered people around them. Thus, we read on two other occasions that they forbade people from congregating with the  $quss\bar{s}s$  or other public figures in fear that anti-government opposition would arise out of these meetings; see Ṭabarī,  $T\bar{a}r\bar{\imath}kh$ , 3:2131, 2165.

CONCLUSION 283

array of subject material—one can "preach" a religious sermon, "preach" political ideology and "preach" support for the military—and can be exercised in a variety of situations.

The largely public role of the qussās, therefore, seems to have been an important factor in the growing tension between the spoken and written word in early Islam. It appears that the gussās were especially adept at the spoken word and that their skills in this regard extended into the medieval period, for even when they were rebuked for their content their effectiveness on their hearers was beyond doubt. Indeed, it was the impact of the spoken word compounded by the seemingly endless pool of potential source-material for the  $q\bar{a}ss$  that appears to have contributed to their eventual repudiation. This does not mean that public pronouncements became less important with the passage of time. This is certainly not the case as can be attested by traditions claiming that Ibn al-Jawzī's sermons were attended by tens of thousands of people. It may indicate, however, that the parameters for the source material for these later public pronouncements, be they identified as khaṭāba, wa'z or qaşaş was more restricted than in the Umayyad period. It seems likely that the growing influence of the ḥadīth scholars was an important impetus in this transition. Indeed, the quṣṣāṣ were eventually pitted by many scholars—both medieval Islamic scholars and their modern successors—as the anti-thesis of these orthodox hadīth scholars, consigning an often honorable past to a mere distant memory.

Biographical Sketches of the Quṣṣāṣ of Early Islam

The following is an appendix of qussās who either died before or were engaged in qasas before the year 132/750. They have been arranged generally according to their death dates, except in the event that the precise time when they engaged in qasas was determined. The latter condition dictated, for example, that the qussās during the conquest of Syria, like Abū Sufyān (d. 32/653), number 7, and 'Amr b. al-'Āṣ (d.c. 42/663), number 8, be listed according to the conquests and not their death dates. Likewise, those cases for which death dates were unknown have been listed based upon information within their biographies. For some, death dates correspond to a range determined by the reign of a caliph or governmental official, such as Ibn Abī 'Uyayna (no known death date), number 45, who was allegedly the qāṣṣ of the caliph Sulaymān b. 'Abd al-Malik (r. 96-9/715-7). In the case of Nawf b. Fadala, number 36, who died 90-100/708-18, or Bilāl b. Sa'd, number 60, who reportedly died in the caliphate of Hishām b. 'Abd al-Malik (r. 105–25/724–43), I have listed them at the terminus a qou. Some quṣṣāṣ are included even if they died after 132/750 since their involvement in qaşaş was verified as having occurred prior to 132/750, as is the case of al-Qāsim b. Mujāshi', number 100, who died in 169/785 after having been a pro-'Abāssid  $q\bar{a}$ şş in Khurāsān at the time of the downfall of the Umayyads. For the qussās whose death dates are unknown and for whom there are no definitive historical markers to date them, I have placed them according to an approximate median between the dates of those from whom they transmitted hadīth and those who transmitted hadīth from them. The region with which the  $q\bar{a}ss$  was affiliated follows each entry. When I was able to identify the region where the person gave qaṣaṣ, he was connected to that area even if he was more generally affiliated with another region. This was the case for 'Amr b. al-'Ās, for example, while most often associated with Egypt, was identified as giving qaṣaṣ in Syria. The names with a star (\*) after the death date are those who were considered by the sources to have been reputable ḥadīth transmitters. Those with an (a) were identified as having ascetic tendencies.

1. The Prophet Muḥammad (d. 11/632). The Prophet reportedly "gave qaṣaṣ" while standing at the pulpit in the mosque (Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 14:311–2, 45:483; Ibn Abī 'Āṣim, Sunna, 2:472; Nasā'ī, Sunan, 6:478; Ṭabarī, Tafsīr, 27:146–7; Tabarānī, al-Mu'jam al-kabīr, 3:241; Ṭaḥāwī, Sharḥ, 10:167; al-Khaṭīb al-Tabrīzī, Mishkāt, 2:734; Ibn Kathir, Tafsīr, 4:280) and while seated and surrounded by listeners (Ibn Abī Shayba, Muṣannaf, 5:289; Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 26:86–8; Ibn Mājah, Sunan,

2:1295). Yaʻqūbī gives a report according to which al-Ḥasan b. ʻAlī b. Abī Ṭālib identified the Prophet as a  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ  $(T\bar{a}r\bar{i}kh, 2:227-8)$ . Other traditions indicate that he "gave qaṣaṣ" of the earlier prophets (Bukhārī, Ṣaḥīḥ, 3:1260; 6:2485; Muslim, Ṣaḥīḥ, 3:1344; Nasāʾī, Sunan, 3:472-3; Ibn Kathīr, Bidāya, 2:48).

- 2. 'Abd Allāh b. Rawāḥa (d. 8/629) *—Medinan. He was an early and highly-respected Companion of the Prophet who died at the battle of Mu'ta in 8/629. Abū Ṭālib al-Makkī gave a report stating that he summoned the Companions of the Prophet to his teaching sessions where he reminded them of the nature of God, His unity, and the hereafter (Qūt, 2:204). Makkī also alleged that when the Prophet stopped teaching and left a session, Ibn Rawāḥa assumed the Prophet's position and pick up from where the Prophet had left off (Qūt, 2:204). Al-Makkī identified these sessions as dhikr sessions, while Ibn al-Jawzī described them as qaṣaṣ (Quṣṣāṣ, 22). The Prophet also praised him for his abilities as a poet (A. Schaade, "Abd Allāh b. Rawāḥa," EI2, 1:50).
- 3. Abū Bakr al-Ṣiddīq (d. 13/634) *—Medinan. He gave qaṣaṣ in which he related "the wisdom of the Arabs" from the semi-legendary pre-Islamic poet/orator Quss b. Sā'ida al-Iyādī (Ibn Qutayba, Maʿārif, 1:61). See also W. Montgomery Watt, "Abū Bakr," *EI*2, 1:109–11.
- 4. Saʿīd b. Zayd (d. 15/636)—Syrian. He participated in the conquests of Syria where he gave qaṣaṣ to the soldiers in battle (Azdī, Futūh, 181).
- 5. Abū 'Ubayda b. al-Jarrāḥ (d. 18/639) *—Syrian. His full name is 'Āmir b. 'Abd Allāh b. al-Jarrāḥ. He was a distinguished Companion of the Prophet who gave qaṣaṣ at the battle of al-Yarmūk (Azdī, Futūḥ, 221). 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb later appointed him governor over Syria (H.A.R. Gibb, "Abū 'Ubayda b. al-Jarrāḥ," EI2, 1:58–9).
- 6. Muʻādh b. Jabal (d. 18/639) *—Syrian. He was one of the most renowned figures of early Islam. Identified by Ibn 'Umar as one of the two wisest men of the Islamic community (the other being Abū al-Dardā), Muʻādh was respected as a Qur'ān reciter, judge, and fighter. During the lifetime of the Prophet, he passed down legal rulings in Medina and was sent to Yemen as a judge. After the death of the Prophet, he returned to Mecca and was eventually sent to Syria where he taught in the mosques of Damascus and Ḥimṣ. He died there of the great plague of Emmaus ('Amwās); (Ibn Saʻd, Ṭabaqāt, 2:299–302; 3:541–4; Ibn 'Abd al-Barr, Istī'āb, 3:1404–6; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:97). In spite of the many teaching positions he held, he was identified as a qāṣṣ only by virtue of his qaṣaṣ on the battlefield during the conquest of Syria (Azdī, Futūḥ, 323–4; Kalāʿī, Iktifaʾ, 3:203).
- 7. Abū Sufyān b. Ḥarb b. Umayya (d. 32/653) *—Syrian. He was the notorious Qurashī opponent of the Prophet and father of the first Umayyad caliph, Muʻāwiya b. Abī Sufyān. After accepting Islam, he participated in the conquest of Syria where he gave qaṣaṣ at the battle of al-Yarmūk (Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 1:2095; Azdī, Futūḥ, 325). See also, W. Montgomery Watt, "Abū Sufyān," *EI*2, 1:151.

- 8. 'Amr b. al-'Āṣ—(d.c. 42/663) *—Syrian. This famous Muslim general and governor of Egypt was instrumental in leading the conquests of Syria and Egypt. During the conquests of Syria, he acted as a qāṣṣ on the battlefield (Azdī, Futūḥ, 324). See also A.J. Wensinck, "Amr b. al-'Āṣ," *EI*2, 1:451.
- 9. Ka'b al-Aḥbar (d. 32/653)—Syrian. He was a Yemeni Jew who converted to Islam during the caliphate of either Abū Bakr or 'Umar. He joined the conquests, fighting alongside Mu'āwiya b. Abī Sufyān, Abū Dharr al-Ghifārī and Abū al-Dardā' in Cyprus (Balādhurī, Futūḥ, 154). He settled in Syria and is mostly connected to Ḥimṣ. His name is most often associated, correctly or not, with the introduction of Jewish traditions, isrāʾīliyyāt, into Islam, and he can be found throughout the tafsīr and qiṣaṣ al-anbiyā' literature. He may be the most recognized qāṣṣ of the first centuries of Islam, and references to him as a qāṣṣ are legion. One of the most widely known reports identifying him as a qāṣṣ is that restricting qaṣaṣ to one of three types of people, the amīr, the one appointed by the amīr (ma'mūr) or the hypocrite (murā'); see Chapter Four. See also Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 29:587; Ibn Shabba, Tārīkh, 1:10; Abū Nuʿaym, Maʿrifa, 6:3154; Bayhaqī, Shuʿab, 6:223; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 34:38; Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 28–9; Ibn al-Athīr, Usd al-ghāba, 6:458; Ibshīhī, Mustaṭraf, 1:225; Suyūṭī, Taḥdhūr, 173–4.
- Abū al-Dardā' (d. 32/653) * a—Syrian. His name is 'Uwaymir b. Zayd/Mālik. He 10. accepted Islam after 'Abd Allāh b. Rawāḥa, his eventual "brother (in the faith)" and fellow qāṣṣ, destroyed his idols (Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:396). He became one of the most important and well-known Companions of the Prophet. He participated in many battles, having fought alongside the Prophet (Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:396), alongside Abū Dharr al-Ghifārī and Ka'b al-Aḥbār in the conquest of Cyprus (Balādhurī, Futūh, 154) and in the conquest of Syria where he gave gasas to the soldiery during the battle of al-Yarmūk (Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 47:93). His abilities as a scholar and leader in the community are reflected in his alleged participation in the compilation of the Qur'an and in his being selected by 'Umar b. al-Khattāb to teach Qur'ān in Syria in response to the request of Yazīd b. Abī Sufyān. While in Syria, he acted as Mu'āwiya's judge and, when the governor was absent from the region, as his khalīfa ("deputy"); (Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 49:139). His fame as a religious and military figure was complemented by his renown as an ascetic. On him, see Ibn Sa'd, Tabaqāt, 9:395-7; Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-Islām, 7:257; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:340-1; A. Jeffrey, "Abū al-Dardā'," EI2, 1:113-4.
- 11. 'Abd Allāh b. Mas'ūd (d. 32/653) *—Syrian. He was a revered Companion of the Prophet, was one of the first to accept Islam and was renowned for his Qur'ān recitation. He served as 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb's governor in Kufa where he was also in charge of judging and the treasury. He gave qaṣaṣ in Damascus on the steps of the mosque (Umayyad mosque) every Monday and Thursday (Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 33:180; Abū Nu'aym, Ḥilya 1:188). See also, J.C. Vadet, "Ibn Mas'ūd," *EI*2, 3:873–5.

Abū Dharr al-Ghifārī (d. 32/653) * a—Syrian. An early convert, Abū Dharr was 12. one of the leading and most beloved Companions of the Prophet (Ibn Sa'd, Tabagāt, 4:210; Ibn 'Abd al-Barr, Istī'āb, 4:1653; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 33:294-7). The only reference to him giving qasas is in the late medieval source Bihār al-anwār by al-Majlisī (d. 1110/1698); (Bihār al-anwār, 22:395). According to this text, Abū Dharr delivered his qissa in Syria. In it, he allegedly challenged the legitimacy of the leadership of Mu'āwiya and 'Uthmān arguing that they had done wicked deeds known to all. The report claims that it was for this reason that 'Uthman banished him to al-Rabadha where he died in 32/653. According to other reports, Abū Dharr rebuked Mu'āwiya specifically for seizing public funds (Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 4:212; Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 1:2858). In response, Muʿāwiya forbade people from sitting in his sessions (Ibn Sa'd, Tabagāt, 4:215) and wrote to 'Uthmān accusing Abū Dharr of corrupting the people of Syria (Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 4:212). 'Uthmān then exiled him to al-Rabadha (Ibn Qutayba, Ma'ārif, 253; Khalīfa, Tārīkh, 97; Ibn Sa'd, Tabagāt, 4:212–3, 219–21; Ibn 'Abd al-Barr, Istī'āb, 4:1656; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 33:298; Ibn Hajar, Tahdhīb, 4:519). See also, J. Robson, "Abū Dharr," *EI*2, 1:114; A.J. Cameron, Abū Dharr al-Ghifari.

13. 'Amr b. Zurāra/'Utba b. Farqad al-Sulamī (n.d.)—Kufan. A certain 'Amr is identified as the  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ who advocated the repetition of dhikr and whom Ibn Mas'ūd rebuked for doing so, accusing him of engaging in a negative innovation (bid'a). Ṭabarānī identified the  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ as 'Amr b. Zurāra (al-Mu'jam al- $kab\bar{u}$ r, 9:128, 137), whereas 'Abd al-Razzāq al-Ṣan'ānī and Ibn Waḍḍāḥ identified him as 'Amr b. 'Utba ('Abd al-Razzāq, Muṣannaf, 3:221–2; Ibn Waḍḍāḥ, Bida', 160). 'Amr b. Zurāra is unknown; Ibn Ḥajar mentions two who lived in the 'Abbāsid period ( $Tahdh\bar{u}b$ , 3:271–2). 'Amr b. 'Utba, however, was a reputable ḥadīth transmitter, renowned ascetic and was numbered among the first tabaqa of Kufa, having died in the caliphate of 'Uthmān b. 'Affān (Ibn Sa'd,  $Tabaq\bar{a}t$ , 8:326; Ibn Ḥibbān,  $Thiq\bar{a}t$ , 5:173; Ibn Ḥajar,  $Tahdh\bar{u}b$ , 3:290–1).

14. Al-Aswad b. Sarīʻ (d. 36 or 42/657 or 663)—Basran. He was a fighter, a poet and the first  $q\bar{a}$ \$\$ in Basra (Ibn Saʻd,  $Tabaq\bar{a}t$ , 9:41, Abū Nuʻaym, Maʻrifa, 1:270; Ibn ʻAbd al-Barr,  $Istiʻa\bar{b}$ , 1:89; Ibn Ḥibbān,  $Thiq\bar{a}t$ , 1:338; Jāḥiz,  $Bay\bar{a}n$ , 1:367) where he allegedly laid out the dimensions of the first mosque (Balādhurī,  $Fut\bar{u}h$ , 346). After 'Uthmān was killed, he boarded a ship with his family and was purportedly never seen again (Ibn Ḥajar,  $Tahdh\bar{u}b$ , 1:171). Mujāhid b. Masʻūd said that when al-Aswad gave qa\$a, he was involved in bidʻa (Ibn Sallām,  $Ghar\bar{u}b$ , 4:304). Muḥammad b Sīrīn (d. 110/728) reportedly entered the mosque while al-Aswad was giving qa\$a, in one corner and in the other corner was a group involved in dhikr (Ibn 'Abd al-Barr,  $J\bar{a}mi$ ' ba\$a al-'ilm, 1:51). This report, however, is suspect since Ibn Sīrīn was eight (or younger) when al-Aswad died.

- 15. 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Abī 'Amra al-Najjārī al-Anṣārī (n.d.) *—Medinan. He was a scholar and trustworthy ḥadīth transmitter (Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 7:85; Ibn Abī Ḥātim, Jarḥ, 5:273; Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqat, 5:91; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 17:318–21; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 2:539–40). His father, Abū 'Amra, was a devoted supporter of 'Alī b. Abī Ṭālib allegedly donating 100,000 dirhams to the caliph and fighting for him at Ṣiffīn (Ibn Sa'd, Tabaqāt, 7:85; Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 3:48; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 2:539–40). 'Abd al-Raḥmān's political sympathies are uncertain, however. Iṣḥāq b. 'Abd Allāh b. Abī Ṭalḥa (d. 132/749–50) identified him as a qāṣṣ in Medina (Muslim, Ṣaḥīḥ, 4:2113; Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 5:335; Ṭabarānī, Du'ā', 1:503).
- 16. Tamīm al-Dārī (d. 40/661) * a—Medinan. He became a Muslim in the year 9/630—

  1. He went to Syria after 'Uthmān was killed (35/656) and allegedly received iqtā' land in Hebron—land ostensibly previously owned by his Christian ancestors. He was respected as one of the scholars of the ahl al-kitāb (Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:259), as an ascetic (Abū Nuʻaym, Maʻrifa, 1:448) and as a wāʿiz ("admonisher"); (Abū Nuʻaym, Maʻrifa, 1:448; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 11:81). Reports identifying him as a qāṣṣ, even possibly the first qāṣṣ of Islam, are numerous (Ibn Abī Shayba, Muṣannaf, 5:290; Ibn Shabba, Madīna, 1:11; Ibn Ḥanbal, Zuhd, 215; Ibn Wahb, Jāmi', 2:664; Tamīmī, Miḥan, 307; Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 22–23, 32–3; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 11:80–1; Ibn al-Ḥajj, Madkhal, 2:145; Ibn Ḥajar, Iṣāba, 1:368). See also, M. Lecker, "Tamīm al-Dārī," *EI*2, 10:176; al-Najm, "Tamīm al-Dārī: Awwal qāṣṣ fī-Islām?!," 293–314.
- 17. 'Uqba b. 'Amr b. Jarwa, Abū Mas'ūd al-Anṣārī (d. 40/661) *—Kufan. He fought at the battle of Uḥud and later, during the caliphate of 'Uthmān, moved to Egypt where he acted as the representative of the governor 'Abd Allāh b. Sa'd (d.c. 36/657) during the latter's absence from Egypt (Kindī, Wulāt, 37). He became a supporter of 'Alī who appointed him deputy over Kufa when he was away from the city (Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 1:3317, 3390), though he was actually feigning support for 'Alī's cause (Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:138; Ṭabarī, Ṭārīkh, 1:3390). Among those who related ḥadīth from him was the qāṣṣ Abū al-Aḥwaṣ. On him as a qāṣṣ, see Ibn 'Adī, Kāmil, 1:12; Ibn Hajar, Isāba, 7:392; idem, Tahdhīb, 3:126–7.
- 18. Zayd b. Thābit (d. 42–51/662–76) *—Medinan. He was taken in by the Prophet when he was 11 years old. He was one of the leading religious figures of early Islam known widely for his role in collecting the Qur'ān. 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb appointed him a salaried judge. Ṭabarānī identified him as qāṣṣ while he discussed wuḍū' requirements after sexual intercourse (Ṭabarānī, al-Muʿjam al-kabūr, 5:42; Chapter One, 50). See Ibn Saʿd, Ṭabaqāt, 5:308–15; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhūb, 1:659–60. See also, M. Lecker, "Zayd b. Thābit," EI2, 11:476.
- 19. Abū Hurayra (d. 58/678) * a—Medinan. He was a paragon of the faith who is well-known as one of the most prolific hadīth transmitters of the Companions of the Prophet. In addition, he was identified as one of the pious ascetics of early Islam (Abū Nuʻaym, Ḥilya, 1:461–71). He allegedly gave qaṣaṣ about the Prophet (Bukhārī, Ṣaḥīḥ, 1:387; idem, al-Tārīkh al-awsaṭ, 1:23) on Fridays (al-Maqdisī, Aḥādīth al-shiʻr, 53). See also, J. Robson, "Abū Hurayra," *EI*2, 1:129.

- 20. Yazīd b. Shajara al-Rahāwī (d. 58/678) * a—Syrian. He was a military leader and close confidant of Muʿāwiya b. Abī Sufyān (Khalīfa, Tārīkh, 119; Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 6:3448; Masʿūdī, Murūj, 4:112–3; Ibn al-Athīr Kāmil, 3:246) who dispatched him to lead the pilgrimage in 39/659 when he came into conflict with the governor of Mecca and ʿAlī b. Abī Ṭālib's cousin, Qutham b. ʿAbbās al-Hāshimī (d. 57/677), over the administration of the pilgrimage rites (Khalīfa, Tārīkh, 198; Balādhurī, Ansāb, ed. al-ʿAzm, 2:332–4; Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 1:3448; Masʿūdī, Murūj, 2:209). He was a martial qāṣṣ (Saʿīd b. Mansūr, Sunan, 2:219; Ibn al-Mubārak, Jihād, 38; idem, Zuhd, 1:43; Ibn Abī Shayba, Muṣannaf, 4:207). During Muʿāwiya's caliphate, he commanded at least three attacks against Constantinople where he eventually died at sea (Khalīfa, Ṭabaqāt, 75, 148; idem, Tārīkh, 223, 225; Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-awsaṭ, 1:120; Ibn Qutayba, Maʿārif, 448; Yaʻqūbī, Tārīkh, 2:240; Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 2:86, 173, 181). For another report identifying him as a qāṣṣ, see Ibn Abī Shayba, Muṣannaf, 5:290.
- 21. Rabīʻa b. ʻAmr al-Jurashī (d. 64/684) * a—Syrian. He was a respected religious scholar (faqīh) (Ibn ʻAbd al-Barr, Istīʻāb 2:493; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 9:139), ascetic (Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 4:230) and a qāṣṣ during the caliphate of Muʻāwiya (Abū Zurʻa al-Dimashqī, Tārīkh, 234; Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 4:230; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 9:139). He died at the battle of Marj Rāhiṭ (64/684) while fighting for al-Ḍaḥḥāk b. Qays (d. 64/684), the leader of the counter-caliph Ibn al-Zubayr's forces (Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 3:281; Fasawī, Maʻrifa, 2:283–4; Abū Zurʻa al-Dimashqī, Tārīkh, 234; Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 4:230; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:431). See also Ibn Saʻd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:441; Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 4:230; Ibn ʿAbd al-Barr, Istīʿāb, 2:493; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:600.
- 22. Şukhayr b. Ḥudhayfa b. Hilāl b. Mālik al-Muzanī (d. 65/685)—Kufan. He was one of three quṣṣāṣ who participated in Sulaymān b. Ṣurad's rebellion against the Umayyads. He is the only one of those three quṣṣāṣ to have a qaṣaṣ statement preserved in the sources (Tabarī, Tārīkh, 2:559).
- 23. Rifā'a b. Shaddād al-Bajalī (d. 66/686) *—Kufan. He not only participated in Sulaymān b. Ṣurad's rebellion as a qāṣṣ, he was also a leader in the rebellion (Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 2:559). Because of his valor in Sulaymān's rebellion, al-Mukhtār sought him out to join in his rebellion (Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 2:569–70).
- 24. Abū al-Juwayriya al-ʿAbdī (n.d.)—Kufan. He was one of the three quṣṣāṣ of Sulaymān b. Ṣurad, the anti-Umayyad rebel (Tabarī, Tārīkh, 2:559).

- 25. 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr b. Qatāda (d. 68/688) * a—Meccan. He gave qaṣaṣ at the time of 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb in Mecca (Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:24). He was a reliable ḥadīth transmitter and one of the best of the "Successors." Ibn 'Abbās and the caliph 'Umar both attended his qaṣaṣ sessions (Ibn Abī Khaythama, Akhbār al-Makkiyyīn, 251; Ibn Shabba, Madīna, 1:12). Ibn 'Umar, son of the caliph 'Umar, was brought to tears when attending his sessions. According to one report, he was also the qāṣṣ of Ibn al-Zubayr (Ibn Abī Khaythama, Akhbār al-Makkiyyīn, 253). See also Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:24–5; Fākihī, Akhbār Mecca, 2:338; Ibn Qutayba, Ma'ārif, 557; Ibn Abī Khaythama, Akhbār al-Makkiyyīn, 250; Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 22; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:38–9.
- 26. Abū al-Aḥwaṣ, 'Awf b. Mālik b. Naḍla al-Jushamī (d. 70–80/689–99) *—Kufan. He sided with 'Alī at Ṣiffīn, later becoming a strong supporter of the Umayyads (lit. "an Uthmānī"). He related ḥadīth from the leading Companions of the Prophet. He recited Qur'ān in the mosque for forty years. He was killed by the Khawārij. The qāṣṣ Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Sulamī (# 27) said of him: "Do not sit with the quṣṣāṣ except for Abū al-Aḥwaṣ." See Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:302; Ibn Abī Shayba, Muṣannaf, 5:289; Abū Dāwūd, Suʾālāt, 1:292; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:337.
- 27. Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Sulamī (d. 72–75/692–4) *—Kufan. His name is 'Abd Allāh b. Ḥabīb (Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:291). He was a reliable ḥadīth transmitter, Qur'ān reciter and commentator and judge who learned fiqh from 'Alī b. Abī Ṭālib and who held teaching sessions in the Great Mosque of Kūfa for 40 years (Balādhurī, Ansāb, ed. al-Ya'lāwī, 7/2:232). In a session in which he was said to have been either giving qaṣaṣ ('Uqaylī, pu'afā', 2:186) or reciting Qur'ān (Balādhurī, Ansāb, ed. al-Ya'lāwī, 7/2:233), he said that those who sit with the Khawārij or with Shaqīq al-Dabbī cannot sit with him and warned his students to avoid the quṣṣāṣ except for Abū al-Aḥwaṣ (Balādhurī, Ansāb, ed. al-Ya'lāwī, 7/2:233). His involvement in qaṣaṣ is attested only by 'Uqaylī; see his Du'afā', 2:186. Ibn Ḥajar reported from Wāqidī that he fought with 'Alī at Ṣiffīn, later becoming an 'Uthmānī (Tahdhīb, 2:320).
- 28. Sulaym b. 'Itr (d. 75/694) * a—Egyptian. He participated in the conquest of Egypt and his first appointed position there was over the kharāj (Kindī, Wulāt, 37). He was also the first to give qaṣaṣ in Egypt in 39/659 and was then appointed qāḍī in 40/661 (Kindī, Quḍāt, 5, 11). He was purportedly the first to record his legal judgments after a ruling on inheritance was not implemented. He was also known for his asceticism. See Wakī', Quḍāt, 3:221–2; Ibn 'Asākir, Tārīkh, 72:268–79; Ibn Ḥajar, Raf' al-iṣr, 166.
- 29. Şāliḥ b. Musarriḥ al-Tamīmī (d. 76/695) a—Kufan. He was a Khārijī rebel from Mosul in the region of al-Jazīra and the putative head of the Khawārij in the region for 20 years. He led a failed rebellion against the Umayyads in 76/695. He was only identified as  $q\bar{a}$ s $\bar{s}$  because of a religio-political qis $\bar{s}$ a he delivered to his rebel forces. See Ṭabarī,  $T\bar{a}$ r $\bar{t}$ kh, 2:880–92; Dhahabī, Siyar, 4:148.

30. Shabīb b. Yazīd (d. 77/697)—Iraqi (Kufan). He was a Khārijī and a member of Şāliḥ b. Musarriḥ's rebellion who continued the rebellion after Sāliḥ's death. He was killed in 77/697 when his own rebellion was put down. Like Ṣāliḥ, he gave martial qaṣaṣ. See Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 2:949–51, 991, 1032.

31.

Abū Idrīs al-Khawlānī (d. 80/700) * a—Syrian. His name is 'Ā'idh Allāh b. 'Abd Allāh (Abū Zur'a al-Dimashqī, Tārīkh, 391; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 26:162). He was a distinguished scholar of Syria known to be trustworthy in his hadīth transmissions (Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 5:277; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 26:139, 148) and ascetic in conduct (Abū Zur'a al-Dimashqī, Tārīkh, 585; Ibn Hibbān, Thiqāt, 5:277). He was the qāṣṣ of Damascus during the reign of 'Abd al-Malik b. Marwān (Abū Zur'a al-Dimashqī, Tārīkh, 200; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 26:151, 160, 162) who then removed him from that position and appointed him judge (Abū Zur'a al-Dimashqī, Tārīkh, 200, 585; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 26:137, 151, 160, 165, 168), though he complained about the change saying: "You removed me from that which I like and left me in that which I hate;" (Abū Zur'a al-Dimashqī, Tārīkh, 200; Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 5:544). In one of his gisas, he praised the asceticism of John the Baptist (Ibn Abī Shayba, Muṣannaf, 7:74; Fasawī, Maʻrifa, 2:185; Abū Nuʻaym, Ḥilya, 5:141). He was considered one of the great scholars of Syria during his lifetime (Ibn Ḥibbān, Thigāt, 5:277; Dhahabī, Siyar, 4:274). See also Ibn al-Mubārak, Zuhd, 2:47; Ibn Abī Shayba, Musannaf, 7:74; Fasawī, Ma'rifa, 2:185; Abū Zur'a al-Dimashqī, Tārīkh, 200; Dhahabī, Siyar, 4:274.

32. 'Imrān b. 'Iṣām al-Ḍubay'ī (d. 83/702)—Basran. He was the imām of the mosque of the Banū Ḍubay'a in Basra. Some sources identify him as a qāṣṣ in Basra, while others claim he was a judge, qāḍī, there (Ibn 'Abd al-Barr, Istī'āb, 2:1209; Nawawī, Tahdhīb al-asmā', 2:492). He was numbered among the qurrā' who fought with Ibn al-Ash'ath and was executed by al-Ḥajjāj (Khalīfa, Tārīkh, 177–80). On him as a qāṣṣ, see Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 6:159; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:320. See also, Caskel, Ğamharat, 1:172, 2:357.

33. 'Abd Allāh b. Ghālib al-Jahḍamī (d. 83/702) * a—Basran. He was an ascetic and qāṣṣ who gave qaṣaṣ in the congregational mosque of Basra. He was one of the qurrā' who fought with Ibn al-Ash'ath and was killed in battle at Dayr Jamājim (Khalīfa, Tārīkh, 180; Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:223–4; Ibn Ḥanbal, Zuhd, 247–8; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 2:401–2). On him as a qāṣṣ, see Abū Nu'aym, Ḥilya, 2:291; Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 6:117–9.

34. Māhān al-Ḥanafī (d. 83/702) * a—Kufan. He was pious believer ('ābid) and reputable ḥadīth transmitter from Persian descent. He fought against al-Ḥajjāj and was brutally executed, first having his feet and hands cut off and then crucified.

- See Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:347; Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 5:458; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:16. Only Dhahabī identified him as a qāṣṣ (Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 6:17).
- 35. 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Ḥujayra al-Khawlānī (d. 83/702) *—Egyptian. He was a reputable scholar of Egypt who was paid an annual wage of 1000 dīnārs: 200 for serving as a judge, 200 as a qāṣṣ, 200 as treasurer, 200 as a stipend, and 200 as an award (Kindī, Quḍāt, 15; Wakīʻ, Quḍāt, 3:324–5; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 17:55; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 2:501). On him as a qāṣṣ, see Kindī, Quḍāt, 15; Wakīʻ, Quḍāt, 1:44, 3:324–5; Dūlābī, Kunā, 1:314.
- 36. Nawf b. Faḍāla al-Bakkālī (d.c. 90–100/708–18) *—Syrian. He was the step-son of Kaʿb al-Aḥbār and learned much from him (Ibn Saʿd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:455). He was an imām of the people of Damascus (Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:249–50) and gave qaṣaṣ there (Ibn Wahb, Jāmiʿ, 2:661; Ibn Ḥanbal, Zuhd, 176; Abū Nuʿaym, Ḥilya, 6:51). Like his step-father, he allegedly knew the Scriptures of the Jews and Christians (Abū Nuʿaym, Ḥilya, 6:48–9, 53–4). Even though he is generally considered reputable, Ibn ʿAbbāṣ reprimanded him in Kufa for claiming that the Moses named in the story of the prophet al-Khiḍr was not the Moses of the Banū Isrāʾīl (Bukhārī, Ṣaḥūḥ, 1:3:123; Muslim, Ṣaḥūḥ, 4:1847). Umm al-Dardāʾ challenged him and another qāṣṣ "to let their sermons to the people be [also] to themselves;" (Ibn Wahb, Jāmiʿ, 2:661; Abū Nuʿaym, Ḥilya, 6:51). He died while fighting in the summer raids with Muḥammad b. Marwān b. al-Ḥakam (d. 101/719–20). See also Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 5:483; Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 6:271.
- 37. Marthad b. 'Abd Allāh al-Yazanī, Abū al-Khayr (d. 90/708) * a—Egyptian. He was a reputable scholar who transmitted from well-known Companions of the Prophet, like Zayd b. Thābit, 'Amr b. al-ʿĀṣ and Ka'b al-Aḥbār (Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:517; Ibn 'Abd al-Ḥakam, Futūḥ, 149; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 27:357–9; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:45). Ibn Yūnus said he was the muftī of Egypt and that the Umayyad governor of Egypt 'Abd al-'Azīz b. Marwān allegedly attended his sessions on legal rulings (Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 27:357–9; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:45). He was also known for his piety ('ibāda); (Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:517). Only al-Maqrīzī (d. 845/1442) identified him as a qāṣṣ stating that he was appointed qāṣṣ after 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Ḥujayra and that he had previously been the judge of Alexandria (Khiṭaṭ, 4/1:31).
- 38. Ibrāhīm b. Yazīd al-Taymī (d. 92 or 94/711 or 713) * a—Kufan. He was a reliable hadīth transmitter and pious qāṣṣ who brought his listeners to tears with his qiṣaṣ (Ibn Ḥanbal, Zuhd, 358; Ibn ʿAsākir, Dimashq, 23:171). His piety was exemplified by the fact that birds alighted on his back because he remained so long in prostration (Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:92). Ibn Qutayba names him first in his list of Murjiʾa (Maʿārif, 1:625). He died while imprisoned by al-Ḥajjāj (Khalīfa, Tārīkh, 195; Balādhurī, Ansāb, ed. al-ʿAzm, 6:494–5; Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 4:7). Ibn Saʿd gives a report that al-Ḥajjāj, while intending to imprison Ibrāhīm b. Yazīd al-Nakhaʿī, accidentally incarcerated Ibrāhīm al-Taymī (Ibn Saʿd, Ṭabaqāt 8:402).

Ibn al-Jawzī listed him among the most outstanding preachers of Kufa (Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 65–6). On him, see Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 4:7; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:92. On him as a qāṣṣ, see Ibn Saʿd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:403; Ibn Abī Shayba, Muṣannaf, 5:289–90; Ibn Ḥanbal, Zuhd, 1:358; Jāḥiẓ, Bayān, 1:367; Ṭabarī, Tafsīr, 13:228; Ibn ʿAsākir, Dimashq, 23:171.

- 39. Zurāra b. Awfā (d. 93/712) * a—Basran. He was judge of Basra under 'Ubayd Allāh b. Ziyād during the caliphate of Mu'āwiya (Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:150–1; Khalīfa, Tārīkh, 140–41). He held qaṣaṣ sessions in his house before and after al-Ḥajjāj's arrival in Basra (c. 75/694), and the governor allegedly even attended some of his sessions (Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:150–1; Ibn Ḥanbal, Zuhd, 247; Abū Nu'aym, Ḥilya, 2:293; Ibn al-Jawzī, Ṣifa, 3:230; Dhahabī, Siyar, 4:516; idem, Kāshif, 1:402). He was a reputable ḥadīth scholar who transmitted from a number of respected Companions of the Prophet (Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:628).
- 40. Saʿīd b. Jubayr (d. 93/712) * a—Kufan. He was a highly respected religious scholar who used to give <code>qaṣaṣ</code> in Kufa every day after the morning and evening prayers (Ibn Saʿd, <code>Ṭabaqāt</code>, 8:377; Ibn Abī Shayba, <code>Muṣannaf</code>, 5:290; Ibn Ḥanbal, <code>Zuhd</code>, 215; Dhahabī, <code>Siyar</code>, 4:336). He was among the <code>qurrā</code> who fought alongside Ibn al-Ashʿath (Ibn Saʿd, <code>Ṭabaqāt</code>, 8:381; Ṭabarī, <code>Tārīkh</code>, 2:1087f). He fled to Mecca and was later extradited to al-Ḥajjāj, who executed him (Ibn Saʿd, <code>Ṭabaqāt</code>, 8:382–3; Ṭabarī, <code>Tārīkh</code>, 2:1261–4; Ibn Khaldūn, <code>Tārīkh</code>, 3:82). He transmitted extensively from Ibn ʿAbbās and was himself an influential Qurʾān commentator (Ṭabarī, <code>Tafsīr</code>, 1:91). See also Ibn Ḥajar, <code>Tahdhīb</code>, 2:9–11.
- 41. Muṭarrif b. 'Abd Allāh b. al-Shikhkhīr (d.c. 95/714) * a—Basran. He was an ascetic, a reliable transmitter of <code>hadīth</code> and a reputable scholar known for his religious knowledge ('ilm). He appears to have been politically neutral and so avoided being drawn into the <code>fitna</code> (Ibn Sa'd, <code>Tabaqāt</code>, 9:143–4; 'Ijlī, <code>Ma'rifa</code>, 2:282). Only Jāḥiz identified him as a <code>qāṣṣ</code>; he also implies that his father was a <code>qāṣṣ</code> though I have not been able to confirm this (<code>Bayān</code>, 1:367). Among those who transmitted reports from him, as well as about him, were three distinguished scholars and <code>quṣṣāṣ</code> of Iraq: Qatāda b. Di'āma, Thābit al-Bunānī and al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī (Ibn Sa'd, <code>Ṭabaqāt</code>, 9:143–4). On him, see also Khalīfa, <code>Tārīkh</code>, 185; Abū Nu'aym, Ḥilya, 2:227–41; Ibn al-Jawzī, Ṣifa, 3:222–6; Ibn Ḥajar, <code>Tahdhīb</code>, 4:90–1.
- 42. Ṭarīf b. Mujālid, Abū Tamīma al-Hujaymī (d.c. 95/713) \*—Basran. Ṭarīf's role as a qāṣṣ can be deduced from two reports recorded by Ibn Abī Shayba. The first, from 'Ubayd Allāh b. Miqsam, says: "There was a qāṣṣ who used to recite [Sūrat] al-Sajda after the morning prayer (al-fajr) and bowed when doing so. When Ibn 'Umar forbade him from doing this, he refused, so Ibn 'Umar threw stones at him and said, 'These people have no understanding!'" (Muṣannaf, 1:376). The second report has Abū Tamīma say: "I was reciting [Sūrat] al-Sajda after the morning prayer and bowing in it and Ibn 'Umar sent to me and forbade me from doing - it;" (Mu\$annaf, 1:377). It is noteworthy that the only two scholars mentioned in Ibn 'Abd al-Barr as transmitters from him were well-known qu\$\$a\$;: Qatāda b. Di'āma and Bakr b. 'Abd Allāh ( $Istī'\bar{a}b$ , 4:1616). He was considered a reputable  $had\bar{\iota}th$  scholar (Ibn Sa'd,  $Tabaq\bar{a}t$ , 9:152; Ibn Ḥajar,  $Tahdh\bar{\iota}b$ , 2:237).

- 43. Umm al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī (d. before the end of the first/seventh century) *— Medinan. Her name was allegedly Khayra (Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:672). She is the only woman mentioned by name as a qāṣṣ; she reportedly gave qaṣaṣ to the women (Ibn Saʿd, Ṭabaqāt, 10:442). She was also a reliable ḥadīth transmitter, relating traditions on the authority of the wives of the Prophet (Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:672).
- 44. 'Ā'idh Allāh al-Mujāshi'ī (d.c. turn of the first/seventh century)—Basran. He was said to have been the  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ of either 'Abd al-Malik b. Marwān (r. 65–86/685–705) or Sulaymān b. 'Abd al-Malik (r. 96–99/715–7); (Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 5:277; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhūb, 2:274). He was considered a weak ḥadūth transmitter (Bukhārī, al-Du'afā' al-ṣaghūr, 91; Ibn Abī Ḥātim, Jarḥ, 7:38; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhūb, 2:274). The only person on whose authority he transmitted ḥadūth was the  $q\bar{a}$ ṣṣ Abū Dā'ūd Nufay' al-A'mā (# 74); (Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 5:277; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhūb, 2:274).
- 45. Ibn Abī 'Uyayna (d.c. turn of the first/seventh century)—Syrian. His identity is uncertain. According to a report recorded by Ṭabarī, he used to give qaṣaṣ to Sulaymān b. 'Abd al-Malik (r. 96–9/715–7); (Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 3:1338). The name Ibn Abī 'Uyayna is most often connected to the 'Abbāsid era poets of the al-Muhallabī family; Abū'l-Faraj al-Iṣfāhānī (d. 356/966) said that "everyone who is named Abū 'Uyayna comes from the Ahl al-Muhallabī' (Aghānī, 20:75). Sulaymān's qāṣṣ, therefore, was Muḥammad b. Abī 'Uyayna al-Muhallabī, father of two 'Abbāsid era poets: Abū 'Uyayna (known also by the kunya of Abū'l-Minhāl) and 'Abd Allāh. On the various identities of Ibn Abī 'Uyayna, see C. Pellat, "Muḥammad b. Abī 'Uyayna," El2, 7:395; A. Ghédira, "Ibn Abī 'Uyayna," El2, 3:694; idem, "Deux poètes contemporains de Baššār, les frères Ibn Abī 'Uyayna," Arabica, x, 154–87.
- 46. Kurdūs b. Hānī/ʿAmr/Qays/al-ʿAbbās al-Taghlabī/al-Thaʿlabī (d.c. turn of the first/seventh century) * a—Kufan. The sources disagree on his father's name and his nisba; Ibn Ḥajar summarized the possibilities listing them under Kurdūs b. al-ʿAbbās (Ibn Ḥajar, Iṣāba, 5:639). He was the qāṣṣ of Kufa (Ibn Abī Shayba, Muṣannaf, 5:290; Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 7:242; Fasawī, Maʿrifa, 2:68; Abū Nuʿaym, Ḥilya, 4:200), probably at the time of al-Ḥajjāj (Ibn al-Jawzī, Ṣifa, 3:72). Ṭabarī reported that ʿAlī b. Abī Ṭālib gave an iqṭāʿ in the Sawād of Irāq to Kurdūs and Ibn Ḥajar identified that Kurdūs as Ibn Hānī (Tārīkh, 1:2376; Ibn Ḥajar, Iṣāba, 5:639). This may confirm other Shīʿite sources identifying Kurdūs b. Ḥānī as a supporter of ʿAlī (Naṣr b. Muzāḥim, Ṣiffīn, 484; Ibn Abī al-Ḥadīd, Sharḥ Nahj al-balāgha, 2:130). According to Abū Nuʿaym, Kurdūs b. Hānī claimed to have read the Gospels (Ḥilya, 4:200). Bukhārī (al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 7:242) and Ibn Ḥibbān (Thiqāt, 5:342) reported, however, that Kurdūs b. 'Amr read "the Scriptures," meaning the Torah and Gospels. Bukhārī also claimed that Kurdūs al-Taghlibī, with no father's name, was the qāṣṣ of Kufa (al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 7:242). Lastly, Ibn Ḥanbal recorded that a Kurdūs b. Qays was "the qāṣṣ of the common folk (qāṣṣ al-ʿāmma)" in Kufa (Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 25:236–7; see also Ibn al-Jawzī, Quṣṣāṣ, 16; Ibn Kathīr, Tafsūr, 3:81), though other works identified him as "the judge of the common folk (qāḍā al-ʿāmma)" of Kufa (Bayhaqī, Shuʿab, 6:73; idem, Sunan, 10:88; Dhahabī, Mīzān, 5:497). He apparently gave qaṣaṣ when al-Ḥajjāj was governor of Kufa (Ibn al-Jawzī, Sifa, 3:72).

- 47. Shaqīq al-Þabbī (d.c. turn of the first/seventh century)—Kufan. Only Ibn 'Adī included him among the quṣṣāṣ of Kufa (Kāmil, 4:45). He was allegedly a Khārijī. While a report, from Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Sulamī (# 27) lists him among those to be avoided, it is not entirely clear if the reason for his censure was because of his Khārijism, his being a qāṣṣ or a combination of the two (Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:292–3; Balādhurī, Ansāb, ed. al-Ya'lāwī, 7/2:233; 'Uqaylī, Du'afā', 2:186; Ibn 'Adī, Kāmil, 4:45; Ibn Ḥajar, Lisān, 3:183).
- 48. Dharr b. 'Abd Allāh b. Zurāra (d.c. turn of the first/seventh century) * a—Kufan. He was an ascetic, a reliable <code>hadīth</code> transmitter and was accused of being a <code>Murji'ī</code> (Ibn Sa'd, <code>Tabaqāt</code>, 8:410; Ibn Ḥibbān, <code>Thiqāt</code>, 6:295; Sam'ānī, <code>Ansāb</code>, 5:266; Dhahabī, <code>Tārīkh</code>, 6:60; Ibn Ḥajar, <code>Tahdhīb</code>, 1:579). Ibn Sa'd said that he was among the most eloquent <code>quṣṣāṣ</code> (Ibn Sa'd, <code>Tabaqāt</code>, 8:410; on his affiliation with <code>qaṣaṣ</code>, see also Ibn Ḥibbān, <code>Thiqāt</code>, 6:295; Sam'ānī, <code>Ansāb</code>, 5:266). He was also one of the <code>qurrā'</code> of Ibn al-Ash'ath's rebellion (Ibn Sa'd, <code>Ṭabaqāt</code>, 8:140; Ibn Ḥajar, <code>Tahdhīb</code>, 1:579) and was used by Ibn al-Ash'ath to give <code>qaṣaṣ</code> criticizing al-Ḥajjāj (Khalīfa, <code>Tārīkh</code>, 176).
- 49. Abū Yaḥyā al-A'raj (Miṣda') al-Mu'arqab (d.c. turn of the first/seventh century)— Kufan. He was an 'Alid sympathizer whose Achilles tendons were cut by either al-Ḥajjāj or Bishr b. Marwān because he refused to curse 'Alī—thus his nisba al-A'raj al-Mu'arqab ('Ijlī, Ma'rifa, 2:280; Ibn Bashkuwāl, Ghawāmiḍ, 4:259–60; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:82). In fact, 'Alī reportedly observed him while he was giving qaṣaṣ and asked him if he knew al-nāsikh wa-l-mansūkh (Ibn Bashkuwāl, Ghawāmiḍ, 4:259–60; Ibn al-Jawzī, Nawāsikh, 31; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:82). His reputation in ḥadīth transmission was generally suspect (Ibn Ḥibbān, Majrūḥīn, 3:39; Ibn al-Jawzī, Nawāsikh, 31: Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:82–3; Dhahabī, Mizān, 6:433), even though he transmitted ḥadīth from well-respected sources such as 'Alī b. Abī Ṭālib, 'Ā'isha and Ibn 'Abbās, and was considered an authority on traditions from Ibn 'Abbās (Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 28:14–5). See also Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:38; Yaḥyā b. Ma'īn, Tārīkh, 3:164, 298; Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-awsaṭ, 1:196; ibid, al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 8:65; Ibn Abī Ḥātim, Jarḥ, 8:429.

- 50. Abū Rayḥāna (Shamʻūn) al-Azdī (d.c. turn of the first/seventh century) *— Syrian. His name was Shamʻūn, suggesting he was a Jewish convert. He was a Companion of the Prophet and participated in the conquest of Damascus. Even though he ultimately settled in Jerusalem, he was stationed for a certain period in the garrison town of Mayyāfāriqīn, in the region of the upper Tigris. It may be his involvement in the conquests and the wars with the Byzantines that led him to give <code>qaṣaṣ</code> of the conquests (<code>kāna yaquṣṣu al-maghāzī</code>); (Dhahabī, <code>Kāshif</code>, 1:490). He was also identified as a <code>qāṣṣ</code> in Jerusalem (Ibn ʿAsākir, <code>Dimashq</code>, 23:194). He lived an ascetic life; miraculous acts were attributed to him, like stilling a raging sea and recouping a needle fallen into the sea by appealing to God to return it to him (Ibn ʿAsākir, <code>Dimashq</code>, 23:204). See also Ibn Saʿd, <code>Ṭabaqāt</code>, 9:237, 428; Ibn ʿAbd al-Barr, <code>Istīʿab</code>, 2:711–2; Ibn Ḥajar, <code>Tahdhīb</code>, 2:180.
- 51. Salmān al-Agharr, Abū 'Abd Allāh (d.c. turn of the first/seventh century) *— Medinan. He was originally from Iṣfahān. He was a reliable transmitter of ḥadīth from the Companions of the Prophet. Only Ibn Sa'd and Ibn Ḥajar report that he was a qāṣṣ (Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 7:280; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 2:69). See also Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 4:137; 'Ijlī, Ma'rifa, 1:422.
- 52. Ibn Abī al-Sā'ib (d.c. turn of the first/seventh century)—Medinan. His identity is uncertain. He is referred to as "the qāṣṣ of Medina" in one variant of a report about qaṣaṣ transmitted from 'Ā'isha (Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 43:19–20; Ibn Ḥibbān, Ṣaḥīḥ, 3:258). Other variants of the report fail to identify him as a qāṣṣ and name him simply as al-Sā'ib (Abū Ya'lā, Musnad, 7:448; Ibn Abī Ḥātim, Ilal, 2:248; Ṭabarānī, Du'ā', 37). Another variant, this one from Ibn 'Abbās, does not mention him at all (Bukhārī, Ṣaḥīḥ, 5:2334).
- 53. Abū Ruhm (d.c. turn of the first/seventh century) *—Syrian. His identity is uncertain. Ibn Ḥajar mentions three Abū Ruhms, of whom this may be Aḥzāb b. Asīd al-Samāʿī. It is unclear whether he was a Companion of the Prophet or a Successor. Ibn Ḥanbal is the only source to identify him as a qāṣṣ, calling him "the qāṣṣ of the people of Shām;" (Musnad, 38:491). On him, see Ibn Saʿd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:441; Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 4:60, 5:585; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:99.
- 54. Marthad b. Wadā'a (d.c. the turn of the first/seventh century) *—Syrian. Only Fasawī reported that he gave qaṣaṣ and noted that he did so while standing (Ma'rifa, 2:248). He supposedly attended the Prophet's farewell sermon (Abū Nu'aym, Ma'rifa, 5:2566; Ibn al-Athīr, Usd al-ghāba, 5:146). He narrated one report from the Prophet describing the fate of the believers and unbelievers on the Day of Resurrection (Zamaksharī, Kashshāf, 4:223; Qurṭubī, Jāmi', 19:234).
- 55. Ḥumayd b. 'Aṭā' al-A'raj (d.c. first quarter of second/eighth century)—Kufan. He was a qāṣṣ in Kūfa (Yaḥyā b. Ma'īn, Tārīkh, 3:448, 4:27; Ibn Abī Ḥātim, Jarḥ, 3:226; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 15:297; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 7:387; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:501) and was considered untrustworthy in hadīth (Yaḥyā b. Maʿīn, Tārīkh, 3:353; 'Uqaylī, Duʿafāʾ, 1:268; Ibn Abī Ḥātim, Jarḥ, 3:226; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:501). He worked as a scribe for 'Abd Allāh b. al-Ḥārith al-Zubaydī (Yaḥyā b. Maʿīn, Tārīkh, 4:27; Ibn Ḥanbal, Ilal, 3:380) and transmitted ḥadīth from him (Ibn Abī Shayba, Musnad, 1:262, 276–7; idem, Muṣannaf, 6:17, 7:45; Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-awsat, 2:108; idem, al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 2:354; Ibn Abī 'Āṣim, Zuhd, 93). See also Yaḥyā b. Maʿīn, Tārīkh, 3:371, 4:32; Ibn Ḥibbān, Majrūḥīn, 1:262; Ibn 'Adī, Kāmil, 2:272; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 7:409–10.

- 56. Saʿīd b. Abī al-Ḥasan (d. 100 or 108/718 or 726) *—Basran. He was the brother of al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī and, like his brother, a respected scholar and reliable ḥadīth transmitter (Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 2:12). Jāḥiz identified him and al-Ḥasan as qussās (Bayān, 1:367).
- Tubay b. 'Āmir al-Ḥimyarī (d. 101/719) *—Syrian. He was the step-son of Kab 57. al-Aḥbār and transmitted ḥadīth from him as well as from the Companion-qāṣṣ Abū al-Dardā' (Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 4:313). Even though he met the Prophet, he did not convert to Islam until the caliphate of Abū Bakr (Ibn Ḥajar, Iṣāba, 1:377). He purportedly gave qaṣaṣ to the Companions of the Prophet (Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 11:29; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 4:314; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:257). He was a reputable scholar by all accounts, who transmitted much from Ka'b and, like his step-father, was accomplished in the Scriptures of the Jews and Christians (Ibn Sa'd, Tabagāt, 9:455; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 4:314; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:257). He allegedly possessed the ability to prophesy, like his step-father Ka'b who foretold the death of 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb (Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 1:2722-3); he prophesied the execution of 'Amr b. Sa'īd al-Ashdaq who was killed by 'Abd al-Malik after a failed rebellion against the caliph (Tabarī, Tārīkh, 2:786–7) and the accessions of various Umayyad caliphs as well as their eventual downfall (Balādhurī, Futūh, 279; Nu'aym b. Hammād, Fitan, 132, 193, 194), though this may simply be a motif applied to him as a relative of Ka'b, who allegedly possessed a similar gift of prophecy. Not only was he a scholar, he was also a warrior who participated in the naval battle against Rhodes, where he purportedly predicted the death of Mu'āwiya b. Abī Sufyān (Tabarī, Tārīkh, 2:786–7; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 4:317). According to Ibn Yūnus, he died in Alexandria (Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:257).
- 58. Mujāhid b. Jabr (d. 100–4/718–22) * a—Meccan. He was a scholar, ascetic and fighter. He was known for his knowledge of the Qur'ān (Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:28; Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 5:419; Ṭabarī, Tafsīr, 1:91; Ibn Manjuwayh, Rijāl Muslim, 2:243; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:26; he is cited throughout 'Abd al-Razzāq's Tafsīr as a source for his commentary) and allegedly was knowledgeable about the Scriptures of the Jews and Christians (Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:28; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:26). He also related qaṣaṣ (Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 5:419; Ibn Manjuwayh, Rijāl Muslim, 2:243). In addition to his scholarly pursuits, he participated in a number of military and political actions. He fought with Junāda b. Abī Umayya at Rhodes and was present when Tubay' b. 'Āmir (# 57) prophesied the death of Muʻāwiya b. Abī Sufyān (Balādhurī, Futūḥ, 279). He joined Ibn al-Ash'ath's rebellion and was extradited with Saʿīd b. Jubayr and his colleagues from the Ḥijāz back to al-Ḥajjāj in Iraq where he remained incarcerated until al-Ḥajjāj's death (Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 2:1262). He apparently continued his military career as a commander in Maslama b. 'Abd al-Malik's campaign against Constantinople in 98/716 (Tabarī, Tārīkh, 2:1315).

59.

'Aṭā' b. Yasār al-Madanī (d. 103/721) * a—Syrian. He was a reputable scholar and qāṣṣ who transmitted from a number of Companions of the Prophet (Mālik, Muwaṭṭā', passim; Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 7:172; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:110–11). 'Abd Allāh b. 'Amr b. al-'Āṣ, however, used his reputation as a qāṣṣ against him while criticizing his opinion on an issue related to divorce, telling him: "You are [merely] a qāṣṣ!" (Mālik, Muwaṭṭā', 2:570). (On him as a qāṣṣ, see Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 1:173; Ibn Manjuwayh, Rijāl Muslim, 2:103; Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 5:199; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 40:438, 440, 447–9; Dhahabī, Tbar, 1:125; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:110–1). He traveled to Alexandria with the intention of fighting in the navy and died there (Ibn Manjuwayh, Rijāl Muslim, 2:103; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 40:442, 451).

60. Bilāl b. Sa'd al-Ash'arī (d. 105–25/724–43) * a—Syrian. He was one of the leading scholars of Syria, an ascetic, reliable hadīth transmitter, Qur'ān reciter and prayer-imām (Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:465; Abū Zur'a al-Dimashqī, Ṭārīkh, 1:250, 607; Ibn Ḥibbān, Mashāhīr, 1:115; idem, Thiqāt, 4:66; Sam'ānī, Ansāb, 1:166; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 10:482ff; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 4:292; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:254). He was a qāṣṣ who told "polished qaṣaṣ," ḥasan al-qaṣaṣ (See sources above, especially Abū Zur'a al-Dimashqī, Tārīkh, 1:607). Al-Awzā'ī said he was the most eloquent preacher (wā'iz) he ever heard (Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 10:485, also 10:483, where he is called the wā'iz of Damascus; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 4:293). He was thus called "the al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī of Syria" (Sam'ānī, Ansāb, 1:166; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 10:485; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:254). He died during the caliphate of Hishām b. 'Abd al-Malik (r. 105–25/724–43); (Abū Zur'a al-Dimashqī, Tārīkh, 1:250, 607; Ibn Ḥibbān, Mashāhīr, 1:115; idem, Thiqāt, 4:66; Sam'ānī, Ansāb, 1:166; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:254).

61. Muslim b. Jundab al-Hudhalī (d. 106/724) *—Medinan. He was a respected Qur'ān reciter (Ibn Mujāhid, Ṣab'a, 59–60; Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 7:256; idem, Ma'rifat al-qurrā', 1:80–82; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:66), judge (Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 7:422; Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 5:393; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:66) and qāṣṣ in Medina (Ibn Ḥanbal, Ilal, 1:464; Jāḥiz, Bayān, 1:367–8; Ibn Ḥibbān, Mashāhīr, 1:75; Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 7:256–7; idem, Ma'rifat al-qurrā', 1:80–82). There is some confusion in the sources about him being a judge or qāṣṣ; this is typified in the two works of Ibn Ḥibbān, one claims he was the judge of Medina (Thiqāt, 5:393) while the other that he was the qāṣṣ of Medina (Mashāhīr, 1:75).

62. Bakr b. 'Abd Allāh b. 'Amr al-Muzanī (d. 108/726) * a—Basran. He was a reputable scholar of Basra (Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:208; Jāḥiẓ, Bayān, 1:101, 242; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:244–5). Jāḥiẓ lists him among both the orators (al-khuṭabā') and ascetics of Baṣra (Bayān, 1:353, 363; see also Ibn Ḥanbal, Zuhd, 1:304), though he was a wealthy man whose asceticism apparently did not include shunning his riches (Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:209). The only source identifying him as a qāṣṣ is Ibn Ḥanbal's al-Zuhd, specifying that Bakr gave qaṣaṣ on the day of the standing at Mount 'Arafat after the afternoon (ʿasr) prayer (Zuhd, 1:304).

- 63. Yazīd b. Abān al-Raqāshī (d. 110–20/728–738) a—Basran. While he was a qāṣṣ and ascetic, he was considered a Qadarī and untrustworthy in ḥadīth, prompting Shu'ba b. al-Ḥajjāj (d. 160/776) to exclaim: "Committing adultery is preferable to me to relating ḥadīth from Yazīd;" (Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:403; see also Jāḥiz, Bayān, 1:204, 262, 308, 353–4, 364; Ibn Ḥibbān, Majrūḥīn, 3:98; Ibn 'Adī, Kāmil, 4:17; Abū Nu'aym, Ḥilya, 3:58–64; Sam'ānī, Ansāb, 3:81–2). Al-A'mash accused him of engaging in bid'a, innovation, by giving qaṣaṣ. His political alignments are unclear. Pellat believed that he participated in the 'Abbāsid da'wa because Mas'ūdī said he was a companion of al-Saffāḥ (Le Milieu basrien, 101). Mas'ūdī, however, reported that after al-Ṣaffāḥ listened to an entertaining story from Yazīd lampooning numerous tribes, including the caliph's own Banū Hāshim, the caliph called him "the master of liars (sayyid al-kadhdhābīn);" (Mas'ūdī, Murūj, 4:117–27). Nevertheless, Mizzī alleged that the Umayyad caliph 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz commanded Yazīd to admonish him ('iznī); (Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 32:76).
- 64. Ziyād b. 'Abd Allāh al-Numayrī (n.d.) a—Basran. A contemporary of Yazīd b. Abān al-Raqāshī (Makkī, Qūt, 1:259), he was numbered among the ascetics of Basra though was considered weak in ḥadīth transmission (Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 4:255–6; Dhahabī, Mīzān, 3:132–3; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:650). He is identified as a qāṣṣ in a report from Anas b. Mālik (Makkī, Qūt, 1:259).
- 65. 'Awn b. 'Abd Allāh b. 'Utba b. Mas'ūd (d. 110–20/728–738) \* a—Kufan. He was a trustworthy scholar who transmitted hadīth on the authority of well-known Companions like Abū Hurayra, Ibn 'Umar, Ibn 'Abbās and the uncle of his father, Ibn Mas'ūd, and was known for his asceticism (Ibn Sa'd, Tabaqāt, 8:430; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 47:60; Dhahabī, Siyar, 5:103–5; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:338–9). After initially joining Ibn al-Ash'ath, he fled and sought refuge with the Umayyad general Muḥammad b. Marwān in Naṣībīn and then ultimately with 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz (Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 47:65; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:338–9). He subsequently enjoyed a close relationship with the caliph, who was impressed by his position on irjā' (Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 8:430), sent him as his emissary to the Khawārij (Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 7:350) and sought solace from him upon the death of his son (Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 47:71). He is identified as a qāṣṣ only in later sources and in connection with a controversy surrounding his woman servant whom he allowed to give qaṣaṣ and even to recite the Qur'ān in intonation (alhān); (Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 47:89; Ibn al-Jawzī,  $Talb\bar{\iota}s$ , 1:297; Dhahabī, Siyar, 5:105). A much earlier source, Ibn al-Mubārak's (d. 181/797) Zuhd, tells of him sitting and delivering a sermon (maw'iza) in the mosque and seems to corroborate his image as a  $q\bar{a}ṣṣ (Zuhd, 1:505)$ .

- 66. Al-Ḥasan b. Abī al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī (d. 110/728) * a—Basran. He was one of the most famous scholars of Basra and early Islamic thought. According to Ṭabarī, he held teaching sessions in the governor's mosque (masjid al-amīr); (Tārīkh, 2:455). While he was appointed by Basra's governor 'Adī b. Arṭāt over the judiciary, he declined (Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 2:1346–7). Both Ibn Abī Shayba and Jāḥiẓ claim he gave qaṣaṣ (Muṣannaf, 5:290 and Bayān, 1:367, respectively). Khalīfa b. Khayyāṭ numbered him among the qurrā' who supported Ibn al-Ashʿath, saying he did so "unwillingly (karhan);" (Tārīkh, 181). On him, see H. Ritter, "al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī," *El*2, 3:247; Iḥsān 'Abbāṣ, al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī (Cairo, 1952).
- 67. Wahb b. Munabbih (d. 110/728) * a—Yemeni. Wahb is considered one of the most important sources for reports of the pre-Islamic prophets, having allegedly read 72 Scriptures of the people of the Book (Ibn Samura, Ṭabaqāt fuqahāʾ al-Yemen, 57; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:332). He was a judge in Ṣanʿāʾ and was also known for his asceticism (Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:332). Despite his wide association with the quṣṣāṣ in modern studies, he is surprisingly connected to the term qaṣaṣ in only two late sources. Ibn Samura al-Jaʿdī (d. 585/1190) reported that "qaṣaṣ was his major scholarly occupation (kāna al-ghālib ʿalayhi al-qaṣaṣ); (Ṭabaqāt fuqahāʾ al-Yaman, 57). Yāqūt al-Hamawī (d. 626/1229) identified him as "Abū ʿAbd Allāh al-Yamānī the transmitter of historical reports (al-akhbārī) and the master of qaṣaṣ (ṣāḥib al-qaṣaṣ); (Irshād, 7:232). See also Sezgin, GAs, 1:305–7; Khoury, "Wahb b. Munabbih," EI2, 11:34–6; idem, Wahb b. Munabbih (Wiesbaden, 1972).
- 68. Rajā' b. Ḥaywa al-Kindī (d. 112/730) \* a—Syrian. He was the famous advisor to Sulaymān b. 'Abd al-Malik who played a pivotal role in the ascension of 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz to the caliphate (Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 2:1340–45; Dhahabī calls him "the just minister (al-wazīr al-'ādil)," Siyar, 4:557). He was praised by the esteemed Umayyad general Maslama b. 'Abd al-Malik as one of the great leaders and warriors of the Kinda tribe (Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 18:103). Not only was he a major political force, he was also an ascetic, faqīh, and ḥadīth scholar (Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:457; Ibn Ḥanbal, Tlal, 3:498; Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 4:237–8; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 18:100, 104; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:602). Maṭar al-Warrāq, a fellow qāṣṣ, even claimed: "I never saw a Syrian better in fiqh than he;" (Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 18:104). For all his official connections, it is noteworthy that Ibn Abī Shayba identified him as "the qāṣṣ of the common folk (qāṣṣ al-'āmma)" in Kufa (Muṣannaf, 1:376). On him as a qāṣṣ, see also Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 3:312; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 9:153. Ibn 'Asākir, citing Bukhārī, identified him as a judge, not a qāṣṣ (Dimashq 18:101). This appears to be a mistake of orthography since his role as  $q\bar{a}$ , can be confirmed in other sources. Like the  $q\bar{a}$ , 'Awn b. 'Abd Allāh, he comforted 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz upon the death of his son (Ibn 'Asakir, Dimashq, 18:112).

- 69. 'Adī b. Thābit al-Anṣārī (d. 116/734) *—Kufan. He was a Shīʿite qāṣṣ, imām of the Shīʿite mosque in Kufa and the most accomplished person in the sayings of the Shīʿa (Ibn Abī Ḥātim, Jarḥ, 7:2; Dhahabī, Mughnī, 2:431; idem, Kāshif, 2:15; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:85). In spite of his "excessive" Shīʿism (Dhahabī, Mughnī, 2:431), he was considered a reliable hadīth transmitter (Ibn Hajar, Tahdhīb, 3:85).
- 70. Mūsā b. Wardān al-Qurashī al-ʿAmirī (d. 117/735) *—Egyptian. He was a qāṣṣ in Egypt (Yaḥyā b. Maʿīn, Tārīkh, 4:438, 440; Ibn Shāhīn, Tārīkh asmāʾ al-thiqāt, 223; Ibn ʿAsākir, Dimashq, 61:227; Dhahabī, Mizān, 6:568), who replaced 'Uqba b. Muslim as qāṣṣ there (Ibn ʿAsākir, Dimashq, 61:227; see # 75). He was generally considered sound in his ḥadīth transmissions ('Ijlī, Maʾrifa, 2:305; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:191). He was a friend of 'Umar b. 'Abd al-ʿAzīz and enjoyed direct access to him until an altercation over Mūsāʾs involvement in commerce prompted 'Umar to restrict Mūsāʾs access to him (Ibn ʿAsākir, Dimashq, 61:225–7).
- Qatāda b. Di'āma al-Sudūsī (d. 117/735) *—Basran. He was a highly respected 71. scholar known for his knowledge of Jābir b. 'Abd Allāh's recitation of the Qur'ān (saḥīfa), for his extensive commentary on the Qur'ān ('Abd al-Razzāq al-Ṣan'ānī, for example, cites him more than any other commentator), and for his reliability as a hadith transmitter possessed of an outstanding memory and, in fact, did not attach isnāds to his transmissions until challenged to do so by Hammād b. Abī Sulaymān (d. 120/738); (Ibn Sa'd, Tabagāt, 9:228, 230; Jāhiz, Bayān, 1:242). He allegedly forbade the repetition of hadīth by claiming that the Torah also forbade it (Jāhiz, Bayān, 1:104). He was listed with al-Zuhrī, al-A'mash and al-Kalbī as one of the four greatest scholars of that era (Jāhiz, Bayān, 1:242). Moreover, when the caliph Sulayman b. 'Abd al-Malik pitted him against al-Zuhrī in a contest of religious knowledge, Qatāda won the day (Jāḥiz, Bayān, 1:243). He was allegedly an ardent supporter of the Umayyads (Jāhiz, Bayān, 1:243). He "gave qasas" transmitting a Prophetic tradition on the efficacy of the last ten verses of Sūrat al-Kahf (18) in warding off the anti-Christ (Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 45:527–8; Nasā'ī, Sunan, 6:236) and describing the closeness of the day of resurrection (Tabarī, Tārīkh, 1:10). For other references to him as a qāṣṣ, see Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:262. See also C. Pellat, "Katāda b. Di'āma," EI2, 4:748.
- 72. Muḥammad b. Kaʿb al-Quraz̄ī (d. 118/736) * a—Medinan. His father was a captive from the Jewish tribe of Banū Qurayz̄a (Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:684). His learning and piety were praised extensively with some even claiming that he was the fulfillment of a prophecy by the Prophet concerning the coming of a descendant of the Jews who will set a new standard for understanding the Qurʾān (Ibn Saʿd, Tabaqāt, 7:420; ʿIjlī, Maʿrifa, 2:251; Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 5:351; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:685). The pious caliph 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz sought his commentary on the Qur'ān, in particular asking about the identity of the son that Abraham was commanded to sacrifice (Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 1:298–9, 484–5) and also asked him to admonish him (Jāḥiz, Bayān, 3:143). He died while giving qaṣaṣ, when the mosque of Medina fell on him and his colleagues (Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 7:420; Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 5:351; Ibn Manjuwayh, Rijāl Muslim, 2:204; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq 55:150). On him as a qāṣṣ, see also Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 7:420; Ibn Abī Shayba, Muṣannaf, 5:290. See also Abū Nu'aym, Ḥilya, 3:247–56; Ibn al-Jawzī, Ṣifa, 2:132–4; Sezgin, GAS, 1:32.

73. Maʿbad b. Khālid al-ʿAdwānī al-Bajalī (d. 118/736) * a—Kufan. He was a reputable hadīth transmitter, eloquent speaker, ascetic and qāṣṣ to the governor of Iraq Khālid al-Qaṣrī (d. 126/743); (Ibn al-Kalbī, Jamharat al-nasab, 2:185; Dhahabī, Siyar, 5:205). Before pursuing a life of religious worship and qaṣaṣ, he was a security official of the Umayyads. On him, see al-Qādī, "Security Positions."

74. Nufayʻ (Nāfiʻ) b. al-Ḥārith (d. 120–30/738–47)—Kufan. He is Abū Dāʾūd al-Aʿmā al-Hamdānī al-Sabīʿī. As a Rāfiḍī, he was deemed a weak ḥadīth transmitter; a Basran contemporary of his, the qāṣṣ Qatāda, called him a liar in ḥadīth (Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 1:267; 'Uqaylī, Þuʿafāʾ, 4:306–7; Ibn ʿAdī, Kāmil, 7:59–60; Ibn Ḥajar, Lisān, 6:173–4; idem, Tahdhīb, 4:239–40). On him as a qāṣṣ, see Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 1:267; Ibn ʿAdī, Kāmil, 7:59–60; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:239–40. He is not to be confused with Nāfiʿ b. al-Ḥārith b. Kalada, the uterine brother of Ziyād b. Abīhi (on him, see Khalīfa, Ṭabaqāt, 54; G.R. Hawting, Ṭabarī: Civil War, 17:166, n. 670.).

'Uqba b. Muslim al-Tujībī (d.c. 120/738) \*—Egyptian. The earliest source to iden-75. tify him as a  $q\bar{a}ss$  is the historian of Egypt Ibn Yūnus (d. 347/958), who, cited by Ibn 'Asākir, said that 'Uqba was appointed over al-gasas (Ibn 'Asākir, 61:227; Mizzī,  $Tahdh\bar{i}b$ , 20:222). Later sources refer to him as  $q\bar{a}ss$  and the  $im\bar{a}m$  of the "old mosque," al-masjid al-'atīq, meaning almost certainly that of 'Amr b. al-'Āṣ in al-Fustāt (Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 20:222; Dhahabī, Kāshif, 2:30; idem, Tārīkh, 7:425; Ibn Hajar, Tahdhīb, 3:127). However, Ibn Abī Hātim (d. 327/938), who predates Ibn Yūnus, and is thus the earliest source to connect 'Uqba to any official position, identified him as the judge, qādī, of Egypt (Jarh, 6:316). This is clearly an orthographic mix-up, and the Egyptian tradition of Ibn Yūnus is to be preferred. 'Uqba apparently enjoyed enough respect in Egypt that when the governor Hanzala b. Şafwān left al-Fustāt in 103/721, he appointed him as his acting governor (Kindī, Wulāt, 93). He was a trustworthy hadīth transmitter (Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 6:437; 'Ijlī, Ma'rifa, 2:142; Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 5:228; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 20:222; Ibn Hajar, Tahdhīb, 3:127).

76. Al-Julāḥ, Abū Kathīr al-Rūmī (d. 120/738) *—Egyptian (Alexandrian). He was a mawlā of an Umayyad: either 'Abd al-'Azīz b. Marwān, 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz or

'Abd al-Raḥman b. 'Abd al-'Azīz (Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 2:254; Abū Dāwūd, Sunan, 1:275; Nasā'ī, Sunan, 1:526; Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 6:158; Bayhaqī, Sunan, 5:293; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 5:177; Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 7:339; Ṣafadī, Wāfī, 11:137; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:321). Ibn Yūnus said he was appointed over al-qaṣaṣ in Alexandria by 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz (Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 5:178). Ḥadīths he transmitted were compiled by Muslim, Abū Dāwūd, Nasā'ī and Tirmidhī (Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 5:178).

- 77. Tawba b. Namir al-Ḥaḍramī (d. 120/738) * a—Egyptian. He became judge of Egypt in 115/733 (Ibn 'Abd al-Ḥakam, Futūḥ, 1:399; Wakī', Quḍāt, 3:230; Ibn Abī Ḥātim, Jarḥ, 2:446; Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 7:331; Ibn Ḥajar, Raf<sup>x</sup>, 109; idem, Taʿjīl al-Manfaʿa, 1:61). He was a pious man (Ibn Ḥajar, Raf<sup>x</sup>, 109; idem, Taʿjīl, 1:61) and was also the qāṣṣ of Egypt (Ibn Nāṣir al-Dīn, Tawḍīḥ al-mushtabih, 5:8; Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 7:331; Ibn Hajar, Taʿjīl al-Manfaʿa, 1:61).
- 78. 'Abd Allāh b. Zayd (d. 121/738)—Syrian. He was the qāṣṣ of Maslama b. 'Abd al-Malik's army during his siege of Constantinople in 98/716 (Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-kabūr, 5:93; Ibn Abī Ḥātim, Jarḥ, 5:88; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 28:315). Little is known about him, and most sources are even uncertain about his name (for an overview, see Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 8:71–75). He is listed variously as 'Abd Allāh b. Zayd (Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-kabūr, 5:93; Ibn Abī Ḥātim, Jarḥ, 5:88; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 28:312, 315), Khālid b. Zayd (Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 28:312; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 8:71–75), Khālid b. Yazīd (Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 8:71–75; Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 7:136) and 'Abd Allāh b. Yazīd (Ibn Ḥanbal, Musnad, 39:420; Ibn Abī 'Āṣim, Mudhakkir, 69–71; Ṭabarānī, al-Mu'jam al-kabīr, 18:78). He appears, however, to have enjoyed significant influence in Syria for he promised to protect the Syrian ḥadīth scholar Makḥūl from the powerful Umayyad advisor Rajā' b. Ḥaywa, after the latter criticized the former during one of his teaching sessions (Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 28:314–5).
- 79. 'Abd Allāh b. Kathīr (d. 122/739) *—Meccan. There is much confusion about his identity. Ibn Ḥajar notes that there are two men by this name: 'Abd Allāh b. Kathīr b. al-Muṭṭalib and 'Abd Allāh b. Kathīr al-Dārī al-Makkī (Tahdhīb, 2:407–8). Ibn Abī Ḥātim, however, lists a certain 'Abd Allāh b. Kathīr b. al-Muṭṭalib from the Banū 'Abd al-Dār who seems to combine aspects of the two (Jarḥ, 5:144). Ibn Sa'd lists only al-Dārī al-Makkī and mentions that he was trustworthy in ḥadīth. Ibn Ḥibbān lists only Ibn al-Muṭṭalib and claims that he died in 120/737. Meanwhile, other reports claim that Sufyān b. 'Uyayna (d. 196/811) saw a certain 'Abd Allāh b. Kathīr, the "qāṣṣ al-ʿāmma," in Mecca in the year 122/739 (Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-awsat, 1:305; Fākihī, Akhbār, 2:339).
- 80. Muḥammad b. Qays (d.c. 125–6/743–4) *—Medinan. He was the mawlā of either Muʿāwiya b. Abī Sufyān or Yaʿqūb the Copt (Ibn Saʿd, Ṭabaqāt, 7:511; Ibn ʿAsākir, Dimashq, 55:108, 113; though this may be the result of confusion with another Muḥammad b. Qays [al-Zayyāt]; see Ibn ʿAsākir, Dimashq, 55:110; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 26:323, 326), a distinguished scholar of Medina (Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 7:511) and the qāṣṣ of 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz (Yaḥyā b. Ma'īn, Tārīkh, 3:195; Fasawī, Ma'rifa, 1:324, 3:170; Ibn Abī Ḥātim, Jarḥ, 8:63; Dūlābī, Kunā, 1:313; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 55:108–14; Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 8:226; Ibn Kathīr, Tafsīr, 4:60; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:455, 681). While Bukhārī identified him as the judge, qāḍī, of 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz (al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 1:212), al-Nawawī said that this was incorrect (Sharḥ, 17:64). Not only was he a reputable ḥadīth scholar, so were his father and mother (see Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:455 and 4:704, respectively). He was a prolific commentator on the Qur'ān (Ṭabarī, Tafsīr, passim; Tārīkh, 3:1195). He was also a colleague of 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz and was allegedly with him when he was designated caliph (Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 55:109). See also, Khalīfa, Tabaqāt, 259.

- 81. Darrāj b. Simʻān (d. 126/744)—Egyptian. A mawlā of ʻAbd Allāh b. ʻAmr b. al-ʿĀṣ, he was a scholar of mixed reputation (Yaḥyā b. Maʻīn, Tārīkh, 4:413; Ibn Abī Ḥātim, Jarḥ, 3:441; Ibn ʻAsākir, Dimashq, 17:224; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 8:478—9; Dhahabī, Mīzān, 3:41; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:574). He related ḥadīth and gave Qurʾān commentary on a number of issues including punishment in hell-fire (al-Ḥākim al-Naysābūrī, Mustadrak, 2:269; Ṭabarī, Tafsīr, 1:378, 15:239, 265, 16:228; 29:155; Ibn ʻAsākir, Dimashq, 17:218—9) and dhikr (Yaḥyā b. Maʻīn, Tārīkh, 4:413; Ibn ʻAdī, Kāmil, 3:113; Ibn ʻAsākir, Dimashq, 17:220; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 8:479). Ibn Yūnus reported that he was a qāṣṣ (Fasawī, Maʻrifa, 3:259; Ibn Abī Ḥātim, Jarḥ, 3:441; Ibn ʻAsākir, Dimashq, 17:225; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 8:477; Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 8:90; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:574). See also Abbott, Studies II, 239.
- 'Abd al-Rahmān b. al-Qāsim b. Muhammad b. Abī Bakr (d. 126/744) \* a—Meccan. 82. He was the great-grandson of the first caliph and the son of one of the seven fugahā' of Medina. His reputation as a scholar was impeccable (Ibn Sa'd, Tabagāt, 7:452; Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 5:339; Ibn Hibbān, Thigāt, 7:62; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 35:329). Such was his reputation that, when the caliph Hishām learned that 'Abd al-Raḥman was on his way to Syria to complain about the governor in Medina Khālid b. 'Abd al-Malik, Hishām removed Khālid before even meeting with 'Abd al-Rahman (Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 35:329). He died in Syria in 126/744 while on a separate delegation to the caliph al-Walīd b. Yazīd, who requested the advice of a few Medinan legal scholars on the issue of divorce before consummation (Ibn Sa'd, Tabaqāt, 7:452; Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 7:62; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 35:227; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 2:545). Only Fākihī mentions him as a  $q\bar{a}ss$ , although here his identity is uncertain. In his section on al-qasas in Mecca, Fākihī recorded that 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. al-Qāsim was "a  $q\bar{a}$ ss who delivered qaṣaṣ in Mecca," (Akhbār, 2:338). While a report found earlier in the same work says that a certain 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. al-Qāsim b. Ḥasan was a qāṣṣ in Mecca (Akhbār, 2:308), this person is unidentifiable and may be a mistake for 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. al-Qāsim b. Muḥammad. While Ibn Sa'd ( $\underline{\textit{Tabaqāt}}$ , 7:452) identified him as a judge, orthographical similarities further complicate our ability to identify him with any degree of certainty.

Thābit b. Aslam al-Bunānī (d. 127/744) * a—Basran. He was a leading scholar 83. in Basra who was praised as a muhaddith and was noted as being one of the three best transmitters from Anas b. Malik, along with al-Zuhrī and Qatāda (Ibn Abī Hātim, Jarh, 2:449; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 4:347; Ibn Hajar, Tahdhīb, 1:262–3; Suyūtī, Tabaqāt al-huffāz, 1:57) and as an ascetic (Ibn Sa'd, Tabaqāt, 9:231-2; Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 2:159; Ibn Hibbān, Mashāhīr, 1:89; idem, Thiqāt, 4:89). He was also a respected qāṣṣ (Ibn Abī Ḥātim, Jarḥ, 2:449; Ibn 'Adī, Kāmil, 2:100; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 4:346-7; Dhahabī, Siyar, 5:221; Suyūṭī, Tabaqāt al-ḥuffāz, 1:57). His most prolific student, Hammad b. Salama, put him to the test as a qass in an attempt to see whether he was a poor hadith scholar, as was generally thought of the quṣṣāṣ, and he passed the test with flying colors (Ibn Abī Ḥātim, Jarḥ, 2:449; Ibn 'Adī, Kāmil, 2:100; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 4:347; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:263). He apparently enjoyed such distinction in Basra that the mosque where he taught became known as "the mosque of Thābit al-Bunānī" (Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 2:92). On him, see also Khalīfa, Ṭabaqāt, 214.

Jahm b. Safwān (d. 128/746)—Khurāsānī. He was the qāss for al-Hārith b. Suravi's 84. "Black Banners" revolution against the Umayyads (Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 2:1919-20), though Ibn Ḥajar recorded that he was the "judge" for the army (Lisān al-mīzān, 2:179). He was selected by al-Hārith to represent him as an arbitrator, opposite Muqātil b. Ḥayyān, who represented the Umayyad governor of Khurāsān, Naṣr b. Sayyār. He was able to secure a decision that Nasr abdicate and that the governor be selected by a council (Tabarī, Tārīkh, 2:1919–20). When Nasr rejected the decision, Jahm continued to give qasas in his tent in al-Hārith's camp (Tabarī, Tārīkh, 2:1919) and was later executed by the governor's forces (Tabarī, Tārīkh, 2:1924; 'Askarī, Awā'il, 115; Ibn Ḥajar, Lisān, 2:179). The politically and militarily charged context for his qasas indicates that the intention of his sessions was to foment opposition against his enemies and was not simply to provide religious education or entertaining anecdotes. Furthermore, he was immortalized as the namesake of a heresy named al-Jahmiyya, holding that the Qur'an was created and denied that God possessed eternal knowledge ('Askarī, Awā'il, 115; see also W.M. Watt, "Djahm b. Ṣafwān" and "Djahmiyya," EI2, 2:388; van Ess, TG, 2:507–8). 'Abd al-Wāḥid b. Zayd (d. 128/746) a—Basran. Even though he was a popular 85. ascetic (Jāḥiz, Burṣān, 282) and qāṣṣ (Juzjānī, Aḥwāl al-rijāl, 116; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 37:223) in Basra, he was considered a weak hadīth transmitter (Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 6:61; idem, al-Du'afā' al-ṣaghīr, 1:76; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 37:22-4). In addition to transmitting many sayings of an ascetic nature, there are a number of anecdotes of miraculous occurrences befalling him. In one account, paralysis struck him in old age, leaving him supine. Then, when he wanted to perform  $wud\bar{u}$ , either possibly for prayer (Ibn al-Jawzī, Muntazam, 7:268) or after defecating (Jāḥiz,  $Burṣ\bar{a}n$ , 283), God released him temporarily from the paralysis until he completed his washing.

86. Maṭar b. Ṭahmān al-Warrāq (d. 129/747)—Basran. Originally from Khurāsān, he then moved to Basra. Opinions on his status as a ḥadīth scholar are mixed (Ibn Saʿd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:253; Dhahabī, Siyar, 5:452–3; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:87–8). He was known primarily for his asceticism (Abū Nuʿaym, Ḥilya, 3:89–92; Dhahabī, Siyar, 5:452) and made his living by making copies of the Qurʾān (Dhahabī, Siyar, 5:452). A certain Shayba bt. al-Aswad reported that she saw him giving qaṣaṣ (Abū Nuʿaym, Ḥilya, 3:90; Dhahabī, Siyar, 5:453; idem, Tārīkh, 8:269). See also Abbott, Studies II, 229–30.

Salama b. Dīnār (d. 130-40/748-57) * a—Medinan. He is often identified as Abū 87. Hāzim al-A'raj ("the lame"). Considered a reputable ḥadīth scholar, he was best known as an ascetic (Ibn Sa'd, Tabagāt, 7:515; Jāhiz, Bayān, 1:364; Ibn Hibbān, Mashāhīr, 1:79; idem, Thigāt, 4:316; Abū Nu'aym, Hilya, 3:266–97; Sam'ānī, Ansāb, 1:188; Şafadī, Wāfī, 15:198). He gave qaṣaṣ after the morning (fajr) and afternoon ('aṣr) prayers in the mosque in Medina (Ibn Sa'd, Tabaqāt, 7:515; Ibn Qutayba, Ma'arif, 479; Sam'anī, Ansāb, 1:188; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 22:20; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 11:272, 278; Dhahabī, Siyar, 6:101; Safadī, Wāfī, 15:199). Once, while giving qasas, he began weeping and wiping his face with his tears. When asked why he was doing this, he said: "Hell-fire does not hit the spots that tears of fear of God have touched;" (Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 22:26; Safadī, Wāfī, 15:199). While the Caliph Sulaymān b. 'Abd al-Malik (or possibly his nephew Sulaymān b. Hishām b. 'Abd al-Malik), attended his sessions (Ibn Sa'd, Tabagāt, 7:515) and once sent the distinguished al-Zuhrī to bring Abū Hāzim to him, the qāss refused to go, saying: "I have no need of him, so if he has a need, let him come to me;" (Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 4:316). It seems, nevertheless, that the two men did meet (Jāḥiz, Bayān, 3:142).

88. Muqātil b. Ḥayyān (d. 135/753) * a—Khurasanan. He is identified as having given qaṣaṣ and weeping only in the 6th/13th century Persian work of Abū Bakr ʿAbd Allāh b. Dāvūd Balkhī's Faṣaʾil-i Balkh (154) citing Wasīm b. Jamīl al-Thaqafī (d. 182/798); (see also van Ess, TG, 2:513). Muqātil, like his namesake, Muqātil b. Sulaymān, was a supporter of the Umayyad governor of Khurāsān, Naṣr b. Sayyār. The two first acted together as representatives of Naṣr in his negotiations with the anti-Umayyad rebel al-Ḥārith b. Surayj (Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 2:1918). Later, Naṣr chose Muqātil b. Ḥayyān and al-Ḥarīth selected Jahm b. Ṣafwān to arbitrate their differences. Muqātil proved to be a poor negotiator and it was decided that Naṣr abdicate and allow the government to be decided by a council (Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 2:1919). Muqātil was considered a sound ḥadīth scholar (Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:142), Qur'ān commentator (van Ess, TG, 2:514–6) and ascetic (Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:142). While Van Ess alleged that he was also a judge, Crone challenged this and other conclusions van Ess drew from Faẓa'il-i Balkh (van Ess, TG, 2:514–6; Crone, "Note," 243–5). According to van Ess, his tafsīr displayed qaṣaṣ tendencies because of its alleged midrashic forms (TG, 2:514). He spent the latter years of his life as a missionary in Kābul (Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:142).

89. Khayr b. Nu'aym al-Hadramī, Abū Ismā'īl (d. 137/754) \* a—Egyptian. He was the scribe of the judge and  $q\bar{a}ss$  Tawba b. Namir, who recommended him for the judiciary (Ibn 'Abd al-Hakam, Misr, 1:399). His first judgeship was in Barga (modern day Libya); (Sam'ānī, Ansāb, 1:88; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 8:372; Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 8:408; Ibn Hajar, Tahdhīb, 1:560). He held the position of judge in Egypt from 121–128/738–745 (Ibn 'Abd al-Hakam, Misr, 1:400; Kindī, Wulāt, 25–7; Ibn Abī Hātim, Jarh, 3:404; Sam'ānī, Ansāb, 1:88; Ibn Ḥajar, Tadhdhīb, 1:560; Suyūṭī, Ḥusn al-Maḥāḍara, 260). He was a sound scholar and was considered one of the most respected fugahā' of Egypt (Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 3:229; Ibn Abī Hātim, Jarh, 3:404; Ibn Hibbān, Thigāt, 6:277; Sam'ānī, Ansāb, 1:88; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 8:373; Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 8:408; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:560). After judgeship, he was appointed by 'Abd al-Malik b. Marwan b. Mūsa al-Nusayrī (on him see Kindī, Wulāt Miṣr, 116) over the dīwān of letters (Ibn Ḥajar, Raf al-iṣr, 156). He was also a qāṣṣ (Samʿānī, Ansāb, 1:88; Ibn al-Jawzī, Muntazam, 8:17; Ibn Mākūla, Ikmāl, 2:18). In early 'Abbasid times and upon the insistence of the people of Egypt, he was reinstated as judge from 133–135/750–52 (Ibn 'Abd al-Hakam, Misr, 1:400; Ibn Hajar, Raf al-isr, 1:217).

Al-Fadl b. 'Īsā al-Raqāshī (d.c. mid-second/eighth century)—Basran. He was the 90. nephew of the Basran qāss Yazīd b. Abān (Jāhiz, Bayān, 1:290; Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-awsat, 2:67; Ibn Hibbān, Majrūhīn, 2:211; Ibn Hajar, Tahdhīb, 3:394). He related rejected hadīth from well-known sources such as his uncle and the famous Basran scholar al-Hasan al-Basrī (Abū Dā'ūd, Su'ālāt, 1:277; Ibn Hibbān, Majrūhīn, 2:211; Ibn Hajar, Tahdhīb, 3:394). Not only was he accused of being a Qadarī, he was said also to have been a missionary for the cause (dā'iya ilā al-qadar); (Ibn Hibbān, Majrūḥīn, 2:211; see also Jāḥiz, Bayān, 1:290; Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-awsat, 2:67; Ibn Hajar, Tahdhīb, 3:394). Ibn Abī Khaythama is reported as having said that "he was a  $q\bar{a}$ ss and he was a bad man  $(rajul \, s\bar{u}')$ ;" (Ibn Ḥajar,  $Tahdh\bar{\iota}b$ , 3:394). According to Jāḥiz, he recited verses mentioning heaven and hell, death and resurrection, and similar topics, and when he was challenged about his Qur'an tafsīr, he retorted: "Do you perceive that I am forbidding the allowable and allowing the forbidden?" (Bayān, 1:291). Jāḥiz also included him among the quṣṣāṣ of Basra whom he said were more eloquent than the orators ( $khutab\bar{a}$ ) of the city and claimed that he used to deliver his qaṣaṣ in rhymed prose (saj'); (Jāḥiz, Bayān, 1:291, 306). Ibn Ḥajar identified him as "the admonisher" (al- $w\bar{a}$ 'iz); ( $Tahdh\bar{u}b$ , 3:394). His knowledge of religion was allegedly so keen that the  $fuqah\bar{a}$ ' of Basra sat in his sessions ( $Bay\bar{a}n$ , 1:291, 306). Ibn Qutayba erroneously listed him among the judges (Ma'arif, 476).

91. 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Yazīd (n.d.) *—Yemenī. Ibn Ḥajar lists him with the nisba al-Ṣanʿānī al-Qāṣṣ al-Abnāwī, indicating that he was a Yemenī qāṣṣ from the abnā' who originally were of Persian descent (Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 5:115; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 2:567). It is uncertain if he remained in Yemen or traveled to other areas of the empire. He transmitted ḥadīth on the authority of Abū Hurayra and Ibn 'Umar. Among those who transmitted upon his authority is a qāṣṣ named 'Abd Allāh b. Baḥīr b. Raysān who lived most of his life under the 'Abbāsids (Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 2:305–6). He was allegedly more knowledgeable than Wahb b. Munabbih in al-ḥalāl wa-l-ḥarām (Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 2:567).

92. Al-Naḍr b. 'Amr al-Ḥimyarī (n.d.)—Syrian. He was a Qur'ān reciter (Khalīfa, Tārīkh, 358) and one of the quṣṣās of the people of Syria (Marwazī, Ta'zīm qadr al-ṣalāt, 2:675–7). He was briefly in charge of prayer in 110/728, during the reign of Hishām b. 'Abd al-Malik (r. 105–25/724–743), and was, during the caliphate of Yazīd b. al-Walīd (r. 126/744), in charge of the kharāj, the jund (i.e. the stipends register), the "small" seal (al-khātim al-ṣaghīr) and the guard (al-ḥaras); (Khalīfa, Tārīkh, 371; Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 2:839).

93. Hilāl, Abū Ṭuʿma (n.d.)—Egyptian. Originally from Syria, he was a mawlā of 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz. He moved to Egypt where he gave qaṣaṣ (Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 74:98), recited Qurʾān and transmitted ḥadīth (Ibn Abī Ḥātim, Tlal, 2:35; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 74:98–100; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:541–2). See also Ibn Ḥanbal, Tlal, 2:184; idem, Musnad, 8:405–6, 9:288–90; Bayhaqī, Sunan, 6:12.

94. Sumayr (Samīr?) b. 'Abd al-Raḥman (n.d.)—Basran. The only source identifying him as a qāss is al-Dārimī (Sunan, 1:110).

95. Muḥammad b. 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Khālid (n.d.) * a—Kufan. He is Abū 'Amr al-Malā'ī (Muslim, Kunā, 2:782), so called because he sold linens (malā') at the door of the mosque in Kufa (al-Khaṭīb al-Baghdādī, Mūḍiḥ, 2:393; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:625, 4:564). He gave qaṣaṣ, and is often referred to as Abū 'Amr al-qāṣṣ (Yaḥyā b. Maʿīn, Tārīkh, 3:478; Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 1:154; Muslim, Kunā, 2:782; Ibn Abī Ḥātim, Jarḥ, 7:320; al-Khaṭīb al-Baghdādī, Mūḍiḥ, 2:391–4; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:564).

96. Yaʻqūb b. Mujāhid, Abū Ḥazra (d. 149/766) *—Medinan. A mawlā of the Banū Makhzūm (Ibn Saʻd, Ṭabaqāt, 7:555; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:446), he was considered a trustworthy ḥadīth transmitter, though with few *ḥadīth*s, and was widely identified as a qāṣṣ in Medina (Ibn Saʻd, Ṭabaqāt, 7:555; Yaḥyā b. Maʻīn, Tārīkh, 3:182; Ibn Abī Shayba Suʾalāt, 91; Ibn Qutayba, Maʻārif, 1:491; Ibn Abī Ḥātim, Jarḥ, 2:103, 9:215; Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 7:640; Ibn Manjuwayh, Rijāl, 1:380; Bayhaqī, Sunan, 4:118; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 31:228, 32:236; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 32:361). Ibn 'Asākir identified him as a qāḍī, although this seems to be an error in the manuscript edition (Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 31:228).

Muqātil b. Sulaymān (d. 150/767) a—Khurasanan. Originally from Balkh, he 97. moved to Marw and became known as a Qur'an commentator whose tafsir is extant. He was widely criticized for his weakness in hadīth (Ibn Hibbān, Majrūhīn, 3:14–15; Ibn 'Adī, Kāmil, 6:437; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 60:123; Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 9:640–1; idem, Mīzān, 6:505). He gave gasas in the mosque in Marw (Ibn 'Adī, Kāmil, 6:437; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 60:123; Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 9:641; idem, Mīzān, 6:505), and it was there that he encountered Jahm b. Şafwān. Opposition arose between the two and they allegedly wrote refutations of each other (Ibn 'Adī, Kāmil, 6:497; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 60:123; Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 9:641; idem, Mīzān, 6:505: Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:143). Both men were later criticized for their theological positions—Mugātil for anthropomorphism and Jahm for denying God's attributes (Ibn Hibbān, Majrūhīn, 3:15-6; Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 9:641). According to Tabarī's account of events in Khurāsān, the opposition between them may have been political: in 128/746 Jahm supported al-Ḥārith b. Surayj's rebellion against the Umayyad governor of Khurāsān, Naṣr b. Sayyār, whom Muqātil b. Sulaymān supported (Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 2:1917-21). Thus, it may be that Muqātil's qaṣaṣ were not merely religious. Indeed, Jahm was identified as a  $q\bar{a}ss$  only because he supported al-Hārith b. Surayj's forces against Nasr b. Sayyār and not for any of his religious instructions (see #84).

'Umar b. Dharr b. 'Abd Allāh b. Zurāra (d. 156/773) \* a—Kufan. He was a respected 98. ascetic (Abū Nu'aym, Hilya, 5:125-37), a gāss ('Ijlī, Ma'rifa, 2:165; Ibn Hibbān, Thiqāt, 7:168) and a trustworthy scholar in hadīth ('Ijlī, Ma'rifa, 2:165; Ibn Abī Ḥātim, Jarḥ, 6:107; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 21:335-6). While listed among the Murji'a, he was said to have not been militant in his advocacy of Murji'ism ('Ijlī, Ma'rifa, 2:165; Ibn Hibbān, Thiqāt, 7:168; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 21:336). The type of gasas that Umar engaged in is unclear. He was connected as a  $q\bar{a}ss$  to the political upheavals in Khurāsān at the time of the 'Abbāsid revolution and "gave qaṣaṣ and incited [the people]" in Wāsiṭ in 132/750 against Abū Muslim's forces (Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 8:405). When the region was conquered by the 'Abbasids, he was singled out, along with other supporters of the local Umayyad governor, Yūsuf b. Hubayra, as one who would not be granted amnesty. However, upon the intercession of Ziyād b. 'Ubayd Allāh, he was pardoned and died almost a quarter of a century later (Tabarī, Tārīkh, 3:69; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 16:93–4; Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 8:404–5). The sources intimate that 'Umar engaged in both religious and martial qaṣaṣ. The rijāl-books of 'Ijlī and Ibn Ḥibbān offer no indication that his qaṣaṣ was 99.

connected to the political events of the day and lead us to believe that he was purely religious. The history works, on the other hand, clearly associate his qa$a$ to his advocacy of the Umayyad cause. It is possible that 'Ijlī and Ibn Ḥibbān were aware that his position as  $q\bar{a}$$$  carried with it political affiliations, for they both identify him as a Murji'ī at a time when the Murji'a was a politico-religious movement (W. Madelung, "Murdji'a," EI2, 7:605–7). 'Umar, therefore, presents an important example of the confluence of both aspects of qa$a$.

Sulaymān b. 'Amr, Abū al-Haytham (n.d.) *—Egyptian. He was an orphan who was cared for by Abū Saʿīd al-Khudrī, the distinguished Companion of the Prophet (Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-kabūr, 4:27; Tirmidhī, Sunan, 4:708). Moving from Medina to Egypt in search of income and a livelihood (Fasawī, Maʿrifa, 2:254), he became the qāṣṣ of the community (qāṣṣ al-jamāʿa) in Egypt at the end of Umayyad rule. When he was later removed by the 'Abbāsids, he complained, seemingly feigning ignorance of the political sensitivities of qaṣaṣ, saying: "You did not have to remove me, I am a [mere] qāṣṣ. If you told me, "Add to your stories," I would have added, and if you said, "Shorten [them]," then I would have shortened them. So you did not have to remove me;" (Fasawī, Maʿrifa, 2:254). While his response seems conciliatory, it may in fact be sarcastic and indicative of an awareness of how qaṣaṣ adapted to the religio-political needs of the moment. See also Ibn Saʿd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:519; Yaḥyā b. Maʿīn, Tārīkh, 4:424; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 12:50–1; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 2:104–5.

Al-Qāsim b. Mujāshi' (d. 169/785)—Khurasanan. He was one of the twelve lead-100. ers (nuqabā', sg. naqīb) of Abū Muslim (Akhbār al-dawla al-'abbāsiyya, 217, 291; Balādhurī, Ansāb, 3:115; Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 2:1358). An Arab from the tribe of Kinda (Kalbī, Jamharat al-nasab, 1:80, 11:466; Balādhurī, Ansāb, 3:135; Ibn Hazm, Jamhara, 1:214), he appears to have been the religious man of Abū Muslim's forces, for he was the usual choice for leading the people in prayer (in the village of Fanīn [see Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 2:1953]; in Marw [2:1964]; in al-Mākhuwān [2:1968]; in the village of Alīn [2:1969-70]). He was appointed judge in al-Mākhuwān (Tabarī, Tārīkh, 2:1968) and gave qasas after the evening prayers recounting the virtues and rights to leadership of the Banū Hāshim and the vices and tyranny of the Banū 'Umayya (Akhbār al-dawla, 280; Ṭabarī, Tārīkh, 2:1968; Ibn al-Jawzī, Muntazam, 7:272; Ibn Khaldūn, Tārīkh, 3:150). This is the only forum in which he gave qaṣaṣ, for the biographical dictionaries, hadīth works, and commentaries fail to mention him. Al-Qasim was an active fighter who played leading roles in some of Abū Muslim's campaigns in 129–30/747–8 (Akhbār al-dawla, 323, 327; Balādhurī, Ansāb, 3:135; Tabarī, Tārīkh, 2:1986–8, 2000–2). He died in Marw in relative isolation from the 'Abbasid leaders due to his support of the 'Alid right to the leadership of the community (Tabarī, Tārīkh, 3:532).

312 APPENDIX

101. Sālim b. Abī Ḥafṣa—(d.c. 140/757) *—Kufan. He was staunchly pro-ʿAlid, supported the assassination of ʿUthmān, and gloated at the fall the Umayyads, saying, when he entered Mecca on the ḥajj that he was "the destroyer of the Umayyads;" (Ibn Saʻd, Tabaqāt, 8:454–5; Yaḥyā b. Maʿīn, Tārīkh, 3:469; Ṭabarī, Muntakhab, 150; 'Uqaylī, Duʿafā', 2:152–3; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 10:134–8; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:675). In spite of his alleged excessive Shīʿism, some (like Ibn Ḥanbal and Yaḥyā b. Maʿīn) considered by to be trustworthy in ḥadīth transmission (Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 10:135; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:675). However, other scholars, like Nasāʾī and Dūlābī, considered him weak (Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 10:135; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:675). His qaṣaṣ was politically-based: he began by recalling the virtues of Abū Bakr and 'Umar, then moved to those of 'Alī in order to set up qaṣaṣ in praise of 'Alī ('Uqaylī, Duʿafā', 2:153; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 10:136)

'Uthmān b. Abī al-ʿĀtika (d.c. 155/772)—Syrian. He was a teacher (muʻallim), Qurʾān reciter and qāṣṣ of Damascus. Most sources identify him as a qāṣṣ (Yaḥyā b. Maʿīn, Tārīkh, 4:420; Ibn Ḥanbal, 'Ilal, 2:473; Fasawī, Maʿrifa, 1:132, 2:433; Dūlābī, Kunā, 2:473; 'Uqaylī, Duʿafāʾ, 3:221; Ibn Abī Ḥātim, Jarḥ, 6:163; Ibn 'Adī, Kāmil, 6:164–5; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 38:391–7; Dhahabī, Mīzān, 5:53; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:65). According to one report, he was a weak ḥadīth transmitter because he was a qaṣṣ: "He was a qāṣṣ; if there was any problem [in the ḥadīth] then it was from that;" ('Uqaylī, Duʿafāʾ, 3:221; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 38:394; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 3:65). In some reports, he is identified specifically as "the qāṣṣ of the jund (administrative region) of Damascus;" (Ibn Abī Ḥātim, Jarḥ, 6:163; Ibn 'Asākir, Dimashq, 38:396).

103. Al-Nahhās b. Qahm (d. mid-second/eighth century)—Basran. He was rejected by the <code>hadīth</code>-folk as untrustworthy ('Uqaylī, <code>Du'afā'</code>, 4:312; Ibn Abī Ḥātim, <code>Jarḥ</code>, 8:511; Ibn Ḥibbān, <code>Majrūḥīn</code>, 3:56; Ibn 'Adī, <code>Kāmil</code>, 7:58; Ibn Ḥajar, <code>Tahdhīb</code>, 4:243), although some of his transmissions are included in Bukhārī, Abū Dāwūd and Tirmidhī (Mizzī, <code>Tahdhīb</code>, 30:31). Ibn Ḥanbal and Yaḥyā b. Ma'īn identified him as a <code>qāṣṣ</code> (Ibn Ḥanbal, <code>Ilal</code>, 2:497; Yaḥyā b. Ma'īn, <code>Tārīkh</code>, 4:148, 252; Mizzī, <code>Tahdhīb</code>, 30:29–30; Ibn Ḥajar, <code>Tahdhīb</code>, 4:243). Ibn al-Jawzī recorded a Prophetic tradition by al-Nahhās, believed to have been fabricated, concerning the multiple blessings that the believer would receive in paradise by praying at 'Arafāt (<code>Mawdū'āt</code>, 2:54).

104. 'Abd al-'Azīz b. Abī Sulaymān al-Hudhalī (d. mid-second/eighth century) * a—Medinan. He was a reliable hadīth transmitter, pious ascetic, admonisher and mudhakkir (Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 7:577; Ibn Abī Ḥātim, Jarh, 5:384; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 2:586). Ibn Ḥajar identified him as the qāṣṣ of the people of Medina (Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 2:586). He transmitted ḥadīth from the scholars of the Ḥijāz, such as Muhammad b. Ka'b al-Qurazī (# 72); (Ibn Abī Ḥātim, Jarh, 5:384; Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 7:114). Though his death date is uncertain, he is said to have died at a very old age (Ibn Sa'd, Ṭabaqāt, 7:577).

106.

105. Yūnus b. Khabbāb (d. mid-second/eighth century)—Kufan. Only 'Uqaylī identified him as a qāṣṣ (Duʿafāʾ, 4:458). He was a staunch Shīʿī, a Rāfiḍī, who openly vilified 'Uthmān (Fasawī, Maʿrifa, 3:98, 191; 'Uqaylī, Duʿafāʾ, 4:458; Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 32:506–7; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:468–9). He was widely disparaged as a ḥadīth transmitter, although Abū Dāwūd claimed that the ḥadīth that Shuʿba transmitted on his authority were acceptable (Mizzī, Tahdhīb, 32:506; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:469).

Sa'īd b. Hassān al-Makhzūmī (d. mid-second/eighth century) \*—Meccan. He enjoyed a good reputation as a ḥadīth transmitter (Yaḥyā b. Ma'īn, Tārīkh, 3:62; Fasawī, Ma'rifa, 3:240; Ibn Abī Ḥātim, Jarḥ, 4:12; al-Ḥākim al-Naysābūrī, Mustadrak, 2:557; Sam'ānī, Ansāb, 4:428–30; Dhahabī, Tārīkh, 9:149, 398; Safadī, Wāfī, 15:130; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 2:11-12). The earliest source that associates him with any governmentally appointed position states that he was a judge (Ibn Abī Hātim, Jarh, 4:12), while the earliest source that identifies him as a gāss is al-Hākim al-Navsābūrī's Mustadrak (2:557) citing the Meccan scholar Muḥammad b. Yazīd b. Khunays (d. latter half of second/eighth century), who said: "He was the  $q\bar{a}ss$  of our congregation and used to stand before us during the month of Ramadan (kāna gāṣṣ jamā'atinā wa-kāna yagūmu binā fī shahr Ramaḍān)." Dhahabī's Tārīkh lists him twice: once as a judge who died between 140–50 and once as a qāṣṣ who died between 150–60 (Tārīkh, 9:149 and 9:398). Safadī merges aspects of the two statements by claiming that he was a judge who died around 160 (Wāfī, 15:130). Ibn Hajar's works unanimously identify him as a qāṣṣ (Taqrīb, 1:234; Tahdhīb, 2:11; Lisān, 7:234).

107. Ḥawshab b. Muslim (d. mid-second/eighth century) * a—Basran. He was one of the most important students of al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī (Abū Dāwūd, Suʾālāt, 277; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 1:507). He was an ascetic and gave qaṣaṣ (Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 6:243). He was also considered trustworthy in ḥadīth (Ibn Saʿd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:270; Ibn Ḥibbān, Thiqāt, 6:243). He made his living as a merchant of cloaks (ṭayālisa); (Ibn Saʿd, Ṭabaqāt, 9:270).

to Jāḥiz, he was one of the wonders of the world because he was equally fluent in Arabic and Persian. In his tafsīr sessions, he explained verses for the Arabs sitting on his right and then for the Persians sitting on his left and he was ostensibly one of the best Qur'ān reciters of his era (Jāḥiz, Bayān, 1:368). In spite of these commendable traits, he was accused of being a Rāfiḍī and a Qadarī (Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb, 4:177; idem, Lisān, 6:140). He transmitted ḥadīth from some reputable quṣṣāṣ of Basra, such as al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, Qatāda and Bakr b. 'Abd Allāh, although he himself was considered a weak transmitter (Ibn Ḥajar, Lisān, 6:140).

314 APPENDIX

109. Al-Haytham b. Jammāz (d. mid-second/eighth century) <sup>a</sup>—Basran. He was a qāṣṣ in Basra (Yaḥyā b. Maʿīn, Tārīkh, 4:133; Ibn ʿAdī, Kāmil, 7:101; Jūzjānī, Aḥwāl, 120; Ibn Ḥajar, Lisān, 6:26–7). He related ḥadīth from Thābit al-Bunānī and Yazīd al-Raqāshī, two reputable transmitters and quṣṣāṣ, although he himself was considered weak in ḥadīth (Ibn Ḥajar, Lisān, 6:246–7). He was also numbered among "the weepers (al-bakkāʾūn);" (Ibn ʿAdī, Kāmil, 7:101; Ibn Ḥajar, Lisān, 6:246).

Bibliography

Primary Sources

- 'Abd b. Ḥumayd. Al-Muntakhab min musnad. Edited by Ṣubḥī al-Badrī al-Sāmarrā'ī and Maḥmūd Muḥammad Khalīl al-Ṣaʿīdī. Cairo: Maktabat al-Sunna, 1988.
- 'Abd Allāh b. Aḥmad b. Ḥanbal. Al-Sunna. Edited Muḥammad b. Sa'īd b. Sālim al-Qaḥṭānī. 2 vols. al-Dammām: Dār Ibn al-Qayyim, 1986.
- 'Abd al-Razzāq b. Hammām al-Ṣanʿānī. Al-Muṣannaf. Edited by Ḥabīb al-Raḥmān al-Aʻzamī. 11 vols. Beirut: al-Maktab al-Islāmī, 1971.
- ———. Tafsīr. Edited by Maḥmūd Muḥammad 'Abduh. 3 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 1999.
- Al-Ābī, Manṣūr b. al-Ḥusayn. Nathr al-durr. Edited by Khālid 'Abd al-Ghanī Maḥfūẓ. 7 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-Ilmiyya, 2004.
- Abū 'Arūba, al-Ḥusayn b. Muḥammad. Kitāb al-awā'il. Edited by Mish'al b. Bānī al-Jabrīn al-Muṭayrī. Beirut: Dār Ibn Ḥazm, 2003.
- Abū 'Uwāna, Yaʻqūb b. Isḥāq. Musnad. Edited by Ayman b. 'Ārif al-Dimashqī. 5 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Maʻrifa, 1998.
- Abū Dāwūd al-Sijistānī, Sulaymān b. al-Ash'ath. Su'ālāt. Edited by Ziyād Muḥammad Manṣūr. Medina: Maktabat al-'Ulūm wa-l-Ḥikam, 1994.
- ——. Sunan. Edited by Muḥammad Muḥyī al-Dīn ʿAbd al-Ḥamīd. 4 vols. Cairo: Al-Maktaba al-Tijāriyya al-Kubrā, 1950–51.
- Abū al-Faraj al-Iṣfahānī. Kitāb al-aghānī. Edited by ʿAlī al-Najdī Nāṣif et al. 24 vols. Cairo: Dār al-Kutub al-Miṣriyya, 1927—74.
- Abū Ḥayyān al-Tawḥīdī, ʿAlī b. Muḥammad. Al-Baṣāʾir wa-l-dhakāʾir. Edited by Wadād al-Qāḍī. 9 vols. in 5. Beirut: Dār Ṣādir, 1988.
- Abū Khaythama al-Nasā'ī, Zuhayr b. Ḥarb. Kitāb al-ʿilm. Edited by Muḥammad Nāṣir al-Dīn al-Albānī. Beirut: al-Maktab al-Islāmī, 1983.
- Abū Nuʻaym al-Iṣfahānī, Aḥmad b. ʻAbd Allāh. Ḥilyat al-awliyā'. Edited by Muṣṭafā ʻAbd al-Qādir ʻAṭā. 12 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 1997.
- ——. Maʿrifat al-ṣaḥāba. Edited by ʿĀdil b. Yūsuf al-ʿAzzāzī. 7 vols. Riyadh: Dār al-Waṭan, 1998.
- Abū al-Shaykh, 'Abd Allāh b. Muḥammad. Tabaqāt al-muhaddithīn bi-Iṣbahān. Edited by 'Abd al-Ghafūr 'Abd al-Ḥaqq Ḥusayn al-Balūshī. 4 vols. Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Risāla, 1992.
- Abu Ya'lā al-Mawṣilī, Aḥmad b. 'Alī. Al-Mu'jam. Edited by Irshād al-Ḥaqq al-Atharī. Fayṣal-Ābād: Idārat al-'Ulūm al-Athariyya, 1986.
- ———. Al-Musnad. Edited by Ḥusayn Salīm Asad. 14 vols. Damascus: Dār al-Ma'mūn li-l-Turāth, 1984.

Abū Yūsuf, Yaʻqūb b. Ibrāhim al-Anṣārī. Kitāb al-āthār. Edited by Abū'l-Wafā' al-Afghānī. Hyderabad: Lajnat Iḥyā' al-Maʻārif al-Nuʻmaniyya, 1936. Reprint Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʻIlmiyya, n.d..

- Abū Zurʻa al-Dimashqī, ʻAbd al-Raḥmān b. ʻAmr. Tārīkh Abī Zurʻa al-Dimashqī. Edited by Shukr Allāh b. Niʻmat Allāh al-Qawjānī. 2 vols. Damascus: Majmaʻ al-Lugha al-ʻArabiyya, 1980.
- Al-Ājurrī, Muḥammad b. Ḥusayn. Akhlāq ahl al-Qur'ān. Edited by Muḥammad 'Amr b. 'Abd al-Latīf. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyya, 1986.
- Anon. Akhbār al-dawla al-ʿAbbāsiyya. Edited by ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz al-Dūrī and ʿAbd al-Jabbār al-Muṭṭalibī. Beirut: Dār al-Ṭalīʿa li-l-Ṭabāʿa wa-l-Nashr, 1971.
- Al-ʿAskarī, al-Ḥasan b. ʿAbd Allāh. Al-Awāʾil. Edited by Muḥammad al-Miṣrī and Walīd Qassāb. 2 vols. Damascus: Wizārat al-Thaqāfa wa-l-Irshād al-Qawmī, 1975.
- Al-Azdī, Muḥammad b. 'Abd Allāh. Futūḥ al-Shām. Edited by 'Iṣām Muṣṭafā 'Uqla and Yūsuf Aḥmad Banī Yāsīn. Irbid: Mu'assasat Ḥamāda li-l-Dirāsāt al-Jāmi'iyya wa-l-Nashr wa-l-Tawzī', 2004.
- Al-Azharī, Muḥammad b. Aḥmad. Tahdhīb al-lugha. Edited by Muḥammad 'Awaḍ Mur'ib et al. 15 vols. Beirut: Dār Iḥyā' Turāth al-'Arabī, 2001.
- Al-Baghawī, al-Ḥusayn b. Mas'ūd. Sharḥ al-sunna. Edited by Shu'ayb al-Arnā'ūṭ and Muḥammad Zuhayr al-Shāwīsh. 16 vols. Beirut: al-Maktab al-Islamī, 1980–.
- -----. Maʿālim al-tanzīl fī-l-tafsīr wa-l-taʾwīl (Tafsīr). Edited by Khālid ʿAbd al-Raḥmān al-ʿIkk. 4 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Maʿrifa, 1986.
- Baḥshal, Aslam b. Sahl. Tārīkh Wāsiṭ. Edited by Kūrkīs 'Awwād. Baghdad: Maṭba'at al-Ma'ārif, 1967.
- Al-Balādhurī, Aḥmad b. Yaḥyā. Ansāb al-ashrāf, 111. Edited by 'Abd al-'Azīz al-Dūrī. Bibliotheca Islamica 28c. Wiesbaden, 1978.
- ———. Ansāb al-ashrāf, IV/1. Edited by Iḥsān 'Abbās. Bibliotheca Islamica 28d. Wiesbaden, 1979.
- ———. Ansāb al-ashrāf, v. Edited by Iḥsān ʿAbbās. Bibliotheca Islamica 28g. Beirut, 1996.
- ———. Ansāb al-ashrāf, VII/2. Edited by Muḥammad al-Yaʿlāwī. Bibliotheca Islamica 28j. Beirut, 2002.
- ———. Ansāb al-ashrāf. Edited by Maḥmūd Firdaws al-'Azm. 26 vols. Damascus: Dār al-Yaqza, 1996.
- -----. Futūḥ al-Buldān. Edited by M.J. De Goeje. Leiden: Brill, 1968.
- Balkhī, 'Abd Allāh b. Dāvūd. Faṣaʾil-i Balkh. Edited by 'Abd al-Ḥayy Ḥabībī. Tehran: Bunyad-i Farhang-i Iran, 1971.
- Al-Bāqillānī, Muḥammad b. al-Ṭayyib. I'jāz al-Qur'ān. Edited by al-Sayyid Aḥmad Ṣaqr. Cairo: Dār al-Maʿārif, 1997.
- Al-Bayhaqī, Aḥmad b. al-Ḥusayn. Istidrākāt al-baʿth wa-l-nushūr. Beirut: Dār al-Fikr, 1993.

- ——. Dalā'il al-nubuwwa. 7 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyya, 1985.
- ———. Al-Madkhal ilā al-sunan al-kubrā. Edited by Muḥammad Diyā' al-Raḥmān al-A'ṭamī. Kuwait: Dār al-Khulafā' li-l-Kitāb al-Islāmī, 1983.
- ———. Shuʻab al-īmān. Edited by Muḥammad al-Saʻīd b. Basyūnī Zaghlūl. 7 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 1990.
- ———. Al-Sunan al-kubrā. Edited by Muḥammad 'Abd al-Qādir 'Aṭā. 10 vols. Mecca: Maktabat Dār al-Bāz, 1994.
- Al-Bazzār, Aḥmad b. 'Amr. Al-Baḥr al-zakhkhār (al-Musnad). Edited by Maḥfūẓ al-Raḥmān Zayn Allāh. 20 vols. Medina: Maktabat al-'Ulūm wa-l-Ḥikam, 2003—2009.
- Al-Birtī, Aḥmad b. Muḥammad. Musnad ʿAbd al-Raḥmān ibn ʿAwf. Edited by Ṣalāḥ b. ʿĀyiḍ al-Shallāḥī. Beirut: Dār Ibn Ḥazm, 1994.
- Al-Bukhārī, Muḥammad b. Ismā'īl. Al-Du'afā' al-ṣaghūr. Edited by Maḥmūd Ibrāhīm Zāyid. Aleppo: Dār al-Wa'y, 1975.
- ———. Khalq afʿāl al-ʿibād. Edited by ʿAbd al-Raḥmān ʿUmayra. Riyadh: Dār al-Maʿārif al-Suʿūdiyya, 1978.
- ———. Ṣaḥīḥ. Edited by Muṣṭafā Dīb al-Bughā. 6 vols. Beirut: Dār Ibn Kathīr, 1987.
- . Al-Tārīkh al-awsaṭ. Edited by Muḥammad b. Ibrāhīm al-Luḥaydān. 2 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Ṣumayʿī, 1998.
- ———. Al-Tārīkh al-kabīr. Edited by Hāshim al-Nadwī. 8 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Fikr, n.d.
- ———. Al-Tārīkh al-ṣaghīr. Edited by Maḥmūd Ibrāhīm Zāyid. 2 vols. Cairo: Maktabat Dār al-Turāth, 1977.
- Al-Burrī, Muḥammad b. Abī Bakr. Al-Jawhara fī nasb al-nabī wa-aṣḥābihi al-ʿashara. Edited by Muḥammad al-Tūnjī. 2 vols. U.A.E.: Markaz Zāyid li-l-Turāth wa-l-Tārīkh, 2001.
- Al-Damīrī, Muḥammad b. Mūsā. Ḥayāt al-ḥayawān al-kubrā. Edited by Aḥmad Ḥasan Basaj. 2 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 2003.
- Al-Dāraquṭnī, 'Alī b. 'Umar. Sunan. Edited by 'Abd Allāh Hāshim Yamānī al-Madanī. 4 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Ma'rifa, 1966.
- Al-Dārimī, 'Abd Allāh b. 'Abd al-Raḥmān. Sunan. Edited by Fawwāz Aḥmad Zamarlī and Khālid al-Sab' al-'Alamī. 2 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kitāb al-'Arabī, 1986.
- Al-Daylamī, Shīrawayh b. Shahradār. Al-Firdaws bi-ma'thūr al-khiṭāb. Edited by Muḥammad al-Saʿīd b. Basyūnī Zaghlūl. 5 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-Ilmiyya, 1986.
- Al-Dhahabī, Muḥammad b. Aḥmad. Al-ʿIbar fī khabar man ghabar. Edited by Ṣalāḥ al-Dīn al-al-Munajjid. 5 vols. Kuwait: Maṭbuʻat Ḥukūmat al-Kuwait, 1984.
- ———. Al-Kāshif fī maʻrifat man la-hu riwāya fī-l-kutub al-sitta. Edited by Muḥammad 'Awāma. 2 vols. Jidda: Dār al-Qibla li-l-Thaqāfa al-Islāmiyya, 1992.
- ———. Maʻrifat al-qurrā' al-kibār ʻalā al-ṭabaqāt wa-l-aʻṣār. Edited by Bashshār ʻAwwād Maʻrūf, Shuʻayb al-Arnā'ūṭ and Ṣāliḥ Mahdī ʻAbbās. 2 vols. Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Risāla, 1983.

- ———. Mīzān al-i'tidāl fī naqd al-rijāl. Edited by ʿAlī Muḥammad Muʿawwaḍ and ʿĀdil Aḥmad ʿAbd al-Mawjūd. 8 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 1995.
- ———. Al-Mughnī fī-l-ḍuʿafāʾ. Edited by Nūr al-Dīn ʿItir. 2 vols. Aleppo: Dār al-Maʿārif, 1971.
- ———. Siyar aʻlām al-nubalā'. Edited by Shuʻayb al-Arnā'ūṭ. 25 vols. Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Risāla, 1981–88.
- ——. Ṭabaqāt al-qurrā'. Edited by Aḥmad Khān. 2 vols. Riyadh: Markaz al-Malik Fayşal li-l-Buḥūth wa-l-Dirāsāt al-Islāmiyya, 2006.
- ——. Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāṣ. Edited by Zakariyyā 'Umayrāt. 4 vols. in 2. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 2007.
- ——. Tārīkh al-Islām. Edited by 'Umar 'Abd al-Salām Tadmurī. 53 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kitāb al-'Arabī, 1987—2000.
- Al-Dīnawarī, Abū Ḥanīfa Aḥmad b. Dāwūd. Al-Akhbār al-ṭiwāl. Edited by 'Iṣām Muḥammad al-Ḥājj 'Alī. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyya, 2001.
- Al-Dūlābī, Muḥammad b. Aḥmad. Al-Kunā wa-l-asmā'. Edited by Abū Qutayba Naẓar Muḥammad al-Fāriyābī. 3 vols. Beirut: Dār Ibn Ḥazm, 2000.
- Al-Fākihī, Muḥammad b. Isḥāq. Ākhbār Makka. Edited by 'Abd al-Malik b. 'Abd Allāh b. Duhaysh. 6 vols. in 3. Beirut: Dār Khuḍr, 1994.
- Al-Fasawī, Yaʻqūb b. Sufyān. Al-Maʻrifa wa-l-tārīkh. Edited by Akram Diyā' al-'Umarī. 3 vols. Baghdād: Dār al-Irshād, 1974–6.
- Al-Ghazālī, Muḥammad b. Muḥammad. Iḥyā' ʿulūm al-dīn. 4 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Maʿrifa, 1982.
- Al-Ḥākim al-Naysābūrī, Muḥammad b. 'Abd Allāh. Al-Mustadrak 'alā al-ṣaḥīḥayn. Edited by Muṣṭafā 'Abd al-Qādir 'Aṭā. 5 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyya, 1990.
- Al-Ḥakīm al-Tirmidhī, Muḥammad b. ʿAlī. Nawādir al-usūl fī aḥādīth al-rasūl. Edited by ʿAbd al-Raḥmān ʿUmayra. 4 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Jīl, 1992.
- Al-Ḥarbī, Ibrāhīm b. Isḥāq. Gharīb al-ḥadīth. Edited by Sulaymān Ibrāhīm Muḥammad al-ʿĀyid. 3 vols. Mecca: Jāmiʿat Umm al-Qurā, 1985.
- Al-Haythamī, Nūr al-Dīn 'Alī. Bughyat al-bāḥith 'an zawā'id musnad al-Ḥārith. Edited by Ḥusayn Aḥmad Ṣāliḥ al-Bākirī. 2 vols. Medina: al-Jāmi'a al-Islāmiyya, 1992.
- Al-Ḥumaydī, 'Abd Allāh b. al-Zubayr. Musnad. Edited by Ḥabīb al-Raḥmān al-Aʻẓamī. 2 vols. Karachi: al-Majlis al-ʿIlmī, 1963.
- Ibn 'Abd al-Barr, Yūsuf b. 'Abd Allāh. Al-Isti'āb fī ma'rifat al-aṣḥāb. Edited by 'Alī Muḥammad al-Bajjāwī. 4 vols. Cairo: Nahḍat Miṣr, 196—.
- ———. Jāmi' bayān al-'ilm wa-faḍlihi. 2 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyya, 1977.
- Ibn ʿAbd al-Ḥakam, ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. ʿAbd Allāh. Futūḥ Miṣr wa-akhbāruhā. Edited by Charles C. Torrey. New Haven: Yale University Press, 1922.

———. Sīrat ʿUmar ibn ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz. Edited by Aḥmad ʿUbayd. Beirut: ʿĀlam al-Kutub, 1984.

- Ibn 'Abd Rabbihi, Aḥmad b. Muḥammad. Al-ʿIqd al-farīd. Edited by Aḥmad Amīn, Aḥmad al-Zayn and Aḥmad al-Abyārī. 7 vols. Cairo: Lajnat al-Taʾlīf wa-l-Tarjama wa-l-Nashr, 1940–53.
- Ibn 'Abd al-Wahhāb, Muḥammad. Mukhtaṣar sīrat al-rusūl. Edited by Hanā' Muḥammad Juzmānī. Beirut: Dār al-Kitāb al-'Arabī, 1995.
- Ibn Abī 'Āṣim, Aḥmad b. 'Amr. Al-Āḥād wa-l-mathānī. Edited by Bāsim Fayṣal Aḥmad al-Jawābira. 6 vols. Riyadh: Dār al-Rāya, 1991.
- ———. Al-Jihād. Edited by Musāʻid b. Sulaymān al-Rāshid al-Ḥumayd. 2 vols. Medina: Maktabat al-ʿUlūm wa-l-Ḥikam, 1989.
- ———. Al-Mudhakkir wa-l-tadhkīr wa-l-dhikr. Edited by Khālid b. Qāsim al-Raddādī. Riyadh: Dār al-Manār, 1993.
- ——. Al-Sunna. Edited by Muḥammad Nāṣir al-Dīn al-Albānī. 2 vols. Beirut: al-Maktab al-Islāmī, 1979.
- Ibn Abī Dāwūd. Materials for the History of the Text of the Qur'ān: The Kitāb al-masāḥif of Ibn Abī Dāwūd. Edited by Arthur Jeffrey. Leiden: Brill, 1937.
- Ibn Abī al-Ḥadīd, 'Abd al-Ḥamīd b. Hibat Allāh. Sharḥ Nahj al-balāgha. Edited by Muḥammad 'Abd al-Karīm al-Namarī. 20 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 1998.
- Ibn Abī Ḥātim, 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Muḥammad. 'Ilal al-ḥadīth. Edited by Muḥibb al-Dīn al-Khatīb. 2 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Ma'rifa, 1984.
- ———. Al-Jarḥ wa-l-taʿdīl. 4 vols. in 9. Hyderabad: Maṭbaʿat Majlis Dāʾirat al-Maʿārif al-ʿUthmāniyya, 1952. Reprint Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, n.d.
- ——. Tafsīr al-Qur'ān. Edited by As'ad Muḥammad al-Ṭayyib. 10 vols. Sidon: al-Maktaba al-ʿAṣriyya, n.d.
- Ibn Abī Khaythama, Aḥmad b. Zuhayr. Akhbār al-Makkiyyīn. Edited by Ismāʿīl Ḥasan Ḥusayn. Riyadh: Dār al-Waṭan, 1997.
- Ibn Abī Shayba, 'Abd Allāh b. Muḥammad. Al-Kitāb al-muṣannaf fī-l-aḥādīth wa-l-āthār. Edited by Kamāl Yūsuf al-Ḥūt. 7 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Ṭāj, 1989.
- ——. Musnad. Edited by 'Ādil b. Yūsuf al-Ghazzāwī and Aḥmad Farīd al-Mazyadī. 2 vols. Riyadh: Dār al-Waṭan, 1997.
- Ibn ʿAdī al-Jūzjānī, ʿAbd Allāh. Al-Kāmil fī ḍuʿafāʾ al-rijāl. 7 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Fikr, 1984. Ibn ʿAsākir, ʿAlī b. al-Ḥasan. Tārīkh Madīnat Dimashq. Edited by ʿUmar b. Gharāma al-ʿAmrawī. 80 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Fikr, 1995.
- Ibn al-Athīr, 'Izz al-Dīn 'Alī b. Muḥammad. Al-Kāmil fī-l-tārīkh. Edited by 'Umar 'Abd al-Salām Tadmurī. 11 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kitāb al-'Arabī, 1997.
- ———. Usd al-ghāba fī maʿrifat al-ṣaḥāba. Edited by ʿĀdil Aḥmad al-Rifāʿī. 7 vols. Beirut: Dār Iḥyāʾ al-Turāth al-ʿArabī, 1996.

Ibn al-Athīr, Majd al-Dīn al-Mubārak b. Muḥammad. Al-Nihāya fī gharīb al-ḥadīth wal-athar. Edited by Ṭāhir Aḥmad al-Zāwī and Maḥmūd Muḥammad al-Ṭanāḥī. Cairo: ʿIsā al-Bābī al-Ḥalabī, 1963–65.

- Ibn Bashkuwāl, Khalaf b. 'Abd al-Malik. Ghawāmiḍ al-asmā' al-mubhama al-wāqi'a fī mutūn al-aḥādīth al-musnada. Edited by 'Izz al-Dīn 'Alī al-Sayyid and Muḥammad Kamāl al-Dīn 'Izz al-Dīn. 13 vols. Beirut: 'Ālam al-Kutub, 1986.
- Ibn Baṭṭa, 'Ubayd Allāh b. Muḥammad. Al-Ibāna 'an sharī'at al-firqat al-nājiya. Edited by Riḍā b. Na'sān Mu'ṭī et al. 3 vols. Riyadh: Dār al-Rāya li-l-Nashr wa-l-Tawzī', 1994.
- Ibn Baṭṭāl, 'Alī b. Khalaf. Sharḥ Ṣaḥūḥ al-Bukhārī. Edited by Yāsir b. Ibrāhīm. 10 vols. Riyadh: Maktabat al-Rushd, 2000.
- Ibn Fuḍayl al-Ḍabbī, Muḥammad. Al-Duʿāʾ. Edited by ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz b. Sulaymān b. Ibrāhīm al-Baʿīmī. Riyadh: Maktabat al-Rushd, 1999.
- Ibn Ḥajar al-ʿAsqalānī, Aḥmad b. ʿAlī. Al-Iṣāba fī tamyīz al-ṣaḥāba. Edited by ʿAlī Muḥammad al-Bajāwī. 8 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Jīl, 1992.
- ———. Fatḥ al-bārī bi-sharḥ Ṣaḥīḥ Bukhārī. Edited by Muḥibb al-Dīn al-Khaṭīb. 14 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Maʿrifa, n.d.
- ——. Al-Maṭālib al-ʿāliya bi-zawāʾid al-masānīd al-thamāniya. Edited by Saʿd b. Nāṣir b. ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz al-Shithrī. 19 vols. Riyadh: Dār al-ʿĀṣima/Dār al-Ghayth, 1998–1999.
- ———. Rafʿ al-iṣr ʿan quḍāt Miṣr. Edited by ʿAlī Muḥammad ʿUmar. Cairo: Maktabat al-Khānjī, 1998.
- ——. Tahdhīb al-tahdhīb. Edited by Ibrāhīm al-Zaybaq and 'Ādil Murshid. 4 vols. Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Risāla, 2001.
- ———. Taʻjīl al-manfaʻa bi zawā'id rijāl al-a'imma al-arbaʻa. Edited by Ikrām Allāh Imdād al-Ḥaqq. 2 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Bashā'ir al-Islāmiyya, 1996.
- Ibn al-Ḥājj, Muḥammad b. Muḥammad. Al-Madkhal. 4 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Fikr, 1981.
- Ibn Ḥanbal, Aḥmad. Al-ʿIlal wa-maʿrifat al-rijāl. Edited by Waṣī Allāh b. Muḥammad ʿAbbās. 4 vols. Beirut: al-Maktab al-Islāmī, 1988.
- ——. Musnad. Edited by Shuʻayb al-Arnā'ūṭ and ʻĀdil Murshid. 50 vols. Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Risāla, 1999.
- ——. Al-Zuhd. Edited by 'Abd al-ʿAlī 'Abd al-Ḥamīd Ḥāmid. Cairo: Dār al-Rayyān l'il-Turāth, 1987.
- Ibn Ḥazm, ʿAlī b. Aḥmad. al-Fiṣal fiʾl-milal wa-l-ahwāʾ wa-l-niḥal. 5 vols. Cairo: al-Maṭbaʿa al-Adabiyya, 1903.
- ———. Al-Nāsikh wa-l-mansūkh. Edited by 'Abd al-Ghaffār Sulaymān al-Bandārī. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyya, 1986.
- Ibn Ḥibbān, Muḥammad. Kitāb al-majrūḥīn min al-muḥaddithīn. Edited by Maḥmūd Ibrāhīm Zāyid. 3 vols. Aleppo: Dār al-Wa'y, 1976.
- -----. Mashāhīr 'ulamā' al-amṣār. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyya, 1959.
- ——. Ṣaḥīḥ. Edited by Shuʻayb al-Arnā'ūṭ. 18 vols. Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Risāla, 1993.

——. Al-Thiqāt. Edited by al-Sayyid Sharaf al-Dīn Aḥmad. 9 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Fikr,

- Ibn al-ʿImād al-Ḥanbalī, ʿAbd al-Ḥayy b. Aḥmad. Shadharāt al-dhahab fī akhbār man dhahab. Edited by ʿAbd al-Qādir al-Arnāʾūṭ and Maḥmūd al-Arnāʾūṭ. 8 vols. Damascus: Dār Ibn Kathīr, 1986–93.
- Ibn Isḥāq, Muḥammad. al-Sīra al-nabawiyya. Edited by Ṭāhā 'Abd al-Ru'ūf Sa'd. 6 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Jīl, 1990.
- . The Life of Muhammad: A Translation of Ibn Isḥāq's Sīrat Rasūl Allāh. Translated by Alfred Guillaume. New York: Oxford University Press, 1997.
- Ibn al-Ja'd, Alī. Musnad. Edited by ʿĀmir Aḥmad Ḥaydar. Beirut: Mu'assasat Nādir, 1990. Ibn al-Jawzī, 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. 'Alī. Kitāb al-mawḍū'āt. Edited by Tawfīq Ḥamdān. 2 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 1995.
- ———. Al-Mudhish. Edited by Marwān Qabbānī. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 1985.
  ———. Al-Muntaṣam fī tārīkh al-umam wa-l-mulūk. Edited by Muḥammad ʿAbd al-Qādir ʿAṭā and Muṣṭafā ʿAbd al-Qādir ʿAṭā. 18 vols. in 16. Beirut: Dār Ṣādir, 1939.
  Reprint Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 1992.
- -----. Nawāsikh al-Qur'ān. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 1984.
- . Kitāb al-quṣṣāṣ wa-l-mudhakkirīn. Edited and translated by Merlin Swartz. Beirut: Dār al-Machreq, 1971.
- ———. Kitāb al-quṣṣāṣ wa-l-mudhakkirīn. Edited by Muḥammad b. Luṭfī al-Sabbāgh. Beirut: al-Maktab al-Islāmī, 1983.
- ———. Kitāb al-quṣṣāṣ wa-l-mudhakkirīn. Edited by Qāsim al-Sāmarrāʾī. Riyadh: Dār Umayya, 1983.
- ——. Ṣifat al-ṣafwa. Edited by Maḥmūd Fākhūrī and Muḥammad Rawwās Qalʿajī. 4 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Maʿrifa, 1979.
- ———. Sīrat 'Umar ibn 'Abd al-ʿAzīz. Edited by Muḥibb al-Dīn al-Khaṭīb. Cairo: Maktabat al-Manār, 1912.
- ———. Al-Tabṣira fī-l-waʻz. Edited by Muṣṭafā ʻAbd al-Wāḥid. 2 vols. Cairo: Dār al-Kitāb al-Miṣrī, 1970.
- -----. Talbīs Iblīs. Edited by al-Sayyid al-Jumaylī. Beirut: Dār al-Kitāb al-ʿArabī, 1985.
  - ——. Zād al-masīr fī ʻilm al-tafsīr. 9 vols. Beirut: al-Maktab al-Islāmī, 1983.
- Ibn al-Kalbī, Hishām b. Muḥammad. The Book of Idols: Being a Translation from the Arabic of the Kitāb al-aṣnām. Translated by and annotated by Nabih Amin Faris. Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1952.
- ———. Ğamharat an-nasab: Das genealogische Werk des Hišām Ibn Muḥammad al-Kalbī. Edited by Werner Caskel. 2 vols. Leiden: Brill, 1966.
- ——. Jamharat al-nasab. Edited by Maḥmūd Firdaws al-ʿAzm. 3 vols. Damascus: Dār al-Yaqza al-ʿArabiyya, 1983.
- Ibn Kathīr, Ismā'īl b. 'Umar. Al-Bidāya wa-l-nihāya fī-l-tārīkh. 14 vols. in 7. Beirut: Maktabat al-Ma'ārif, 1966—.

- ———. Al-Nihāya fī-l-fitan wa-l-malāḥim. 2 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 1988. ———. Tafsīr. 4 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Fikr, 1981.
- Ibn Khaldūn, 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Muḥammad. Tārīkh. 8 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Qalam, 1984. Ibn Khallikān, Aḥmad b. Muḥammad. Wafayāt al-a'yān wa-anbā' abnā' al-zamān. Edited by Ihsan 'Abbās. 8 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Thaqāfa, 1970–3.
- Ibn al-Kharrāt, 'Abd al-Ḥaqq b. 'Abd al-Raḥmān. Al-Aḥkām al-sharʿīya al-kubrā. Edited by Abū 'Abd Allāh Ḥusayn b. 'Ukāsha. 5 vols. Riyadh: Maktabat al-Rushd, 2001.
- Ibn Khuzayma, Muḥammad b. Isḥaq. Ṣaḥīḥ. Edited by Muḥammad Muṣṭafā al-Aʻṭamī. 4 vols. Beirut: al-Maktab al-Islāmī, 1970.
- ———. Al-Tawḥīd wa ithbāt ṣifāt al-Rabb. Edited by 'Abd al-'Azīz b. Ibrāhīm al-Shahwān. 2 vols. Riyadh: Maktabat al-Rushd, 1994.
- Ibn Mājah, Muḥammad b. Yazīd. Sunan. Edited by Muḥammad Fu'ād 'Abd al-Bāqī. 2 vols. Cairo: Dār Iḥyā' al-Kutub al-'Arabiyya, 1952–53.
- Ibn Manda, Muḥammad b. Isḥāq. al-Fawā'id. Edited by Majdī al-Sayyid Ibrāhīm. Cairo: Maktabat al-Our'ān, n.d.
- Ibn Manjuwayh, Aḥmad b. 'Alī. Rijāl Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim. Edited by 'Abd Allāh al-Laythī. 2 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Ma'rifa, 1987.
- Ibn Manzūr, Muḥammad b. Mukarram. Lisān al-ʿArab. 15 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Ṣādir, 1956.
- ——. Mukhtaṣar Tārīkh Dimashq. Edited by Rūḥiyya al-Naḥḥās, Riyāḍ ʿAbd al-Ḥamīd Murād, and Muḥammad Muṭīʿ al-Ḥāfiẓ, et. al. 29 vols. Damascus: Dār al-Fikr, 1984–90.
- Ibn al-Mubārak, 'Abd Allāh. Al-Jihād. Tunis: Dār al-Tunisiyya li-l-Nashr, 1972.
- ———. Al-Zuhd. Edited by Ḥabīb al-Raḥmān al-Aʻzamī. 2 vols. Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Risāla, 1971.
- Ibn Mufliḥ al-Maqdisī, Muḥammad. Al-Ādāb al-sharʻiyya. 3 vols. Edited by Shuʻayb al-Arnā'ūṭ and 'Umar al-Qiyām. Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Risāla, 1996.
- Ibn Mujāhid, Aḥmad b. Mūsā. Al-Sabʻa fī-l-qirāʾāt. Edited by Shawqī Þayf. Cairo: Dār al-Maʿārif, 1972.
- Ibn al-Muqaffa'. Al-Adab al-kabīr. Edited by Aḥmad Zakī Bāshā. Beirut: Dār Ibn Ḥazm, 1994.
- Ibn al-Nadīm, Muḥammad b. Isḥāq. Al-Fihrist. Edited by Gustav Flügel. Leipzig: F.C.W. Vogel, 1871–2. Reprint Beirut: Maktabat Khayyāt, 1964.
- Ibn Nāṣir al-Dīn, Muḥammad b. 'Abd Allāh. Tawḍīḥ al-mushtabih. Edited by Muḥammad Naʿīm al-ʿIrqsūsī. 10 vols. Beirut: Muʾassasat al-Risāla, 1986–93.
- Ibn al-Qaysarānī, Muḥammad b. Ṭāhir. Dhakhīrat al-ḥuffāz. Edited by 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. 'Abd al-Jabbār al-Faryawā'ī. 5 vols. Riyadh: Dār al-Salaf, 1996.
- Ibn Qayyim al-Jawziyya, Muḥammad b. Abī Bakr. Zād al-maʿād fī hady khayr al-ʿibād. Edited by Shuʿayb al-Arnāʾūṭ and ʿAbd al-Qādir al-Arnāʾūṭ. 5 vols. Beirut: Muʾassasat al-Risāla, 1979.

Ibn Qudāma al-Maqdisī, 'Abd Allāh b. Aḥmad. Al-Mughnī fī fiqh al-imām Aḥmad b. Hanbal. 12 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Fikr, 1984.

- Ibn Qutayba, 'Abd Allāh b. Muslim. Al-Maʿārif. Edited by Tharwat 'Ukāsha. Cairo: Dār al-Maʿārif, 1969.
- ———. Al-Shi'r wa-l-shu'arā'. Beirut: Dār al-Thaqāfa, 1964.
- Ibn Rāhawayh, Isḥaq. Musnad. Edited by 'Abd al-Ghafūr 'Abd al-Ḥaqq Ḥusayn al-Balūshī. 5 vols. Medina: Maktabat al-Īmān, 1991.
- Ibn Rajab, 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Aḥmad. Jāmi' al-'ulūm wa-l-ḥikam. Edited by Shu'ayb al-Arnā'ūṭ and Ibrāhīm Bājis. 2 vols. Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Risāla, 1997.
- Ibn Sa'd, Muḥammad. Kitāb al-ṭabaqāt al-kubrā. Edited by 'Alī Muḥammad 'Umar. 11 vols. Cairo: Maktabat al-Khānjī, 2001.
- Ibn Salāma, Hibat Allāh. Al-Nāsikh wa-l-mansūkh. Edited by Zuhayr al-Shāwīsh and Muḥammad Kan'ān. Beirut: al-Maktab al-Islāmī, 1984.
- Ibn Sallām, al-Qāsim. Faḍāʾil al-Qurʾān. Edited by Marwān al-ʿAṭiyya, Muḥsin Kharāba and Wafāʾ Taqī al-Dīn. Beirut: Dār Ibn Kathīr, 1995.
- ———. Gharīb al-ḥadīth. Edited by Muḥammad ʿAbd al-Muʿīd Khān. 4 vols. Hyderabad: Al-Dāʾirat al-Maʿārif al-ʿUthmāniyya, 1964–6.
- ———. Al-Nāsikh wa-l-mansūkh. Edited by Muḥammad b. Ṣāliḥ al-Mudayfir. Riyadh: Maktabat al-Rushd, 1997.
- Ibn Samura al-Ja'dī. 'Umar b. 'Alī. Ṭabaqāt fuqahā' al-Yaman. Edited by Fu'ād Sayyid. Cairo: Maṭba'at al-Sunna al-Muḥammadiyya, 1957.
- Ibn al-Sarī, Hannād. Al-Zuhd. Edited by 'Abd al-Raḥmān 'Abd al-Jabbār al-Faryawā'ī. 2 vols. Kuwait: Dār al-Khulafā' li-l-Kitāb al-Islāmī, 1986.
- Ibn Shabba, 'Umar. Kitāb tārīkh al-Madīna al-munawwara. Edited by Fahīm Muḥammad Shaltūt. 4 vols. Mecca: H.M. Ahmad, 1979.
- Ibn Shāhīn, 'Umar b. Ahmad. Al-Kitāb al-laṭīf li-sharḥ madhāhib ahl al-sunna. Edited by 'Abd Allāh b. Muḥammad al-Buṣayrī. Medina: Maktabat al-Ghurabā' al-Athariyya, 1996.
- ——. Tārīkh asmā' al-thiqāt mimman nuqila 'anhum al-'ilm. Edited by Ṣubḥī al-Sāmarrā'ī. Kuwait: al-Dār al-Salafiyya, 1984.
- Ibn Ṭahir Al-Baghdādī, 'Abd al-Qāhir. Al-Farq bayna al-firaq. Beirut: Dār al-Āfāq al-Jadīda, 1977.
- Ibn Taymiyya, Aḥmad b. ʿAbd al-Ḥalīm. Aḥādīth al-quṣṣāṣ. Edited by Muḥammad b. Luṭfī al-Ṣabbāgh. Beirut: al-Maktab al-Islāmī, 1972.
- ——. Majmūʻfatāwā Shaykh al-Islām Aḥmad ibn Taymiyya. Edited by ʻAbd al-Raḥmān b. Muḥammad b. Qāsim al-ʿĀṣimī al-Najdī. 37 vols. Riyadh: Maṭābiʻ al-Riyāḍ, 1961–6.
- ———. Manhāj al-sunna al-nabawiyya. Edited by Muḥammad Rashād Sālim. 9 vols. Jāmi 'at al-Imām Sa'ūd al-Islāmiyya, 1986.
- Ibn al-Ukhuwwa, Muḥammad b. Muḥammad. Maʿālim al-qurbā fī aḥkām al-ḥisba. Edited by Rubin Levi. Cambridge: Luzac, 1937.

Ibn Waḍḍāḥ al-Qurṭubī, Muḥammad. *Kitāb al-bida*ʻ. Edited by M. Isabel Fierro. Madrid: Consejo Superior de Investigaciones Cientificas, Instituto de Filologia, Departamento de Estudios 'Arabes, 1988.

- Ibn Wahb, 'Abd Allāh. Al-Jāmi' fī-l-ḥadīth. Edited by Muṣṭafā Ḥasan Ḥusayn Muḥammad Abū al-Khayr. 2 vols. Al-Dammām, Saudi Arabia: Dār Ibn al-Jawzī, 1996.
- Al-Ibshīhī, Muḥammad b. Aḥmad. Al-Mustaṭraf fī kull fann mustaẓraf. Edited by Mufid Muḥammad Qumayḥa. 2 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 1983.
- Al-ʿIjlī, Aḥmad b. ʿAbd Allāh. Maʿrifat al-thiqāt. Edited by ʿAbd al-ʿAlīm ʿAbd al-ʿAzīm al-Bastawī. 2 vols. Medina: Maktabat al-Dār, 1985.
- Al-Jāḥiz, 'Amr b. Baḥr. Al-Bayān wa-l-tabyīn. Edited by 'Abd al-Salām Muḥammad Hārūn. 4 vols. Cairo: Maktabat al-Khānjī, 1968.
- ———. Al-Burṣān wa-l-ʿurjān wa-l-ʿumyān wa-l-ḥūlān. Edited by Muḥammad Mursī al-Khūlī. Cairo: Dār al-I'tiṣām li-l-Ṭabaʿ wa-l-Nashr, 1972.
- ———. Kitāb al-Ḥayawān. Edited by 'Abd al-Salām Muḥammad Hārūn. 8 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Jīl, 1996.
- ———. Al-Maḥāsin wa-l-aḍdād. Beirut: Dār Maktabat al-'Irfān, 1950.
- Al-Jūzjānī, Ibrāhīm b. Yaʻqūb. Aḥwāl al-rijāl. Edited by Ṣubḥī al-Badrī al-Sāmarrāʾī. Beirut: Muʾassasat al-Risāla, 1985.
- Al-Kalā'ī, Sulaymān b. Mūsā. Al-Iktifā' bi-mā taḍammanahu min maghāzī rasūl Allāh wa-l-thalātha al-khulafā'. Edited by Muḥammad Kamāl al-Dīn 'Izz al-Dīn 'Alī. 2 vols. Beirut: 'Ālam al-Kutub, 1997.
- Khalīfa b. Khayyāṭ. Ṭabaqāt. Edited by Akram Diyā' al-ʿUmarī. Riyadh: Dār Ṭayba, 1982——. Tārīkh. Edited by Akram Diyā' al-ʿUmarī. Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Risāla, 1977.
- Al-Khaṭīb al-Baghdādī, Aḥmad b. 'Alī. Al-Faqīh wa-l-mutafaqqih. Edited by Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān 'Ādil b. Yūsuf al-'Azzāzī. 2 vols. Al-Dammam, Saudi Arabia: Dār Ibn al-Jawzī, 1996.
- ——. al-Jāmi' li-akhlāq al-rāwī wa-ādāb al-sāmi'. Edited by Maḥmūd al-Ṭaḥḥān. 2 vols. Riyadh: Maktabat al-Ma'ārif, 1982.
- ———. Mūḍiḥ awhām al-jamʻ wa-l-tafrīq. Edited by ʻAbd al-Muʻṭī Amīn Qalʻajī. 2 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Maʻrifa, 1987.
- ———. Tārīkh Baghdād. 14 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 2005.
- Al-Khaṭīb al-Tabrīzī, Muḥammad b. ʿAbd Allāh. Mishkāt al-maṣābīḥ. Edited by Muḥammad Nāṣir al-Dīn al-Albānī. 3 vols. Beirut: al-Maktab al-Islāmī, 1985.
- Al-Khaṭṭābī, Ḥamad b. Muḥammad. Gharīb al-ḥadīth. Edited by ʿAbd al-Karīm Ibrāhīm al-ʿAzbāwī. 3 vols. Mecca: Jāmiʿat Umm al-Qurā, 1981.
- Al-Kindī, Muḥammad b. Yūsuf. Kitāb al-quḍāt alladhīna walū qaḍaʿ Miṣr. Edited by Richard J.H. Gottheil. Paris: Paul Geuthner, 1908.
- -----. Wulāt Miṣr. Edited by Ḥusayn Naṣṣār. Beirut: Dār Ṣādir, 1959.
- Al-Kisā'ī, Muḥammad b. 'Abd Allāh. Qiṣaṣ al-anbiyā'. Edited by Isaac Eisenberg. 2 vols. Leiden: Brill, 1922.

— . Qiṣaṣ al-anbiyā': Tales of the Prophets of Kisā'i. Translated by W.M. Thackston, Jr. Boston: Twayne Publishers, 1978.

- Al-Kulaynī, Muḥammad Yaʻqūb. Al-Uṣūl min al-Kāfī. Edited by ʻAlī Akbar al-Ghifārī. 2 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Aḍwāʾ, 1985.
- Al-Majlisī, Muḥammad Bāqir. Biḥār al-anwār. 110 vols. Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Wafā', 1983.
- Al-Makkī, Abū Ṭālib Muḥammad b. ʿAlī. Qūt al-qulūb. Edited by ʿAbd al-Ḥamīd Madkūr and ʿĀmir al-Najjār. 4 vols. Cairo: Al-Hayʾa al-Miṣriyya al-ʿĀmma li-l-Kitāb, 2005–2007.
- ———. Qūt al-qulūb. Edited by 'Aṣim Ibrāhīm al-Kayyālī. 2 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 2005.
- . Qūt al-qulūb. Edited by Saʻīd Nasīb Makārim. 2 vols. Beirut: Dār Ṣādir, 1995.
- Mālik b. Anas. Al-Muwaṭṭa'. Edited by 'Abd al-Majīd Turkī. Beirut: Dār al-Gharb al-Islāmī, 1994.
- ——. Al-Muwaṭṭa'. Edited by Muḥammad Muṣṭafā al-A'zamī. 8 vols. Abu Dhabi: Mu'assasat Zāvid b. Sultān, 2004.
- Al-Maqdisī, 'Abd al-Ghanī b. 'Abd al-Wāḥid al-Jammā'ilī. Aḥādīth al-shi'r. Edited by Khayr Allāh al-Sharīf. Damascus: Khayr Allāh al-Sharīf, 1993.
- Al-Maqdisī, Muḥammad b. Aḥmad. Aḥsan al-taqāsīm fī maʻrifat al-aqālīm. Edited by M.J. De Goeje. Bibliotheca Geographorum Arabicorum 3. Leiden: Brill, 1967.
- Al-Maqrīzī, Aḥmad b. 'Alī. Al-Mawā'iẓ wa-l-i'tibār fī dhikr al-khiṭaṭ wa-l-āthār (al-Khiṭaṭ). Edited by Ayman Fu'ād Sayyid. London: Mu'assasat al-Furqān li-l-Turāth al-Islāmī, 2003.
- Al-Marwazī, Muḥammad b. Naṣr. Al-Sunna. Edited by Sālim b. Aḥmad al-Salafī. Beirut: Muʾassasat al-Kutub al-Thaqāfiyya, 1988.
- . Taʿzīm qadr al-ṣalāt. Edited by ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. ʿAbd al-Jabbār al-Faryawāʾī. 2 vols. Medina: Maktabat al-Dār, 1985.
- Al-Maṣʿūdī, ʿAlī b. al-Ḥusayn. Murūj al-dhahab. Edited by Charles Pellat. 7 vols. Beirut: Manshūrāt al-Jāmiʿa al-Lubnāniyya, 1965–79.
- Al-Māwardī, 'Alī b. Muḥammad. Adab al-dunyā wa-l-dīn. Edited by Muṣṭafā al-Saqqā. Cairo: Maṭba'a Muṣṭafā al-Bābī al-Ḥalabī, 1955.
- Al-Mizzī, Yūsuf b. al-Zakī. Tahdhīb al-kamāl fī asmā' al-rijāl. Edited by Bashshār 'Awwād Ma'rūf. 35 vols. Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Risāla, 1980–92.
- Al-Muḥāsibī, al-Ḥārith b. Asad. Al-ʿAql wa-Fahm al-Qurʾān. Edited by Ḥusayn al-Quwwatlī. Beirut: Dār al-Fikr, 1971.
- Mujāhid b. Jabr. Tafsīr. Edited by 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Ṭāhir b. Muḥammad al-Sūrtī. 2 vols. Beirut: al-Manshūrāt al-ʿĀlamiyya, 197—.
- Muqātil b. Sulaymān. Tafsīr. Edited by Aḥmad Farīd. 3 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 2003.
- ———. Tafsīr. Edited by 'Abd Allāh Maḥmūd Shiḥāta. 5 vols. Cairo: al-Hay'a al-Miṣriyya al-ʿĀmma li-l-Kitāb, 1979–89.

Murtaḍā al-Zabīdī, Muḥammad. Tāj al-ʿarūs. Edited by Ḍāḥī ʿAbd al-Bāqī et al. 40 vols. Kuwait: Ḥukūmat al-Kuwait, 1965–2001.

- Muslim b. al-Ḥajjāj. Al-Kunā wa-l-asmā'. Edited by 'Abd al-Raḥīm Muḥammad Aḥmad al-Qashqarī. 2 vols. Medina: al-Jāmi'a al-Islāmiyya, 1984.
- ——. Ṣaḥiḥ. Edited by Muḥammad Fu'ād 'Abd al-Bāqī. 5 vols. Cairo: Dār Iḥyā' al-Turāth al-'Arabī, 1956.
- . Al-Tamyīz. Edited by Muḥammad Muṣṭafā al-Aʻṭamī. Riyadh: Jāmiʻat Riyāḍ,
- Al-Naḥḥās, Aḥmad b. Muḥammad. Al-Nāsikh wa-l-mansūkh. Edited by Muḥammad 'Abd al-Salām Muḥammad. Kuwait: Maktabat al-Falāḥ, 1987.
- Al-Nasā'ī, Aḥmad b. Shu'ayb. Al-Sunan al-kubrā. Edited by 'Abd al-Ghaffār Sulaymān al-Bandārī and Sayyid Kisrawī Ḥasan. 6 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 1991.
- ———. Sunan al-Nasā'ī bi-sharḥ al-ḥāfiz Jalāl al-Dīn al-Suyūṭī. 8 vols. in 4. Beirut: Dār al-Maʿrifa, 1991.
- Naṣr b. Muzāḥim. Waqʻat Ṣiffūn. Edited by 'Abd al-Salām Muḥammad Hārūn. Cairo: al-Mu'assasat al-'Arabiyya al-Ḥadītha, 1962.
- Al-Nawawī, Yaḥyā b. Sharaf. Sharḥ Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim. 18 vols. Beirut: Dār Iḥyā' al-Turāth al-'Arabī, 1972.
- Sharḥ al-arba'īn al-Nawawiyya. Composed by Aḥmad b. Sūda, 'Abd al-Qādir b. Shafrūn, Muḥammad al-Ṭayyib b. Kīrān and Muḥammad Banīs and edited by Najlā' al-Tijkānī. 3 vols. Rabat: Manshūrā Wizārat al-Awqāf wa-l Shu'ūn al-Islāmīya, 2010.
- ———. Tahdhīb al-asmā' wa-l-lughāt. 3 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Fikr, 1996.
- Nuʻaym b. Ḥammād al-Marwazī. Kitāb al-fitan. Edited by Samīr b. Amīn al-Zuhayrī. 2 vols. Cairo: Maktabat al-Tawḥīd, 1991.
- Al-Qārī al-Harawī, 'Alī b. Sulṭān Muḥammad. Mirqāt al-mafātīḥ. 10 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Fikr, 1992.
- ——. Al-Asrār al-marfūʻa fī-l-akhbār al-mawḍūʻa. Edited by Muḥammad b. Luṭfī al-Sabbāgh. Beirut: Muʾassasat al-Risāla, 1971.
- Al-Qurṭubī, Muḥammad b. Aḥmad. Al-Jāmi' li-aḥkām al-Qur'ān. 20 vols. Cairo: Dār al-Kātib al-'Arabī, 1967.
- Al-Rūyānī, Muḥammad b. Hārūn. Musnad. Edited by Ayman 'Alī Abū Yamānī. 3 vols. Cairo: Mu'assasat Qurṭuba, 1995.
- Al-Ṣafadī, Khalīl b. Aybak. Al-Wāfī bi-l-wafayāt. Edited by Aḥmad al-Arnāʾūṭ and Turkī Muṣṭafā. 29 vols. Beirut: Dār Iḥyāʾ al-Turāth, 2000.
- Al-Sahmī, Ḥamza b. Yūsuf. Tārīkh Jurjān. Edited by Muḥammad ʿAbd al-Muʿīd Khān. Beirut: ʿĀlam al-Kutub, 1981.
- Saʿīd b. Mansūr. Sunan. Edited by Ḥabīb al-Raḥmān al-Aʻzamī. 2 vols. Dabhil: Majlis ʻIlmī, 1967—. Reprint Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 1985.
- Al-Sam'ānī, 'Abd al-Karīm b. Muḥammad. Al-Ansāb. Edited by 'Abd Allāh 'Umar al-Bārūdī. 5 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Fikr, 1998.

Al-Sam'ānī, Manṣūr b. Muḥammad. Tafsīr al-Qur'ān. Edited by Yāsir b. Ibrāhim and Ghanīm b. 'Abbās b. Ghanīm. 6 vols. Riyadh: Dār al-Watan, 1997.

- Al-Sanāmī, Umar b. Muḥammad b. 'Awaḍ, Niṣāb al-iḥtisāb. Edited by Mū'il Yūsuf 'Izz al-Dīn. Riyadh: Dār al-'Ulūm, 1982.
- Al-Shāfi'ī, Muhammad b. Idrīs. Al-Musnad. Beirut: Dār al-Fikr, 1996.
- ———. Al-Risāla. Edited by Aḥmad Muḥammad Shākir. Cairo: Maktabat Muṣṭafā al-Bābī al-Halabī, 1939.
- Al-Shāshī, al-Haytham b. Kulayb. Musnad. Edited by Maḥfūz al-Raḥmān Zayn Allāh. 3 vols. Medina: Maktabat al-ʿUlūm wa-l-Ḥikam, 1989.
- Al-Shāṭibī, Ibrāhīm b. Mūsā. al-I'tiṣām. 2 vols. Cairo: Maṭba'at al-Manār, 1913-4.
- Al-Shirāzī, Abū Isḥāq Ibrāhīm b. Mūsā. Tabaqāt al-fuqahā'. Edited by Iḥsān 'Abbās. Beirut: Dār al-Rā'id al-'Arabī, 1970.
- Al-Suyūṭī, 'Abd al-Raḥman b. Abī Bakr. Al-Durr al-manthūr. 8 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Fikr, 1993.
- ———. Al-Ḥāwī li-l-fatāwī fī-l-fiqh wa-ʿulūm al-tafsīr wa-l-ḥadīth wa-l-uṣūl wa-l-naḥw wa-l-iʿrāb wa sāʾir al-funūn. 2 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 2000.
- ———. Al-Khaṣāʾiṣ al-kubrā. Edited by Muḥammad Khalīl Harrās. 3 vols. Cairo: Dār al-Kutub al-Ḥadītha, 1967.
- ———. Ṭabaqāt al-ḥuffāz. Edited by ʿAlī Muḥammad ʿUmar. Cairo: Maktabat Wahba, 1973.
- ——... Taḥdhīr al-khawāṣṣ min akādhīb al-quṣṣāṣ. Edited by Muḥammad b. Luṭfī al-Ṣabbāgh. Beirut: Al-Maktab al-Islāmī, 1972.
- Al-Ṭabarānī, Sulaymān b. Aḥmad. Al-Duʿāʾ. Edited by Muṣṭafā ʿAbd al-Qādir ʿAṭā. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 1992.
- ——. Al-Muʻjam al-awsaṭ. Edited by Muḥammad Ḥasan Muḥammad Ḥasan Ismāʻīl al-Shāfiʻī. 7 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Fikr, 1999.
- ——. Al-Muʻjam al-kabīr. Edited by Ḥamdī ʻAbd al-Majīd al-Salafī. 25 vols. Mosul: Maktabat al-Zahrā', 1984.
- ——. Musnad al-Shāmiyyīn. Edited by Ḥamdī 'Abd al-Majīd al-Salafī. 4 vols. Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Risāla, 1996.
- Al-Ṭabarī, Muḥammad b. Jarīr. Tafsīr. 30 vols. in 12. Cairo: Muṣṭafā al-Bābī al-Ḥalabī, 1954–68.
- ———. Tahdhīb al-āthār wa tafṣīl al-thābit 'an rasūl Allāh min al-akhbār. Edited by Maḥmūd Muḥammad Shākir. 5 vols. Cairo: Maṭba'at al-Madanī, 1982—.
- ——. Tārīkh al-rusul wa-l-mulūk. Edited by M.J. De Goeje et al. 3 vols. Leiden: Brill, 1897–1901.
- ———. General Introduction and From the Creation to the Flood. Translated by Franz Rosenthal. Vol. 1. Albany, NY: SUNY, 1989.
- ———. The Challenge to the Empires. Translated by Khalid Yahya Blankinship. Vol. 11. Albany, NY: SUNY, 1993.

. The Crisis of the Early Caliphate. Translated by R. Stephen Humphreys. Vol. 15. Albany, NY: SUNY, 1990.

- . The Collapse of Sufyānid Authority and the Coming of the Marwānids. Translated by G.R. Hawting. Vol. 20. Albany, NY: SUNY, 1989.
- . The Marwānid Restoration. Translated by Everett Rowson. Vol. 22. Albany, NY: SUNY, 1989.
- . The 'Abbāsid Revolution. Translated by John Alden Williams. Vol. 27. Albany, NY: SUNY, 1985.
- Al-Ṭaḥāwī, Aḥmad b. Muḥammad. Sharḥ Mushkil al-Āthār. Edited by Shuʻayb al-Arnā'ūṭ. 16 vols. Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Risāla, 1987.
- Al-Tamīmī, Muḥammad b. Aḥmad. Al-Miḥan. Edited by Yaḥyā Wahīb al-Jabbūrī. Tunis: Dār al-Gharb al-Islāmī, 2006.
- Al-Ṭayālisī, Sulaymān b. Dāwūd. Musnad. Hyderabad: Maṭbaʻat Majlis Dā'irat al-Maʻārif al-Nizāmiyya, 1903.
- Al-Thaʻālabī, ʻAbd al-Malik b. Muḥammad. Yatīmat al-dahr fī maḥāsin ahl al-ʻaṣr. Edited by Mufīd Muḥammad Qumayḥa. 6 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 2000.
- Al-Thaʻlabī, Aḥmad b. Muḥammad. Arāʾis al-majālis fī qiṣaṣ al-anbiyāʾ or "Lives of the Prophets": As Recounted by Abū Isḥāq Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad ibn Ibrāhīm al-Thaʻlabī. Translated by William M. Brinner. Leiden: Brill, 2002.
- ———. Al-Kashf wa-l-bayān. Edited by ʿAbū Muḥammad b. ʿĀshūr. 10 vols. Beirut: Dār Iḥyāʾ al-Turāth al-ʿArabī, 2002.
- Al-Tirmidhī, Muḥammad b. ʿĪsā. Sunan. Edited by Ibrāhīm 'Atwah 'Awḍ, Aḥmad Muḥammad Shākir, et al. 5 vols. Cairo: Maktabat Muṣṭafā al-Bābī al-Ḥalabī, 1937–75.
- Al-Ṭūsī, Muḥammad b. al-Ḥasan. Ikhtiyār maʿrifat al-rijāl (Rijāl al-Kashshī). Edited by al-Sayyid Mahdī al-Rajāʾī. 2 vols. Qumm: Muʾassasat Āl al-Bayt li-Iḥyāʾ al-Turāth, 1984.
- Al-ʿUqaylī, Muḥammad b. ʿAmr. Al-Ḍuʿafāʾ al-kabīr. Edited by ʿAbd al-Muʿṭī Amīn Qalʿajī. 4 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 1984.
- Wakī', Muḥammad b. Khalaf. Akhbār al-quḍāt. Edited by 'Abd al-'Azīz Muṣṭafā al-Marāghī. 3 vols. Cairo: Maṭba'at al-Istiqāma, 1947–50.
- Al-Wāqidī, Muḥammad b. 'Umar. Futūḥ al-Shām. 2 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Jīl, n.d.
- Yaḥyā b. Ma'īn. Tārīkh (riwāyat al-Dūrī). Edited by Aḥmad Muḥammad Nūr Sayf. 4 vols. Mecca: Markaz al-Baḥth al-'Ilmī wa-Iḥyā' al-Turāth al-Islāmī, 1979—.
- Al-Ya'qūbī, Aḥmad b. Abī Ya'qūb. Tārīkh. 2 vols. Beirut: Dār Ṣādir, 1960.
- Yāqūt b. 'Abd Allāh al-Ḥamawī. Irshād al-arīb ilā maʻrifat al-adīb (Muʻjam al-udabā'). Edited by D.S. Margoliouth. 7 vols. Leiden: Brill, 1907–27.
- ——. Muʻjam al-buldān. 5 vols. Beirut: Dār Ṣādir, 1955.
- Al-Zamakhsharī, Maḥmūd b. 'Umar. al-Fā'iq fī gharīb al-ḥadīth. Edited by 'Alī Muḥammad al-Bajāwī and Muḥammad Abū al-Faḍl Ibrāhīm. 4 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Ma'rifa, n.d.

———. Al-Kashshāf 'an ḥaqā'iq al-tanzīl wa 'uyūn al-aqāwīl fī wujūh al-ta'wīl. 4 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Ma'rifa, 19—.

——. Rabīʿ al-abrār. Edited by ʿAbd al-Amīr Muhannā. 5 vols. Beirut: Muʾassasat al-Aʿlamī li-l-Maṭbūʿāt, 1992.

Secondary Sources

- Abbott, Nabia. Studies in Arabic Literary Papyri II: Qur' $\bar{a}$ nic Commentary and Tradition. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1967.
- Abyaḍ, Malak. Al-Tarbiya wa-l-thaqāfa al-ʿarabiyya-islāmiyya fī al-Shām wa-l-Jazīra khilāl al-qurūn al-thalātha al-ūlā li-l-hijra. Beirut: Dār al-ʿIlm li-l-Malāyīn, 1980.
- Adang, Camilla. Muslim Writers on Judaism and the Hebrew Bible from Ibn Rabban to Ibn Ḥazm. New York: Brill, 1996.
- Anthony, Sean. The Caliph and the Heretic: Ibn Saba' and the Origins of Shi'ism. Leiden: Brill, 2012.
- 'Athamina, Khalil. "Al-Qaṣaṣ: Its Emergence, Religious Origin and Its Socio-political Impact on Early Muslim Society," Studia Islamica 76 (1992), 53–74.
- Azmeh, Aziz. Arabic Thought and Islamic Societies. London: Croom Helm, 1986.
- ———. The Arabs and Islam in Late Antiquity: A Critique of Approaches to Arabic Sources. Berlin: Gerlach Press, 2014.
- Berkey, Jonathan. Popular preaching and religious authority in the medieval Islamic Near East. Seattle: University of Washington Press, 2001.
- Bosworth, C.E. "Rajā' ibn Ḥaywa al-Kindī and the Umayyad Caliphs," Islamic Quarterly 16:1 (1972), 36–80.
- Brown, Jonathan. hadīth: Muhammad's Legacy in the Medieval and Modern World. Oxford: Oneworld Publications, 2009.
- El Calamawy, Sahair. "Narrative Elements in the Ḥadīth Literature," in Arabic Literature to the End of the Umayyad Period. Edited by A.F.L. Beeston et al. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1983, 308–16.
- Calder, Norman. "From Midrash to Scripture: The Sacrifice of Abraham in Early Islamic Tradition," Museon 101:3–4 (1988), 375–402.
- Cameron, A.J. Abū Dharr al-Ghifārī: An Examination of His Image in the Hagiography of Islam. New Delhi: Adam Publishers, 2006.
- Cameron, Averil. Christianity and the Rhetoric of Empire. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1991.
- Chapira, Bernard. "Legendes bibliques attribuees à Ka'b al-Aḥbār," Revue des Etudes Juives, lxix, (1919), 86–107; lxx (1920), 37–44.
- Conrad, Lawrence. "Al-Azdī's History of the Arab Conquests in Bilād al-Shām: Some Historiographical Observations," in Proceedings of the Second Symposium on the History of Bilād al-Shām during the Early Islamic Period up to 40 A.H./640 A.D. Edited by Muḥammad Adnān Bakhit. Amman: University of Jordan, 1987, 1:28–62.

- Cook, David. Contemporary Muslim Apocalyptic Literature. Syracuse: Syracuse University Press, 2008.
- ———. Studies in Muslim Apocalyptic. Princeton: Darwin Press, 2002.
- ——. "Tamīm al-Dārī," BSOAS 61 (1998), 20-8.
- Cook, Michael. "An Early Islamic Apocalyptic Chronicle," JNES 52:1 (1993), 25-29.
- Crone, Patricia. Meccan Trade and the Rise of Islam. Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1987.
- Donner, Fred M. Narratives of Islamic Origins: The Beginnings of Islamic Historical Writing. Princeton: Darwin Press, 1998.
- ——. Muhammad and the Believers. Cambridge, ма: Belknap Press of Harvard University, 2010.
- Frolov, Dimitri V. Classical Arabic Verse: History and Theory of 'Arūḍ. Leiden: Brill, 2000.
- Ghédira, Ameur. "Deux poètes contemporains de Baššār, les frères Ibn Abī 'Uyayna," Arabica, x (1963), 154–87.
- Gilliot, Claude. "Muqātil, Grand Exégète, Tradionniste et Théologien Maudit," Journal Asiatique 279:1 (1991), 39–92.
- Ginzberg, Louis. The Legends of the Jews. 7 vols. Philadelphia: Jewish Publication Society of America, 1968.
- Goldziher, Ignac. Muslim Studies. Edited by S.M. Stern. Translated by C.R. Barber and S.M. Stern. 2 vols. London: Allen and Unwin, 1971.
- ———. Schools of Koranic Commentators. Edited and translated by Wolfgang H. Behn. Wiesbaden: Otto Harrassowitz, 2006.
- Goitein, S.D. "Individualism and Conformity in Classical Islam," in Individualism and Conformity in Classical Islam. Edited by Aman Banani and Speros Vryonis, Jr. Wiesbaden: Otto Harrassowitz, 1977, 3–17.
- Halperin, David J. and Gordon D. Newby. "Two Castrated Bulls: A Study in the Haggadah of Ka'b al-Aḥbār," JAOS 102:4 (1982), 631–8.
- Hawting, G.R. The First Dynasty in Islam: The Umayyad Caliphate A.D. 661–750. Carbondale: Southern Illinois University Press, 1987.
- Horst, Heribert. "Zur Überlieferung im Korankommentar aṭ-Ṭabarīs," ZDMG 103 (1953), 290–307.
- Humphreys, R. Stephen. Mu'āwiya Ibn Abi Sufyan. Oxford: Oneworld, 2006.
- Jones, Linda Gale. The power of oratory in the medieval Muslim world. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2012.
- Jūda, Jamāl. "Al-Qaṣaṣ wa-l-quṣṣāṣ fī ṣadr al-Islām: bayna al-wāqi' al-tārīkhī wa al-naẓra al-fiqhiyya," Dirāsāt tārīkhiyya 33–34 (1989), 105–141.
- Juynboll, G.H.A. The Authenticity of the Tradition Literature. Leiden: Brill, 1969.
- ———. Encyclopedia of Canonical Ḥadīth. Leiden: Brill, 2007.

———. Muslim Tradition: Studies in Chronology, Provenance and Authorship of Early Ḥadīth. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1983.

- Khoury, Raif George. Les légendes prophétiques dans l'Islam depuis le I<sup>er</sup> jusq'au III<sup>e</sup> siècle de l'hégire. Wiesbaden: Otto Harrassowitz, 1978.
- ———. Wahb b. Munabbih. Wiesbaden: Otto Harrassowitz, 1972.
- Kister, M.J. "Ḥaddithū 'an banī isrā'īla wa-lā ḥaraja: A Study of an Early Tradition," Israel Oriental Studies ii (1972), 215–39.
- ——. "Legends in Tafsīr and Ḥadīth Literature: The Creation of Adam and Related Stories," in Approaches to the History of the Interpretation of the Qurʾān. Edited by Andrew Rippin. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1988, 82–114.
- ——. "The Sīrah Literature," in Arabic Literature to the End of the Umayyad Period. Edited by A.F.L. Beeston et al. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1983, 352–367.
- Krenkow, F. "The Grant of Land by Muḥammad to Tamīm al-Dārī," Islamica, I (1925), 529–32.
- Lane, Edward William. An Arabic-English Lexicon. 8 vols. Beirut: Librarie du Liban, 1968.
- Lecker, Michael. "King Ubayy and the Quṣṣāṣ," in Methods and Theories in the Study of Islamic Origins. Edited by H. Berg. Leiden: Brill, 2003, 29–71 (Republished in People, Tribes and Society in Arabia Around the Time of Muḥammad. Aldershot, UK: Ashgate, 2005, II: 29–71).
- ———. "Zayd b. Thābit, A Jew with Two Sidelocks: Judaism and Literacy in Pre-Islamic Medina (Yathrīb)," JNES, 56 (1997), 259–73.
- Leemhuis, Fred. "Origins and Early Development of the Tafsīr Tradition," in Approaches to the History of the Interpretation of the Qur'ān. Edited by Andrew Rippin. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1988, 14–30.
- Lowin, Shari. The Making of a Forefather: Abraham in Islamic and Jewish Exegetical Narratives. Leiden: Brill, 2006.
- Madelung, Wilfred. "Apocalyptic Prophecies in Ḥimṣ in the Umayyad Age," Journal of Semitic Studies (1986), 141–85.
- Massignon, Louis. Essai sur les origines du lexique technique de la mystique musulmane. Paris: P. Geuthner, 1922.
- Maghen, Ze'ev. "The Merry Men of Medina: Comedy and Humanity in the Early Days of Islam," Der Islam, 83:2 (2006), 277–340.
- Mez, Adam. The Renaissance of Islam. Translated by S.K. Bukhsh and D.S. Margoliouth. London: Luzac and Co., 1937.
- Al-Najm, Wadīʻa Ṭāhā. "al-Qaṣaṣ: Nasha'tuhu fi-l-Islām wa taṭawwuruhu," Majalat Kulliyyat al-Ādāb Jāmiʻat Baghdad, 10, (1967), 166–178.
- ———. Al-Qaṣaṣ wa-l-quṣṣāṣ fī-l-adab al-Islāmī. Kuwait: Maṭbaʿat Ḥukūmat al-Kuwait, 1972.

———. "Tamīm al-Dārī: Awwal qaṣṣ fī-l-Islām?!," Majalat Kullīyat al-Ādāb Jāmi'at Baghdad, 5 (1963), 293–314.

- Nickel, Gordon. "Early Muslim Accusations of Taḥrīf: Muqātil b. Sulaymān's Commentary on Key Qur'ānic Verses," in The Bible in Arab Christianity. Edited by David Thomas. Leiden: Brill, 2007, 207–23.
- Noth, Albrecht. "Common Features of Muslim and Orientalist hadīth Criticism," in Ḥadīth. Edited by Harald Motzki. Aldershot, UK: Ashgate, 2004.
- Pauliny, Ján. "Zur Rolle der Quṣṣāṣ bei der Entstehung und Überlieferung der populären Prophetenlegenden," Asian and African Studies 10 (1974), 125–141.
- Pedersen, Johannes. "The Criticism of the Islamic Preacher," Die Welt Des Islams, 2 (1953), 215–231.
- ———. "The Islamic Preacher: Wāʿiz, Mudhakkir, Qāṣṣ," Ignace Goldziher Memorial Volume 1. Edited by Samuel Löwinger and Joseph Somogyi. Budapest, 1948, 226–251.
- Pellat, Charles. Le milieu bașrien et la formation de Ğāḥiz. Paris: Librairie d'Amérique et d'Orient Adrien-Maisonneuve, 1953.
- Al-Qāḍī, Wadād. "The Limitations of Qur'ānic Usage in Early Arabic Poetry: The Example of a Khārijite Poem," in Festschrift Ewald Wagner zum 65 Geburtstag. Edited by Wolfhart Heinrichs and Gregor Schoeler. Band 2. Franz Steiner Verlag: Beirut/Stuttgart, 1994, 162–81.
- ———. "The Salaries of Judges in Early Islam: The Evidence of the Documentary and Literary Sources," JNES 68:1 (January 2009), 9–30.
- ———. "Security Positions under the Umayyads: The Story of 'Ma'bad al-Ṭuruq'," in Differenz und Dynamik im Islam. Festschrift für Heinz Halm zum 70. Geburtstag/Difference and Dynamism in Islam. Festschrift for Heinz Halm on his 70th Birthday. Edited by Hinrich Biesterfeld and Verena Klemm. Würtzburg: Ergon Verlag, 2012, 253–283.
- Qutbuddin, Tahera. "Khuṭba: The Evolution of Early Arabic Oration," in Classical Arabic Humanities in Their Own Terms. Edited by Beatrice Gruendler. Leiden: Brill, 2008, 176–273.
- Rippin, Andrew. "Tafsīr Ibn 'Abbās and the Criteria for Dating Early Tafsīr Texts," JSAI (1994), 38–83.
- Rustomji, Nerina. The Garden and the Fire: Heaven and Hell in Islamic Culture. New York: Columbia University Press, 2009.
- Sayed, Redwan. Die Revolte des Ibn al-Aš'at und die Koranleser: Ein Beitrag zur Religionsund Sozialgeschichte der frühen Umayyadenzeit. Freiburg: Klaus Schwarz Verlag, 1977.
- Shiḥāta, al-Sayyid. Al-Qiṣaṣ al-nabawī. Cairo: Dār al-Nahḍa al-ʿArabiyya, n.d.
- Smith, Jane I. and Yvonne Y. Haddad. The Islamic Understanding of Death and Resurrection. Albany, NY: SUNY, 1981.

Smith, W. Robertson. Lectures on the Religion of the Semites. London: Adam and Charles Black, 1894.

- Tottoli, Roberto. "Origin and Use of the Term Isrāʾīliyyāt in Muslim Literature," Arabica xlvi (1999), 193–210.
- Van Ess, Josef. Theologie und Gesellschaft im 2. und 3. Jahrhundert Hidschra: eine Geschichte des religiösen Denkens im frühen Islam. 6 vols. Berlin: De Gruyter, 1991–7.
- Wansbrough, John. Quranic Studies. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1977.
- Watt, William Montgomery. The Formative Period of Islamic Thought. Oxford: Oneworld, 2002.
- Al-Zankūrī, Ḥammādī. "Al-Ḥākī fī qiṣṣat Tamīm al-Dārī: Fanniyyatuhā wa dalālatuhā," Ḥawliyyāt al-Jāmiʿa al-Tunisiyya 35 (1994), 7–60.

Index of Modern Authors

Abbott, Nabia 109, 174 'Athamina, Khalil 7, 58, 163, 216–217

Conrad, Lawrence 56 Crone, Patricia 6, 81, 89

Farīd, Aḥmad 104 Frolov, Dimitri 163

Goldziher, Ignaz 3–4, 6, 11, 49, 80, 83–85, 98–100, 110, 112, 277

Horst, Heribert 83n35, 87

Jūda, Jamāl 5 Juynboll, G.H.A. 113–114

Kister, M.J. 90

Leemhuis, Fred 101

Mez, Adam 170-171

Al-Najm, Wadīʻa Ṭāhā 163

Pauliny, Ján 11 Pedersen, Johannes 58, 133–134

Pellat, Charles 4

Al-Qadi, Waddad 267–268 Qutbuddin, Tahera 132

Swartz, Merlin 3, 122, 170

Van Ess, Josef 17, 22

Wansbrough, John 6, 81, 106

Index of Sources

'Abd al-Razzāq al-Ṣan'ānī 62, 81–82, 86–88, 103, 222–223

Abū Nu'aym al-Isfahānī 2, 64

Abū Ṭālib al-Makkī 2, 63, 119, 140–147, 183, 196, 229

Abū Zur'a al-Dimashqī 155

Al-Azdī, Muḥammad b. 'Abd Allāh 50–59

Al-Damīrī, Muḥammad b. Mūsā 99–100

Al-Fākihī, Muḥammad b. Isḥāq 139, 203

Ibn Abī 'Āṣim, Ahmad b. 'Amr 140–141, 146

Ibn Abī Khaythama, Aḥmad b. Zuhayr 203
Ibn Abī Shayba, 'Abd Allāh b. Muḥammad 62–63, 188, 193–194, 244
Ibn 'Asākir, 'Alī b. al-Ḥasan 127, 246
Ibn Ḥanbal, Aḥmad 109, 139, 152
Ibn Ḥibbān, Muḥammad 98, 109, 127, 154
Ibn al-Jawzī, 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. 'Alī 2–4, 7–8, 10–11, 34, 64, 76, 92, 94, 104, 108, 112, 122–124, 135, 146, 150–152, 162, 185–187, 220–221, 226, 277
Ibn al-Mubārak, 'Abd Allāh 63, 109

Ibn al-Muqaffa' 133 Ibn al-Nadīm, Muḥammad b. Isḥāq 79, 86 Ibn Sa'd, Muḥammad 254, 257 Ibn Shabba, Umar 203 Ibn Taymiyya, Aḥmad 3, 38, 112 Ibn Waḍḍāḥ, Muḥammad 219, 222–223

Al-Jāḥiz, 'Amr b. Baḥr 2, 32, 98, 132, 157–159, 163

Khalīfa b. Khayyāṭ 251, 258

Al-Majlisī, Muḥammad Bāqir 71, 215 Al-Maqrīzī, Aḥmad b. 'Alī 78–79, 216 Al-Mas'ūdī, 'Alī b. al-Ḥusayn 249

Nu'aym b. Ḥammād 27

Saʿīd b. Manṣūr 61 Al-Sanāmī, ʿUmar b. Muḥammad 229 Al-Suyūṭī, ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. Abī Bakr 3, 112, 223

Al-Ṭabarī, Muḥammad b. Jarīr 31, 64, 66, 68, 73, 81–82, 86–88, 95–96, 103, 106–110, 125, 243, 271–272, 281

Yāqūt b. 'Abd Allāh al-Ḥamawī 87, 107

Index of Subjects

	A1 = (A
Aaron 91	Abū 'Amr 173
'Abbāsid quṣṣāṣ 269–274, 281–282	Abū Bakr, Caliph 21, 67–68, 113, 115, 129, 164,
'Abd Allāh b. 'Amr b. al-'Āṣ 122–124, 128	198–199
'Abd Allāh b. Ghālib 138, 147, 149, 155, 173,	As a $q\bar{a}$ $ ilde{s}$ $ i$
230, 292	Abū al-Dardā' 23–24, 29, 57, 77, 83, 92, 115,
In rebellion of Ibn al-Ash'ath 251, 253,	121, 127–128, 132, 147–148, 155–156, 172,
258	191–192, 214, 235–236, 239, 287
'Abd Allāh b. Kathīr 79, 87, 268–269, 275,	Conduct in qaṣaṣ sessions 168–169
304	Abū Dāwūd al-Sijistānī 196–197
'Abd Allāh b. Lahī'a 216	Abū Dharr al-Ghifārī 25, 71–73, 171, 214–215,
ʿAbd Allāh b. Rawāḥa 39–40, 171, 196–197,	217, 236, 288
202, 286	Abū Hanīfa 118
'Abd Allāh b. Salām 278	Mother of 185
'Abd Allāh b. 'Umar b. al-Khattāb 126,	Abū Hurayra 39–40, 44–45, 48, 83, 92, 96,
142–143, 150, 168, 188	99, 115, 121, 123, 164, 170–171, 289–290
Attended sessions of 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr	Abū Idrīs al-Khawlānī 37–38, 78, 117–118, 121,
•
26, 228, 281	130, 150, 152, 156, 160–161, 223, 246, 292
Criticisms of quṣṣāṣ 180–181, 228–229	Conduct in qaṣaṣ sessions 169, 171, 280
Raising hands 182–183	Removed as $q\bar{a}$ ss by 'Abd al-Malik b.
'Abd Allāh b. Yazīd 260–261, 275	Marwān 184, 244
'Abd Allāh b. Zayd, qāṣṣ of Maslama b.	Abū al-Juwayriya al-ʿAbdī 64, 290
'Abd al-Malik 304	Abū Mūsā al-Ash'arī 7
ʿAbd Allāh b. Zayd al-Jarmī, Abū Qilāba 152	Abū Qatāda al-Anṣārī 192
'Abd Allāh b. al-Zubayr 240–241, 268–269,	Abū Ruhm 40, 297
275	Abū Shayba 170–171
ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz b. Abī Sulaymān al-Hudhalī	Curses 'Alī b. Abī Ṭālib 266–267
312-313	Abū Sufyān b. Ḥarb 57–58, 281, 286
'Abd al-'Azīz b. Marwān 247–248, 262	Abū Ṭālib al-Makkī 119
'Abd al-Jabbār al-Khawlānī 209–210	Abū Ṭuʻma Hilāl 78, 138
'Abd al-Malik b. Marwān 130, 243–259, 275	Abū ʿUbayda b. al-Jarrāḥ 50–52, 54, 59, 70,
Instructions to quṣṣāṣ 177, 184, 225	286
'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Abī 'Amra 19, 219, 289	Abū ʿUmar Muḥammad al-Bāhilī al-Baṣrī
ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. Abī Layla 259	160
'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Ḥujayra 78, 130, 247, 262,	Abū Yaḥyā al-Mu'arqab al-A'raj 124, 219, 249,
293	251, 296
ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. al-Qāsim b. Muḥammad b.	'Adī b. Thābit al-Anṣārī 115, 119–120, 249, 251,
Abī Bakr 119, 156, 268, 305–306	302
'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Yazīd al-Ṣan'ānī 309	'Ā'idh Allāh al-Mujāshi'ī 246, 275, 295
'Abd al-Wāḥid b. Zayd 145, 149, 306	'Ā'isha bt. Abī Bakr 44, 76, 137, 162–164, 176,
Abraham 35–36, 82, 95–97, 160	188
Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Sulamī 78, 171, 219,	Criticism of quṣṣāṣ 180
	Alexandria, Egypt 248
250–251, 291
Times of qaṣaṣ sessions 177	'Alī b. Abī Ṭālib 3, 7, 32, 44, 67–68, 121,
Abū al-Aḥwaṣ, 'Awf b. Mālik al-Jushamī 96,	144–45, 147, 163, 174–175, 214–215, 233,
115, 121, 172, 219, 250–251, 291	238

Connection to the beginnings of qasas Bakr b. 'Abd Allāh al-Muzanī 121, 131, 150, 216 159, 175, 300 Criticism of quṣṣāṣ 131, 179, 218-219 Conduct of gasas sessions Cursed by 'Umayvad aussās 265-267 Rejects judgeship 263 Opposition to Mu'āwiya b. Abī Sufyān Banū Isrā'īl (Children of Israel) 90-91, 228 218, 236 See also Isrā'īliyyāt, Qisas al-anbiyā' Supporters among the qussās Bida' 142, 145, 191-192, 221-225, 229-231, 279 Bilāl b. Sa'd al-Ash'arī 20-21, 23, 78, 134, 139, 248-251, 272-273 Qasas during caliphate 216-220 The ideal qāṣṣ 154-155, 157-160, 189 'Alī b. al-Madīnī 230–231 Amalekites 227-228 Bishr b. Marwān 244-245, 249 Al-A'mash, Sulaymān b. Mihrān 119–120, Byzantine qussās 58–59 196, 224 'Amr b. al-Āṣ 55-57, 59-60, 237, 287 Constantinople, Seige of 260 'Amr b. Shu'ayb 209-210 'Amr b. Qays 34 Al-Dahhāk b. Muzāhim 88, 108 'Amr b. 'Utba 222 Al-Dahhāk b. Oavs 241-242 'Amr b. Zurāra 138, 222, 288 Darrāj b. Sim'ān 124, 138-139, 305 Anas b. Mālik 27, 49, 122, 146, 157, 188, David 92, 102-104, 108, 279 195-196, 229 Dāwūd b. Abī Hind 32 'Antara 69-70 Dharr b. 'Abd Allāh 120, 165, 296 Antichrist 29 In Ibn al-Ash'ath's rebellion 251-252, 259 Apocalypse 225-229 Dhū al-Kalā' 211-212, 215 'Āṣim b. 'Umar b. Qatāda b. al-Nu'mān 81 Al-Aswad b. Sarī ° 25–26, 137, 164, 171, 174, Al-Fadl b. 'Īsā al-Ragāshī 16–17, 21–22, 32, 288 45, 127, 160, 163, 308-309 Conduct of gasas sessions 181 Fihl, Battle of 50 First qāss in Basra 14, 172, 181, 199, 204 'Aṭā' b. Abī Rabāḥ 137, 166–168, 203 Gabriel, Angel 99-100, 140 'Aṭā' b. Yasār al-Madanī 79, 123–124, 161–162, Ghuḍayf b. al-Ḥārith al-Kindī 184–185, 225 299 Conduct of qaṣaṣ sessions 182 Hafsa bt. 'Umar 44 Times of gasas sessions 177  $H\bar{a}jj$  158, 175, 181–2 'Attāb b. Warqā' Al-Ḥajjāj b. Yūsuf 129, 149, 164-165, 240, 249, Awā'il literature 113 258, 268 'Awf b. Mālik b. Abī 'Awf al-Ashja'ī 209-213 Attended sessions of Zurāra b. Awfā 174, 'Awn b. 'Abd Allāh b. 'Utba b. Mas'ūd 247 34-35, 86, 121, 151, 161, 251, 300 Opposition to quṣṣāṣ of Ibn al-Ash'ath Female servant of gives qaşaş 186-7 251-253, 256-257, 259 In Ibn al-Ash'ath's rebellion 257–258, Hammād b. Abī Sulaymān 118 Ḥammād b. Salama 117-118 Relationship to 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz Al-Ḥārith b. Muʻāwiya al-Kindī 205 Al-Ḥārith b. Surayj 106, 271-272 263-264 Aws b. Hudhayfa al-Thaqafī 193 Al-Ḥasan b. ʿAlī b. Abī Ṭālib 136 Al-'Awwām b. Hawshab 166 Al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī 79, 82, 86-88, 96, 121, 131, Al-Awzā'ī 241 141-145, 147, 149, 165, 201, 229-230, 251, 'Avn al-Warda, Battle of 64-, 243 258, 301 Al-Azraq b. Qays 143 Criticisms of qussās 181, 183, 185, 224

Al-Hasan al-Baṣrī (cont.) Isrāʾīliyyāt 82, 90–97, 102–111 His qasas sessions affirmed by 'Alī b. Abī See also Banū Isrā'īl, Qisas al-anbiyā' Tālib 175 Mother as qāss 185-186 Al-Jābiya 161, 167, 240 Jahm b. Safwān 105, 269–272, 281, 306 Rejects judgeship 263 Qişaş statements attributed to him John the Baptist 37-38, 160 Al-Julā Abū Kathīr al-Rūmī 303-304 Appointed qāṣṣ by 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz Hassān b. Thābit 164 Hawshab b. Muslim 313 Judges/Judging 113-114, 123-124, 126-131, Al-Haytham b. Jammāz 314 263, 268 Hilāl Abū Ţu'ma 265, 309 Hishām b. 'Abd al-Malik 127, 266-269 Qāss and qādī (orthography) Hudhayfa b. al-Yamān 208 Al-Junayd b. 'Abd al-Raḥmān 266-267 Humayd b. 'Atā' al-A'raj 297-298 Ka'b al-Aḥbār 77-78, 82, 91, 92-96, 116, 138, Ibn 'Abbās, 'Abd Allāh 34, 36, 46, 77-78, 151, 156, 210-211, 287 82-84, 86, 88, 93-94, 96, 99, 123, 126, Qasas during caliphate of Mu'āwiya b. Abī 137, 139, 156, 163, 204, 222 Sufyān 212-216, 235 Criticism of quṣṣāṣ 35-36 Khabbāb b. al-Aratt 227 Khālid b. 'Abd Allāh al-Qasrī 252 Qur'ān commentator 82-84, Ibn Abī al-Sā'ib 76, 162–163, 297 Khālid b. Salama 272 Ibn Abī 'Uyayna 260, 275, 281, 295 Khawārij 125, 149, 248, 250-251, 263, 281 Beliefs 66-69 Ibn al-Ash'ath, 'Abd al-Rahmān b. Originators of qasas 190–191, 220–221, Muḥammad 42, 165, 248, 251-252, 256 Qussās in his rebellion 251–253, 257–258 Muṭarrif b. ʿAbd Allāh avoids him 255 Mutarrif b. 'Abd Allāh avoids them 255 Swooning 188 Ibn 'Awf al-A'rābī 42 Ibn Jurayj, 'Abd al-Malik b. 'Abd al-'Azīz 167 Khayr b. Nu'aym al-Ḥaḍramī 79, 268, 308 Khuṭba/khaṭāba 131-133, 153, 167, 169, Ibn Ma'sūd, 'Abd Allāh 46, 77, 82–83, 88, 96, 171-172, 181, 282 100, 115, 121-122, 127-128, 138, 172, 228, Kurdūs, see also Kurdūs b. 'Abbās 47, 235, 287 Conduct in qaṣaṣ sessions 26, 31–32, 168, 194–195, 219, 248–249, 275, 295–296 170-171, 222-223 Kurdūs b. al-'Abbās, see also Kurdūs 24-25, Time of qaṣaṣ sessions 14, 46–47, 176 93 Tone of voice 157-158 Layth b. Sa'd 216-218, 233, 236, 245, 275 Ibn Nimrān 242 Ibn Shihāb al-Zuhrī, Muḥammad b. Muslim Ma'bad b. Khālid al-'Adwānī 267, 303 126 Māhān al-Hanafī 251, 253, 292 Ibrāhīm b. Hānī 157 Ibrāhīm b. Yazīd al-Taymī 36, 120, 138, Makhūl al-Shāmī 118 147-148, 150, 160, 225, 256, 293 Mālik b. Anas 11 'Imrān b. Ḥusayn 226 On the beginnings of qasas 201–202 'Imrān b. 'Iṣām 165, 173, 292 Marj Rāhiţ, Battle of 241–242 Marthad b. 'Abd Allāh 248, 293 In Ibn al-Ashʻath's rebellion 251, 253-258 Marthad b. Wadāʻa 171, 297 Isaac (Isḥāq) 95 Marwān b. al-Ḥakam 241–243 Ishāq b. 'Abd Allāh b. Abī Talha 19 Maslama b. 'Abd al-Malik 260, 275 Ishāq b. Suwayd 184–185 Ismā'īl 96 Masrūq b. al-Ajda' 31

Maṭar b. Ṭahmān al-Warrāq 79, 122, 225, Author of Qur'anic commentary 82, 88, 97-111 Maymūn b. Mihrān 229 Qāss in Khurasān 269–271 Use of Jewish and Christian stories 97, Mi'rāj 100 Moses 38, 82, 91, 94 100-110 Muʻādh b. Jabal 50, 52–55, 58–59, 77, 115, 121, Mūsā b. Sayyār al-Uswārī 158, 313 Mūsā b. Wardān al-Qurashī 264–265, 302 127, 155, 286 Muslim b. Jundab al-Hudhalī 79, 158-160, Mu'āwiya b. Abī Sufyān 29, 60, 71-73, 77-78, 128, 161, 235-240, 247, 265 172, 299 Attended gasas sessions 239-240 Times of gasas sessions 178 Opposition to 'Alī b. Abī Tālib 216–218, Tutor of 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz 262-263 233, 236, 239 Muslim b. Yasār 124–125 Relationship to Ka'b al-Aḥbār 116, Muțarrif b. 'Abd Allāh 49, 156, 251, 253–255, 212-215, 235 257, 294 Qaṣaṣ began during caliphate 220 Muʻāwiya b. Qurra 144, 224, 230 Al-Nadr b. 'Amr al-Ḥimyarī 267, 309 Al-Mughīra b. Miqsam 186–187 Al-Nahhās b. Qahm 165, 312 Muhammad b. 'Abd Allāh, The Prophet Nașr b. Sayyār 271-272 25, Nawf b. Fadāla al-Bakkālī 94-95, 156, 293 39, 102-105, 108, 122, 190-194, 197, Al-Nazzām 110 213-214, 219, 232 As a qāṣṣ 3, 10, 23–24, 135–136, 285 Nufay' b. al-Hārith, Abū Dāwūd 115, 246, 303 Conduct of qaşaş sessions 168, 170, Payments for qaṣaṣ 130, 248, 262 172-173, 191-192 Hadīth about 112 Poetry 23, 25, 39-40, 49, 134, 164-165, 184 Impeccability 104-105 Time of qasas session 171, 175 Qabīşa b. 'Abd al-Rahmān al-Khath'amī 66 Views of poetry 164 Oadar 16-22 Muḥammad b. 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Khālid Al-Qāsim b. Muḥammad 182 Al-Qāsim b. Mujāshi' 269-270, 311 309 Muhammad b. Abī Bakr 237 Qaşaş al-'āmma/jamā'a and qaşaş al-khāşşa Muhammad b. Ka'b al-Qurazī 82, 85, 93-94, 216-218, 236, 240, 249, 251, 268, 96, 126, 151, 156, 302–303 274-276 Case of Rajā' b. Ḥaywa 244-245, 251 Advisor to 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz 264 Muhammad b. Sirīn 140, 220 Qaşaş al-maghāzī 238 Muḥammad b. Qays 119, 156, 304-305  $Q\bar{a}$ ss and  $q\bar{a}d\bar{\iota}$  (orthography) 124, 127 Relationship to 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz See also Judges/Judging Qatāda b. Di'āma al-Sudūsī 79, 82, 86-88, 262-263, 265, 275 92, 94, 108, 115, 118–119, 126, 159, 195, 225, Muḥammad b. Yaḥyā b. Abī 'Umar 269 Mujāhid b. Jabr 78-79, 82, 84-88, 92-93, 96, 230-231, 254, 302 107, 120, 123, 126, 156, 239–240, 251, Advisor to Sulaymān b. 'Abd al-Malik 256-257, 298-299 259 At Battle of Rhodes 238, 241 Poet 165 At Seige of Constantinople 261 Qişaş statement attributed to him 27, 29 Qays b. Jubayr 188 Mujālid b. Mas'ūd al-Sulamī 181, 183 Al-Mukhtār al-Thaqafī 243 Qiṣaṣ al-anbiyā° 1, 38, 82, 90, 92, 109–111 Muqātil b. Ḥayyān 88, 106n151, 269, 271-272, See also Banū Isrāʾīl, Isrāʾīliyyāt Quss b. Sā'ida al-Iyādī 38, 198-199 307 Muqātil b. Sulaymān 310 Qutham b. al-'Abbās 238

Rabīʿa b. ʿAmr al-Jurashī 17, 121, 242, 290 Rajā' b. Haywa al-Kindī 121–122, 244, 275, 301-302 Advisor to Umayyad caliphs 259, 261, 265-266 Rhodes, Battle of 238, 241 Rifā'a b. Shaddād al-Bajalī 64, 243, 248, 290 Sa'īd b. Abī al-Hasan 298 Saʿīd b. Hassān al-Makhzūmī 268, 275, 313 Sa'id b. Jubayr 79, 82–84, 87–88, 92, 94–97, 107, 115, 120, 126, 147–149, 155, 161–162, 219, 268, 294 In Ibn al-Ash'ath's rebellion 251–257 Times of qaṣaṣ sessions 177 Sa'īd b. Musayyab 207 Saʿīd b. Zayd 286 Saj' 163-164 Salama b. Dīnār, Abū Hāzim 127, 151, 260, 307 Times of qaṣaṣ sessions Sālih b. Musarrih al-Tamīmī 65-68, 71, 73-4,125, 149, 250, 281, 291 Sālim b. Abī Ḥafṣa 272-273, 312 Salmān al-Agharr, Abū 'Abd Allāh 297 Salmān al-Fārisī 7, 148, 278 Savvār b. Dīnār/Wardān 224 Al-Sha'bī, 'Āmir b. Sharāhīl 1, 112, 117–118, 120, 163, 196-197 Shabīb b. Yazīd al-Shaybānī 65, 68-70, 250, 281, 292 Sham'ūn, Abū Rayhāna 41-42, 148-149, 238-239, 297 Shaqiq al-Dabbi 250-251, 296 Shaqiq b. Salama, Abū Wā'il 151 Shu'ba b. al-Ḥajjāj 119, 194-195, 244 Şiffîn, Battle of 60, 215, 248, 250 Sila b. al-Hārith al-Ghifārī 226 Standing v. sitting in qaṣaṣ 170–172 Al-Suddī, Ismāʻīl b. ʻAbd al-Raḥmān Sufyān al-Thawrī 106–107, 225 Şukhayr b. Ḥudhayfa al-Muzanī 64, 243, 290 Sulaym b. Itr al-Tujībī 124, 131–132, 148–149, 171, 226, 247, 291 Conduct of gasas sessions 183 First qāṣṣ in Egypt 113, 137, 173, 237–238 Judge in Egypt 128-130 Sulaymān b. ʿAbd al-Malik 126, 244–5, 259

Sulaymān b. 'Amr 274-275, 311 Sulaymān b. Mihrān al-A'mash 119 Sulaymān b. Surad 64, 243, 281 Sumayr (Samīr?) b. 'Abd al-Rahmān 140, 174, 309 Sūrat al-Ahzāb 102–103 Sūrat Āl Imrān 109, 133 Sūrat al-Anʻām 21, 28-29, 66 Sūrat al-Anbivā' Sūrat al-Anfal 53 Sūrat al-A'raf 33, 38, 133 Sūrat al-Baqara 51–52, 109 Sūrat al-Dukhkhān 31 Sūrat Ghāfir 33 Sūrat al-Ghāshiya 136 Sūrat Hūd 21, 33, 133 Sūrat Ibrāhīm 35–36 Sūrat al-Isrā' 91, 99 Sūrat al-Kahf 29, 33 Sūrat Maryam 35, 99 Sūrat al-Mulk 99 Sūrat al-Nisā' 26, 133 Sūrat al-Nūr 53–54, 109 Sūrat al-Rahmān 23 Sūrat Sād 85, 102–103–4 Sūrat al-Shūrā 109 Sūrat al-Tawba Sūrat Yūsuf 33-35 Sūrat al-Zumar 26, 34-35

Talha b. 'Ubayd Allāh b. Kurayz 137, 168 Tamīm al-Dārī 45-46, 76, 92-93, 103, 139, 141, 147, 150, 155, 157, 160, 218, 289 Conduct of qaṣaṣ sessions 170–172, 179 First qāṣṣ 45, 113, 199–201, 203–204, 221 Qāṣṣ during 'Uthmān's caliphate 201-202, 206-207 Times of qaṣaṣ sessions 170, 176–177 Ţarīf b. Mujālid, Abū Tamīma al-Hujaymī 294 Tawba b. Namir al-Ḥaḍramī 79, 268, 304 Tawwāhūn 64 Thābit b. Aslam al-Bunānī 79, 115, 117–119, 122, 144-145, 147, 150, 186-187, 195, 224-225, 254, 306 "Three types of qussās" hadīth 207–209 Toothstick 224 Tubay' b. 'Āmir al-Ḥimyarī 78, 156, 239, 298 At Battle of Rhodes 238

'Ubayd Allāh b. Ziyād 247 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr 78–79, 96, 137, 139, 143, 150, 160, 162, 168, 172-173, 291 Conduct of gasas sessions 175, 280–281 First qāṣṣ in Mecca 18, 113, 177, 199, 202-203 Instructions from 'Umar b. al-Khattāb 203-204, 218 Oāss for 'Abd Allāh b. al-Zubayr 240-241, 269, 275 Oisas statements attributed to him 18-19, 26, 35-36, 43 Times of qasas sessions 176–177 'Uqba b. 'Amr 219, 289 'Uqba b. Muslim al-Tujībī 127, 303 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz 78, 96, 158, 182, 256-257, 261-266 Counseled by quṣṣāṣ 134–135, 264–265 Instructions to  $quss\bar{a}s$  162, 176–177 Relationship to Muḥammad b. Qays 263 Relationship to Rajā' b. Ḥaywa 259, 264 Tutored by Muslim b. Jundab 262 'Umar b. Dharr b. 'Abd Allāh 158, 165–166, 231, 272-273, 310-311 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb 3, 7, 44, 67–68, 77, 93, 113, 127-129, 136, 139, 141, 155, 164, 170-171, 205-206, 208, 225, 235 Instruction on gasas to Tamīm al-Dārī 45-46, 176-177, 179, 204, 206, 221 Instruction on gasas to 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr Origins of qaşaş during his caliphate 199-202 Warned by the Prophet to avoid Torah Umm al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī 185-186, 294

'Uthmān b. Abī al-'Ātika 116-117, 151,

273-275, 312

'Uthmān b. 'Affān 67–68, 71–73, 171, 218 Instruction on gasas to Tamīm al-Dārī 176-177, 202, 206 Origins of qasas during his caliphate 200-202 Relationship with Kab al-Aḥbār 214, 235 Wahb b. Munabbih 87, 91–94, 107, 216, 301 Al-Walīd b. 'Abd al-Malik 259 Weeping/Crying (al- $bak\bar{a}$ ) 22, 63, 150–151, 161–162, 178, 181, 186–187, 227 Women as quṣṣāṣ 185–187 Yaḥyā b. Abī 'Amr al-Shaybānī 241–242 Yaḥyā b. Saʿīd 230-231 Yaʻqūb b. Mujāhid 309–310 Yarmūk 53, 55, 57, 127, 235 Yazīd b. Abān al-Raqāshī 116, 120, 134, 143, 150, 161, 195, 224, 300 Qişaş statement attributed to him 21-22, 25 Yazīd b. 'Abd al-Malik 266 Yazīd b. Abī Habīb 216 Yazīd b. Aswad al-Jurashī 242 Yazīd b. Shajara al-Rahāwī 60-63, 238-239, 290 Yazīd b. 'Umar b. Hubayra 272 Yūnus b. Khabbāb 273, 313 Zayd b. Ḥāritha 102-104 Zayd b. Thābit 44, 48, 77, 83, 92–93, 115, 121, 127-128, 156, 289

Zayd b. Ḥāritha 102–104
Zayd b. Thābit 44, 48, 77, 83, 92–93, 115, 121, 127–128, 156, 289
Zaynab bt. Jaḥsh 102–104
Ziyād b. ʿAbd Allāḥ al-Numayrī 122, 143, 145–146, 157–159, 229, 300
Ziyād b. ʿUbayd Allāh 272
Zurāra b. Awfā 79, 173–174, 246, 258, 280, 294
Times of qaṣaṣ sessions 178